WAR POLICIES OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, last night at Boston the President of the United States delivered a speech. As usual, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech, and I heard these remarks:

I have been glad to welcome back to our own shores that Boston boy, beloved by all of Boston, my—

And I want to emphasize that word—

my Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, Joe Kennedy.

Actually on the scene where planes were fighting and bombs dropping, for many months he has been telling me just what you and I have visualized from afar—that all the smaller independent nations of Europe—Sweden, Switzerland, Greece, Ireland, and the others—have lived in terror of the destruction of their independence by Nazi military might.

My mind went back to a speech delivered in Boston in 1932 by the same man, who was not then President of the United States, but who was then a candidate for the Presidency. As you know, the recent speech in Boston was on October 30, 1940. The earlier speech in Boston which I recall was on October 31, 1932. Last night's speech was on the eve of the eighth anniversary of the first speech. This is what Mr. Roosevelt then said:

Ambassador Mellon, the representative of the United States at the Court of St. James's, an ambassador who should represent the whole American people there—every faith, the whole Nation, Democrats, Republicans and Independents alike—appeals to an English audience, on English soil, for the support of a party candidate 3,000 miles away, and invokes the same sinister threat and seeks to spread that threat to the rest of the civilized world.

I read somewhere in a history book about a Roman senator who threw himself into a chasm to save his country. These gentlemen who represent us are of a new breed. They are willing to throw their country into a chasm to save themselves.

ROOSEVELT VS. ROOSEVELT

I present for comparison these two speeches, one delivered on the 31st day of October 1932, when he criticized Ambassador Mellon for participating in a campaign, and then the one delivered on October 30, 1940, in which he praised the Ambassador to the same country, only a different entity, for coming over and participating in the campaign of 1940.

Why the difference between the Ambassador to the Court of St. James's in 1932 and the Ambassador to the Court of St. James's in 1940 participating in a campaign? I thought, as the speech was delivered last night, that I would call attention to the two statements of two seemingly different men.

SECRET PLANS TO BUILD SHIPS FOR ENGLAND

I also wish to make a further comment, briefly, because I do not desire to delay the Senate. The President said, and has been saying, that he wonders why the American people have fear. I will tell why the American people entertain fear. They fear the President, because of the secrecy and subterfuge and camouflage in our international affairs.

I picked up the Washington Post of this morning and find this article:

BRITAIN PLANS UNITED STATES SHIPYARDS

The secret—

Get that word "secret." It will be remembered that he said, when the present war started—

Your Government has no information which it will withhold from you.

Do Senators remember that? I do, at least.

This article reads:

A secret British-American deal for construction of a giant ship assembly plant to turn out freighters by mass production soon will be ready for public announcement, it was learned last night.

The British Ministry of Shipping and the United States Government—

Not private parties, but the United States Government—have been discussing plans for the yard. * * *

Who is to finance this, as set forth in the article? Do Senators remember the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan in the last war? Some of us do. Let us see who is going to finance this yard. The article states:

J. P. Morgan & Co., fiscal agents for the British Government during the World War, and the Dawes brothers' Chicago banking firm were understood to be ready to finance construction. Failing that, it was reported that the British Government would stand the expense.

A secret deal with the United States Government to build ships in direct violation of all international law. Is there any wonder the American people entertain fear?

WHY AMERICAN PEOPLE FEAR

Why do the American people fear? They fear because of the actions of the administration in dealing in secrecy and subterfuge. The American people want things out in the open, particularly when they feel that it means the lives of their own boys, of their own people. No wonder the American people fear. They will continue to fear so long as we play such a game through the administrative circles here in Washington.

Mr. President, I will tell you why they have fear. They feared your "quarantine" speech of Chicago when you outlined your desire for America to police the world.

Mr. President, they fear because of the methods by which you defeated an honest vote on the Ludlow war amendment and your great activity against allowing the people to decide whether they would enter a foreign war.

Mr. President, they fear because of the secrecy of many of your missions to England, such as the secret mission of Captain Ingersoll, where we found not through our own country but through English sources that the mission was for naval cooperation and not what was stated by you.

PLANS FOR M DAY

Mr. President, they fear because they know you have set up plans for M day, the day when everything is controlled through and by the Federal Government in Washington. We know that M day is the day we enter war.

Mr. President, they fear your policies called "short of war" because they do not believe they are "short of" but too close to participation in war.

Mr. President, they fear because of the speeches of hatred and bitterness against foreign countries delivered by Secretary Ickes and other members of your own Cabinet.

Mr. President, they fear because they know that you endorsed an editorial in the Washington Post with hearty enthusiasm and in that editorial it was stated that there was a "virtual certainty of American involvement."

Mr. President, they fear because they know that you permitted and encouraged a secret mission of the French Army in this country that would not have been known had not an airplane accident occurred.

Mr. President, they fear because of your secret conferences with Anthony Eden, Sir Campbell Stuart, head of the British Secret Service, and others.

Mr. President, they fear because you helped create that fear with scare stories about submarines being off the Florida coast and in the vicinity of our coasts, and no submarines were found.

Mr. President, they fear because you helped create that fear by telling Congress that we were in danger of being bombed when you knew there were no air bases from which the bombers could begin such raids.

NEUTRALITY LAW

Mr. President, they fear because they remember how you told them you were asking for the amending of the neutrality law for neutrality when you knew and later stated that the purpose of amending it was to aid one belligerent against another.

Mr. President, they fear because they know the subterfuge by which you released war planes to foreign countries under the pretext that the planes were obsolete, and they and you know they were first-line planes.

Mr. President, they fear because they have heard about the secret conversations with Bullitt, Kennedy, and others to build up an "educational campaign for a strong foreign policy."

Mr. President, they fear because they know the subterfuge by which you accomplished the transfer of the destroyers to Great Britain, how you did it on your own volition without taking either Congress or the people into your confidence.

Mr. President, they fear because they remember how you were going to dispose of our fast torpedo boats until it was shown that such would be a violation of all law, domestic or international.

Mr. President, they fear because of your Ambassadors.

Mr. President, they fear because they know you refer to the Ambassador to France, Mr. Bullitt, as your chief adviser on European affairs and how this Mr. Bullitt is known to be an interventionist and a believer in our participation in the struggles of Europe.

Mr. President, they fear because of your belligerent and unnecessary attacks against foreign countries with which we are at peace.

Mr. President, they fear because of your "stab in the back" speech at Charlottesville.

PRESIDENT'S APPOINTEES

Mr. President, they fear because you have appointed men to public office whom they know to be interested in our involvement. They know of the appointment of Mr. Stacy May as chief economist of the National Defense Council only a few days after he had asked for a declaration of war.

Mr. President, they fear because of your appointment of Frank Knox as Secretary of the Navy when Mr. Knox gave an absolute pledge that "all that we have that they need to win that fight will be given."

Mr. President, they fear because of your appointment of Henry Stimson as Secretary of War when they know that for a quarter of a century Mr. Stimson was known for his jingoism and war spirit.

Mr. President, they fear because you tell them that the Government has no information that it will withhold from them; yet, you order strict and absolute censorship on many facts that are not military or naval secrets.

Mr. President, they fear because your Army and Navy under your orders are buying troop transports and they know that means there is an intention to use those transports to carry our soldiers some place across the ocean.

Mr. President, they fear because your biographer has stated that you favor an alliance with England.

Mr. President, they fear because of your foreign policy which has left our country almost without a friend in the world.

Mr. President, they fear because of your failure to impose the embargo in the Japanese-Chinese war even though the law required you to do so. They knew you justified your action on the statement there had been no declaration of war, although everyone knew there was war.

Mr. President, they fear because they have watched with much concern your changing attitude toward Soviet Russia, first friendly, then cold, again friendly.

Mr. President, they fear because they remember the incident of the ship, American Legion, which was sent without reason through the mine-infested area around the British Isles.

Mr. President, they fear because your inner circle of "brain trusters" call themselves in private "the war hawks."

Mr. President, they fear because they know you have discussed at the White House the possibility of a declaration of war.

"OUR FRONTIER ON THE RHINE"

Mr. President, they fear because they have been told by Senators that you have said that "our frontier is on the Rhine."

Mr. President, they fear because your endorsed American White Paper stated that you might favor sending the naval or air forces into the war.

Mr. President, I regret to say they fear even though you have promised them there will be no boys sent across the ocean. They fear because they remember other past campaign promises.

Mr. President, they fear for these and other reasons.

Can you blame them, Mr. President?

SHOULD THE NEUTRALITY LAW BE AMENDED?—ADDRESS BY FREDERIC R. COUDERT

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Chair's personal capacity, he asks permission to have inserted in the body of the RECORD a most admirable address, entitled "Should the Neutrality Law Be Amended?", delivered by Hon. Frederic R. Coudert before the Section of International and Comparative Law of the American Bar Association, in Philadelphia on September 10, 1940.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As so frequently happens, the subject that we are discussing today is one far more of policy than of law. International law is so completely a byproduct of international relations that the two cannot be discussed apart. I am tempted to think that in the long run one's opinions on this and kindred questions are determined by one's views as to national and international policy. These views may differ so widely, ranging from that of complete so-called isolationism or "going it alone for America" to international world federation, that opinions vary in wide diversity.

Let me say at the outset that I am and always have been opposed to our so-called neutrality legislation, which is, in effect, an attempt to legislate American policy in the presence of not only a European but a world-wide conflict. The policy that dictated it was the emotional state of public opinion which dreaded war. Of course, let me say here, no sane man, and least of all a lawyer, can wish for or believe in war other than if it be necessary in defense of his country, his liberty, and his most sacred institutions.

The difference of view between us is predicated upon the question of what is the best method for averting this terrific scourge. At the time the neutrality laws were passed it was believed that not only strict neutrality as heretofore defined by general international agreement but a kind of ultraneutrality in which we should de facto surrender our rights upon the high seas would prove necessary as a still more effectual safeguard against involvement in general war.

The experience of the last 4 years since the enactment of our first neutrality statutes induced by this belief has seemed to me to demonstrate pretty effectively the erroneous nature of any such hope. Norway, Belgium, Holland, and Denmark—other small but independent countries—cherished the same belief. They practiced strictest neutrality. When Belgium was attacked half of its army was on the French frontier, where it had been sent to prove to Adolf Hitler and his friends the very real neutrality of Belgium. In the words of Dr. Johnson, "Let us rid ourselves of cant." A great nation under a government believing that war is its cardinal instrument of public policy will not be deterred by any neutrality policy in other nations from effecting its objective.

The question in the light of all this is whether our policy was wise. Has it worked? Will it keep us out of war; and if so, for how long? We have but to look at the daily newspaper. We are making the most gigantic preparation for war that this Nation or almost any other nation has as yet seen. We are overwhelmingly unneutral in thought. We have not hesitated to give to Hitler's Germany far greater provocation than any other neutral would have dared to give. Have we relied at all upon our own neutrality legislation to keep us out of war? Not in the slightest degree. Why? Because we know that our laws will not protect us and that we must rely wholly upon our own preponderance of force if this hemisphere is to be kept free of the scourge of war. The instinct of the people has been far wiser than the Byzantine reasoning of those publicists who believed that our neutrality legislation could possibly keep us immune from the hideous aggression which with calculated scientific system was turning Europe and now Asia and Africa into a charnel house.

Forgetting national dignity in an ardor for peace, which is in itself praiseworthy, we surrendered the freedom of the seas, upon which we had insisted since the time when America was a little nation with three or four million people. In so doing we surrendered national rights, and in my opinion a good deal of national dignity, for less than a mess of pottage. Not only that, we encouraged the aggressors. The fact that the greatest neutral (United States of America) was the first to capitulate before the threat of war and the philosophy of organized and scientific savagery led to the surrender of neutral rights by all the lesser nations. The action of America thus encouraged aggression and turned the high seas exclusively over as a playground for belligerents. No great nation can hope to survive which surrenders before the military threats and might of nations not afraid to fight.

What is the status of our neutrality legislation at the present time? It stands in ridiculous contrast to what we are actually doing. To exclude our ships from the high seas, to insist upon the payment of cash for belligerent purchases and the other limitations upon our national rights, is a little absurd in view of the fact that we are now taking definite and positive steps to defend one of the principal belligerents—Canada. Not only that. We have obtained cessions of leases for military posts which can only be useful in the event that Great Britain is beaten. We have given in exchange a part of our Navy, and we have promised every aid in our power, qualified by the ambiguous term "short of war."

I am not disapproving of this policy. I approve it as necessary to the safety of America and the only policy in any way calculated to save us from actual war. I am merely calling attention to its utter inconsistency with our actual neutrality legislation. Can we be said in any way to be neutral when we are arranging to cooperate in the defense of one of the belligerents? Whether our attitude can be termed a state or war or not I do not propose here to discuss. This might turn upon certain subtle distinctions as to what constitute acts of war. I do say that it is in flagrant conflict with the whole spirit of our neutrality legislation, which was predicated upon a renunciation of those national rights which might possibly cause resentment in the aggressor nations.

With the encouragement of the Government, billions of dollars, worth of war material are being sent to England and to Canada. That material is being paid for in cash because our neutrality legislation demands it. Can any sane man believe that if the cash gave out and England needed credit in this hour when she alone is stopping an insanely aggressive Germany we should refuse to modify this legislation? Is it possible that we will help all we can with the right hand while we will hinder with the left? The answer may be "Yes," momentarily, but when England can buy no more planes to repel the great air invasion and Canada has insufficient rifles for the fine soldiers that she sends abroad, does anyone really believe that all this will be stopped because the United States, which is spending billions of dollars to defend itself against Britain's chief enemy, will not allow its nationals to extend any credit? Of course not. We have said "A," and he who says "A" says "B."

America believes her vital interest lies in preserving the British Fleet and Empire. Since the time of Canning and Monroe, America, together with the sea power of Great Britain, has maintained the integrity of this continent and its freedom from foreign war. Jefferson understood and pointed out to Monroe that his message could safely be delivered because of the acquiescence of Great Britain in the American policy.

It is so obvious as to seem axiomatic that if Britain is saved we need not fear the intrusion of alien systems in South America. With Britain destroyed, our Navy for the next 5 years would be inferior in strength to the sea power of the aggressors both in the Pacific and in the Atlantic. Our policy and vital interests in both of these oceans might thus be at the mercy of the conquering aggressors. Is it possible to suppose that we will take this risk in order to comply with a policy embedded in our statutes at a time when the public did not foresee the situation that has now arisen?

The experiment of renouncing rights and shutting ourselves up in our own borders, "living like lotus eaters on the hills, careless of mankind," has been one of the great legislative failures in our history. It will, to my mind, rank with the prohibition laws as something placed in the statute books by well-meaning people who did not grasp the great human elements in a situation. These laws must go into the limbo of deserved oblivion. Born of fear of war, they have encouraged war. Strictly observed in their spirit, they would make us defenseless against aggression. In the cause of continued peace and of national security, they should be repealed and forgotten.

Oh, the homes we may bless, the hearts we may heal, the ignorance we may teach, and all the good we may do! Grant to us in this moment of prayer the mind and spirit gleaned from days when high aims have been cherished; days during which we have loved and out of love have been ready to serve and to minister to others. There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it stand adjourned until Thursday next; and that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it stand adjourned until the following Monday, November 11, 1940.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will change his request, I will not object.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. CHURCH. If the gentleman will modify his request and ask that when the House adjourns today it stand adjourned until Thursday next I will not object.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have submitted the usual request. We have each Monday arranged for the adjournment from Thursday to the following Monday.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. It is my understanding that if we adjourn today until Thursday and from Thursday to the following Monday, that on Monday the 11th we shall be ready for business if there is any to come before the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Speaker, of course, can answer that better than I.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMASON). The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to reply to the gentleman from Minnesota, I may say that if the House agrees to adjourn from today until Thursday and from Thursday until next Monday, it is the intention to have a regular session on Monday.

The request submitted by the gentleman from Florida is entirely reasonable. If we do not agree to adjourn from Thursday to Monday a great many Members might think we were going to have a regular session and begin business on Thursday. It would certainly be very inconvenient for many of them to be back here by Thursday morning. If there is an understanding that there will be no business transacted this week they could all conveniently get back here by Monday. We intend to start regular sessions on Monday, and if there is any business to come before the House at that time to take it up.

I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object, under these circumstances. This request is made merely for the accommodation of the Members who are not here, many of them being far away. After election it will possibly be necessary for them to remain at home for a few days. The request for the understanding that no business will be transacted this week but that business will be in order on next Monday is made with the idea of accommodating the Members.

Mr. CHURCH. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand then the former discussion we had to the effect that no business will be transacted until the 18th of November is out of the picture and that it is the intention of the leadership to start regular sessions of the House next Monday, a week from today, to do business and perhaps decide on final adjournment or whatever else may come before the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is correct; and I intend, in the absence of the majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], to make that announcement, and I do make it now: There will be a regular session of the House for the transaction of business on Monday next.

Mr. CHURCH. With that explanation I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn until Thursday next; and that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday, November 11, 1940. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, November 7, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God Almighty, in whom the souls of nations live, who turnest not away Thy face if we but seek to do Thy will: Guard Thy people still and send Thy peace on hearts that pray. Remember not the days of our unfaith, our wavering will, the baser aim, but through our lives, as men who fear not man, let love illume the path that leads the way from darkness unto light. Unite us all by the mighty throb of an eternal purpose to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God.

Let the unseen power of Thy protecting grace be about our President, that with divine insight and wisdom he may fulfill the exacting duties of his high and holy office. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful God, our Heavenly Father, we praise Thee that while hope has its end, faith has her reward. We rejoice that Thou art eternal light, love, and peace; over us soars the eternal skies and beneath us is the Lord's earth. We pray Thee to hold us to the realization that faith is the golden thread running through the pearls of all the virtues that never die, and where intellect and character awaken to the statutes of the Lord. Do Thou make us superior to all things sordid and distrustful, opening up the rich treasures of religion and morality. Reveal the vision of a steady, united people, arresting diversity and collisions of opinion until they are fading memories. O Master who didst trample the billows into peace, set our ways toward the untrodden future, ever deepening our consciousness that the soul life of our democracy is truer than we realize and diviner than we think. Almighty God, we breathe our prayer at the throne of grace for our distinguished President, our notable Speaker, the leaders and the Members of the Congress, and for our citizenry everywhere. Let our faith and our loyalty to them be behind the stars, whispering that life in America is grandly human and our ministry will continue until the last breath of heaven-born aspiration; Oh, conquer all fears, banish all doubts, and immortalize all hopes. Grant that our fondest dreams shall ever be to raise our children in this free, Christian land, traveling on life's common way in cheerful godliness with reverence for the highest and with patience for the lowliest. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou blessed Saviour so high and lowly, so great and tender, so far away and yet so near, Thou wilt never be surpassed. Removed from greed and anxiety, from passion and hollowness, Thou givest to withering age and little children inspiration and gladness. We pray that the light of Thy truth may so shine throughout our land that justice, self-restraint, and unity of purpose shall determine and measure our influence and service. O God, we bow in shadow of our unnamed, uncalendared, and unknown soldier dead. We rejoice today that there is no dead past. Time has passed since his fateful day, yet it has not dimmed the glory of his sacrifice nor lessened our honor and reverence for his memory. We pray that he may live in the throbbing heart of the present, urging us to vaster deeds, stirring in all hearts a finer appreciation and deeper love for the opportunities and the glorious privileges of our fair Republic. His is not the throne of a king nor the shouting of royalty at the banquet table, but we rejoice that his crown symbolizes a high place in authority, in our purposes, and in the counsels of our Government. On this day may all our citizens renew their vows and pay their homage at the altar of the world we love to call our own. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

Members-elect Hon. Z. L. WEATHERFORD and Hon. HERBERT C. BONNER presented themselves at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next and that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it adjourn to meet on the following Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that there is no business which the majority has ready at this time to transact and that, furthermore, the Senate has gone to the funeral of the late distinguished Senator Pittman, of Nevada?

Mr. McCORMACK. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] covers the situation, particularly the unfortunate death of the late Senator Pittman. Committees will attend the funeral and, of course, it will probably be the latter part of the week—perhaps even Sunday—before they can return. On Monday next we will be ready to proceed with any business that may be presented.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is the understanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I read the RECORD of last week, and from a statement made by the majority leader, we understood that we were to come here today for any business that might come before the House. Can the gentleman tell us what we are going to have next Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I am not aware what record the gentleman from Pennsylvania read.

Mr. RICH. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the gentleman read some statement that I purported to make?

Mr. RICH. It was a statement made by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the unfortunate death of Senator Pittman was something which nobody could anticipate and which everyone regrets. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania is profoundly moved by his unfortunate death, the same as all of the Members of the House and the Senate. Of course, that is something that no one could foresee. Any statement made by anyone in the House prior to that naturally would have to be considered in the light of the unfortunate event that occurred.

The distinguished minority leader made an inquiry of me, and I think the observations made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] fairly cover the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we certainly appreciate the fact that we want to adjourn for the death of Senator Pittman, but I wonder whether there is any business that the Congress is going to take up; whether the majority leader or the Speaker of the House has any program?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very sorry, but at the present moment I am unable to advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, but I would like to ask the majority leader and the Speaker if the House would stand in silence for a moment. Today is Armistice Day. Twenty-two years ago the armistice was signed. I wish, out of memory to those men and women who fought a great crusade in order that the world might be safe for democracy, they might know that we are standing doing honor to them today. They lost their ultimate goal for the time being, but out of all the horror and filth that is war their courage, their infinite gentleness, and great heroism have kindled a grimmer determination among millions of people all over the world today to fight for democracy. Mr. Speaker, their sacrifice was not in vain. I earnestly wish that the House might stand in silence for 1 minute, and I make that unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. If the gentlewoman will withhold that until the other unanimous-consent request is disposed of.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

ARMISTICE DAY

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request now.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Members of the House rose and stood in silence for 1 minute.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on three subjects and to include editorials therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein newspaper accounts of Lindsay C. Warren Day observed on October 25, 1940, the speech of Mr. Warren, and several editorials relative to his distinguished public service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an address by the Librarian of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. MITCHELL was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

NATIONAL UNITY

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, probably the bitterest campaign in America's political history has closed. It has been a knock-down and drag-out political fight. The people have spoken. The Nation has selected President Roosevelt to lead us for 4 more years. He faces a mighty task. He needs the support, the hopes, and prayers of all Americans. I feel confident that he will have them because history proves that in the United States when elections are over the minority respects and supports the chosen leadership regardless of how bitter or violent the battle has been.

I am sure that I convey the sentiments of my constituents when I say that we shall support the President whenever he is right and trust that he will have the vigor and courage and generosity in the days to come that he has had in the past. I hope that he will enjoy the blessings of health and strength to serve out his full 4-year term for which he has been chosen.

Nothing is so important now as national unity. This need seems to be recognized by men and women in all walks of life. I am confident that if we maintain that unity and remain strong internally we will not find oursleves involved in any wars.

I want to assure my colleagues here today that regardless of where the path of duty may lead me during the next few years I shall maintain my interest in public affairs and always give my support to those chosen by the people to represent and lead us. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a sermon delivered by Dr. Peter Marshall at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., on September 29, 1940.

THE LATE HONORABLE KEY PITTMAN

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow and with deep regret that I announce to the House the sudden and untimely death of the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Nevada, and for nearly 8 years President pro tempore of the Senate, the Honorable KEY PITTMAN, which occurred in Reno, Nev., at 12:30 o'clock on Sunday morning last.

I realize that it is unusual to announce the death of a Senator and to adopt resolutions of regret until officially advised in a message from the Senate, but that body will not be in session until tomorrow, and today the House will adjourn until Thursday, and for these reasons this unusual procedure is imperative at this time in order that the official committee may be immediately designated so that they can join the citizens of the State of Nevada in attendance at the funeral services of the deceased Senator.

In his passing, the State of Nevada has lost an outstanding citizen and the Nation a faithful public official.

Mr. Speaker, at a more appropriate time the Congress of the United States will pay proper respect to his memory, but for the present, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

House Resolution 628

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. KEY PITTMAN, a Senator of the United States from the State of Nevada, and President pro tempore of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of 10 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following committee on the part of the House: Messrs. SCRUGHAM, BLOOM, LUTHER A. JOHNSON, IZAC, FISH, EATON, MURDOCK of Arizona, MURDOCK of Utah, ROBINSON of Utah, and KEOGH.

ADJOURNMENT

The Clerk will report the remainder of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous orders, adjourned until Thursday, November 14, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Under clause 3 of rule XXII,

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Acting President pro tempore [Mr. KING].

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Lord of our life and God of our salvation, in whom we live and move and have our being, in whose will is our peace: We bless Thy holy name for all men everywhere whom Thou hast chosen to serve this Nation, especially Thy servant Key, the President pro tempore of the Senate, whom Thou hast called to Thine eternal peace. Rest eternal grant unto him, and let light perpetual shine upon him in the fellowship of Thy saints. And upon the members of his family pour the benediction of Thy grace, that in their sorrow they may know the healing comfort of Thine abiding presence, which bringeth the peace which passeth all understanding. THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MINTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, November 8, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR PITTMAN, OF NEVADA

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has an announcement which he would like to make from the floor, and will ask the junior Senator from Indiana to take the chair.

Mr. MINTON thereupon took the chair.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I bring to the Senate this day a message of sorrow. It announces the death of our honored and beloved colleague, Hon. KEY PITTMAN, the senior Senator from the State of Nevada. This announcement would have been made by the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], except for the fact that, with many other Senators and Representatives, he will on the morrow join the citizens of the State of Nevada in paying tribute to one whom they esteemed and loved, and whose passing has caused them profound sorrow.

Before leaving for his home State, Senator PITTMAN appointed me to fill the position of Acting President pro tempore. I have therefore felt it incumbent upon me to announce to the Senate the passing of one of its most distinguished leaders, who has for 8 years served as President pro tempore of the Senate.

Upon another occasion opportunity will be given to the Members of this body to pay tribute to the life and services of this great American, who has for many years faithfully and patriotically served his State and his country, and who has earned the esteem and gratitude of his countrymen. By common consent he has been recognized as one of the foremost of American citizens, and in his passing his country has sustained an irreparable loss.

He was elected Senator in 1912, and has been reelected again and again, and but a few days before he passed away he was again chosen by the people of his State to serve for another term of 6 years. The people of his State and of our country recognized in him a man of honor, of courage, of great ability, of unwavering devotion to those principles which he believed to be right. He not only won the confidence of the people of America, but the high regard of the downtrodden and oppressed in other lands. The American people, as well as those who love liberty beyond our borders, saw in him one who incarnated the spirit of democracy, and one who unsparingly gave of his strength and of his great ability in the service of his country and in the service of humanity.

Senator PITTMAN was in every sense a leader; he understood the science of government and comprehended the political and economic problems of America. He was a member of many important committees of the Senate, and brought to the consideration of the questions presented a profound knowledge of governmental and legislative problems. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations he dealt with matters of vital importance to our Nation and exhibited a profound knowledge of international affairs.

He traveled extensively, met leaders of thought in other lands, and became familiar with international policies and questions which would affect this Republic. He represented our Government in the international conference at London, and upon many occasions participated in conferences of national and international importance which influenced, if they did not determine, the policies adopted by our Government. He has enjoyed the confidence of the President of the United States, and his intellectual honesty, his courage, and his outspoken frankness and devotion to the best interests of our country have won for him the esteem and regard of the leaders of American thought.

The Democratic leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], has stated that:

Senator PITTMAN was an American statesman of the highest type and had rendered outstanding service to his country in the Senate. He had piloted through that body some of the most important legislation in recent years. He will be greatly missed. I feel a deep personal loss, as he was one of my closest political friends.

Senator PITTMAN led a colorful life. He left his native State of Mississippi after receiving high honors in educational institutions and for a number of years engaged in the practice of law in the State of Washington. From there he went to Alaska, at a time when there was much of drama and romance in that remote part of the United States. There he was an outstanding figure and contributed to the development of that important part of our national domain. After spending a number of years there he took up his residence at Tonopah, Nev., and since then has been a resident of that State. He was interested in the West and in the development of its mineral resources, and aided in securing necessary legislation for the reclamation of a vast area of the public domain. Indeed, his penetrating mind, and his ambition for the development and prosperity of his State and of our country, led him into many fields which called for research, study, and statesmanship. Time does not permit me, nor would this be the appropriate occasion, to catalog his achievements.

This announcement would not be complete without reference to Senator PITTMAN'S devoted wife, his inseparable companion, who, in the years of his toil and struggle and achievement, has been in every sense a helpmeet and a spiritual leader. We extend to her profound sympathy and affectionate regard.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

We know when moons shall wane,
When summer birds from far shall cross the sea,
When autumn's hues shall tinge the golden grain—
But Death, oh, who shall teach us when to look for thee?

Is it when spring's first gale
Comes forth to whisper where the violets lie?
Is it when roses in our paths grow pale?
They have one season—all are ours to die!

When the great, loving heart of Senator KEY PITTMAN throbbed for the last time the United States Senate sacrificed to eternity and immortality one of its most illustrious sons. His life enriched the human race. His death makes poorer all mankind. He was an affectionate, devoted husband, a faithful, loved, and loving friend. He was brilliant in intellect, great in sympathy, and grand in soul. He was a patriot who loved principle more than party, a statesman who worshipped at the shrine of truth, a humanitarian who burned incense on the altar of universal good.

As a public official he knew no dictator but his conscience, no guide but his judgment, no purpose but to serve his country and promote the welfare of its people. Where duty led he followed, regardless of consequences, heedless of results, and thoughtless of rewards.

For his lofty patriotism we admired him, for his surpassing statesmanship we honored him, for his faithful service to humanity we loved him. As we admired, honored, and loved him in life, so we revere him in death, mourn his loss, and cherish his memory as a priceless possession. We wrap the spotless records of his outstanding achievements in the silver foil of affection, entwine them with the golden threads of gratitude, and store them in the vaults of our hearts, to be treasured there until we, too, return to dust.

Without a fear, a murmur, or a moan, Senator PITTMAN, "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust," approached his grave—

Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Dream on, beloved and sainted dead, through seedtime and harvest, through sunshine and shadow, through winter's storm and summer's calm, until the Harbinger of the Resurrection shall arouse thee from thy slumber and usher thee, through the gates of glory—

Into the city of temples and turrets of gold
That gleam by a sapphire sea,
Like jewels more splendid than earth may behold
Or are dreamed of by you and by me.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, following the sad announcement by the Senator from Utah of the death of our late colleague, Senator PITTMAN, for the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 326) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Saviour of us all, do Thou hear the whisper of every breast. Reveal unto us that Thy plan is not to lessen our duties but to enlarge our privileges, not to lighten the task but to increase our skill, not to diminish our burdens but to inspire our strength, to give contentment in adversity, and satisfaction in labor. For Thy goodness unto us our human speech has no words. Thou art our Father; enable us to trust when we cannot understand; when a dark cloud banks itself against the sky of hope, enable us to stand and believe that it is a testimony of the divine heart that still beats to the eternal in man. We praise Thee that the zone of Thy fatherhood in its sympathies and provisions is as wide as the races of earth. We rejoice that it is the fatherhood of God and human struggle, the brotherhood of man—eternity. In the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, November 11, 1940, was read and approved.

THE LATE WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD

The Chair laid before the House the following communication, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Memorials:

NOVEMBER 11, 1940.

The Honorable THE SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: There is herewith the letter of the Chief of the Division of Protocol of the Department of State, accompanied by copies of notes which have been sent to the Department of State by members of the Foreign Diplomatic Corps in Washington expressing condolences on the death of the late Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Honorable William B. Bankhead, together with copies of the Department's replies thereto, which accompanied this communication.

By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to my friend from Texas that nobody would think of objecting to the request of the gentleman from Texas, who is just about to conclude his term as a Member of Congress. May I say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] that we are going to miss him a lot. I hope while on the bench your work will be pleasant and happy. We have enjoyed associating with you in Congress, and I think you are one of the finest fellows I ever met. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address I made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I note that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, states that it is going to be necessary to increase the national debt limit by ten to twenty billion dollars. Evidently the Secretary of the Treasury thinks that the United States Congress is going to be as bad in spending money in the next Congress as the past Congress. I want to say that the incoming Congress should give consideration to the expenditure of our country's funds, and I hope they will not permit the bureaucrats in the various offices in Washington to make requests for the great sums of money that have been requested during the past few years. If they do, Congress should cut down their spending. Something must be done in order to curb the expenditures of the various bureaus if we are going to permit national defense to continue. Something has to be done or we will see one of the greatest catastrophes that ever happened to America, and we cannot permit the further ruthless expenditure of funds.

Mr. Speaker, I ask, Where are we going to get the money if you continue to spend, spend, spend? We must tax, tax, tax, and pay our way. The people of America must know that in order to spend we must earn. Money does not grow on trees, nor do we dig it out of the ground. It was said by the Chief Executive, "Taxes are paid by the sweat of every man that labors." So it is. The future of America depends on a sound Government. So we must be sound financially and sound legislation must be our course. No unethical or unsound methods can go on in our form of government if we are to maintain our liberty and freedom.

"God save America" is our prayer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial by Mark Sullivan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the Troy Record of Troy, N. Y., and also one from the Atlanta Journal of October 14.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a portion of an address of the master of the California State Grange.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, our Heavenly Father, whose eternity outlasts all worlds, whose love and tenderness alone survive the clash of centuries: Reveal to us, by sun and candlelight, Thy purpose in each day's most quiet need, that things, both great and small, may find fulfillment in our lives in accordance with Thy mind and heart, for we know that he that doeth the will of the Eternal abideth forever. Do Thou so lead us in these uncertain days that we may never find ourselves driven at the mercy of events. In the sunny hours may we never be unmindful of the approaching shades of night. In the days of our strength may we ever remember that there is no safety save in clinging to the God of our salvation. In the present, which is ours, and in the future, whose secret is alone with Thee, let this be our constant prayer, "Cast me not away from Thy presence and take not Thy Holy Spirit from me." We ask it in our Saviour's name. Amen.

Mr. DANAHER (for Mr. BARBOUR) introduced a bill (S. 4420) for the relief of the First, Second, and Third National Steamship Cos., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (for Mr. BARBOUR) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 327), which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4420) entitled "A bill for the relief of the First, Second, and Third National Steamship Cos.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and take such action as it may take in accordance therewith and report to the Senate; and also report specifically to the Senate (1) whether there were any sales of or valid contracts to sell the subject vessels to said companies, and whether the companies breached any contracts, and thereby damaged the United States Shipping Board to the extent of $384,256.26, or any part thereof; and (2) whether the payment to said companies on October 7, 1935, was a payment of all of the moneys due and owing said companies on account of the claims of said companies existing on December 31, 1925, notwithstanding any statute of limitations, laches, any release, settlement, accord and satisfaction, or prior adjudication; such report to be made by the Court of Claims, or action under this resolution to be taken by the Court, so as to make its action and report during the first session of the Seventy-seventh Congress, if possible.

TRIBUTES TO THE LATE SENATOR LUNDEEN

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain resolutions and statements from official, veteran, and labor organizations praising the late Senator LUNDEEN.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COUNCIL RESOLUTION, CITY OF ST. PAUL

Whereas the recent and sudden death of the Honorable ERNEST LUNDEEN, United States Senator from Minnesota, has occasioned immeasurable grief and incalculable loss to the people of the State of Minnesota and to the people of the United States; and

Whereas the late Senator served with merit and distinction in the Congress of the United States, and public recognition is given to the fact that in the pursuit of his congressional duties the late Hon. ERNEST LUNDEEN ever strove faithfully and unrelentingly to preserve and defend the interests of the people of the Nation and to promote the general public welfare, and thus merited and received the recognition and gratitude of the public: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Council of the City of St. Paul, on behalf of the council and the people of the city of St. Paul, hereby extends an expression of sympathy to the family of the late United States Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN, and expresses and records its true appreciation and that of the people of the city of St. Paul of the distinguished, valiant, and fruitful service rendered by the late Senator in the interest of all the people of the United States in the pursuit of his congressional duties; and be it further

Resolved, That the flag be flown at half staff for a period of 30 days and that a copy of this resolution be delivered to the family of the late Senator.

MINNEAPOLIS, September 6, 1940.

MRS. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Wayzata, Minn.

MY DEAR MRS. LUNDEEN: It is difficult to put my feelings into words—and I realize how futile they are at a time like this—but do want to express my deepest sympathy at the loss of your distinguished husband; it is hard to understand why he should have been taken from us so suddenly.

The Senator and I have been friends for a great many years, and I look back with pleasure on our associations, particularly in the National Guard and when he was on the Minnesota State rifle team. While we differed in our party affiliations and some of our political philosophies, there has never been a time in the almost half a century of our acquaintance that I have ever questioned his sincerity and genuineness of purpose, for which I have felt for him practically a lifetime of admiration.

Kindest personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE E. LEACH.

MINNESOTA STATE LEGISLATIVE BOARD,

Our membership revere the memory of our friend, Senator Ernest Lundeen. His firm stand against war and its concomitant misery caused a universal admiration and respect for his loyalty and ability to speak for his countrymen. His willingness to assist the underprivileged, the aged, and the unemployed was characteristic of his noble life.

Very sincerely,

GOTTFRID LINDSTEN,
Chairman.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE AMERICAS,
Brooklyn, N. Y., September 21, 1940.

Mrs. ERNEST LUNDEEN,
Care of Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR Mrs. LUNDEEN: The Society for the Americas was deeply shocked and grieved to learn of the tragic passing of your husband and our good friend, Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN. Of all the representatives of the people in Washington, none was more sincerely interested in the cause of inter-Americanism than Senator LUNDEEN.

Our president, D. Stockton Stevens, had the privilege and the honor of meeting and conferring with your husband at his office in Washington in April of this year. We have indeed appreciated his great interest and help in furthering the cause for which we are striving.

Mrs. Lundeen, the Society for the Americas, meeting at their September session, paused to pay tribute to a man we admired and respected for his honest and sincere efforts in the Senate. At the request of the organization, and in their behalf, I wish to convey to you and your family the profound and sincere sympathy of the Society for the Americas in the great loss suffered in your recent bereavement.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT—(S. DOC. NO. 311)

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, many inquiries have been made and much has been written in the newspapers regarding the electoral college. As we all know, the election was held on November 5 this year, and the electoral college will meet in their respective States on December 16. The votes cast by the college will be canvassed by the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in a joint session on January 6, 1941, and the inauguration of the President and Vice-President-elect will take place on January 20, 1941.

For the convenience of the Senators and others I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a compilation of the laws and provision of the Constitution governing the election of the President and Vice President, prepared by the Secretary of the Senate, Col. Edwin A. Halsey. Also, I ask that the compilation may be printed as a Senate document.

Accompanying this compilation, I present the electoral vote as cast by the States in the last election, which I ask to have printed as a part of the document and also in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the compilation and electoral vote were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AND LAWS GOVERNING ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

ARTICLE II

SECTION 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice-President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

AMENDMENT XII

The electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the persons voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority; then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice.[1] [And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.]—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

AMENDMENT XX

SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

SEC. 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President-elect shall have died, the Vice-President-elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President-elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice-President-elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President-elect nor a Vice-President-elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

SEC. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

LAWS ENACTED REGARDING ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

Meeting of electors of President and Vice President, issuance and transmission of certificates of their selection, and result of their determination

The electors of President and Vice President of each State shall meet and give their votes on the first Monday after the second Wednesday in December[3] next following their appointment at such place in each State as the legislature of such State shall direct.

It shall be the duty of the executives of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate by registered mail under the seal of the State to the Secretary of State of the United States a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are herein required to meet, six duplicates original of the same certificate under the seal of the State; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State in the manner provided for by law of a controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate under the seal of the State to the Secretary of State of the United States a certificate of such determination in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the certificate or certificates so received by the Secretary of State shall be preserved by him for 1 year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection; and the Secretary of State of the United States at the first meeting of Congress thereafter shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received at the State Department.

The electors shall vote for President and Vice President, respectively, in the manner directed by the Constitution.

The electors shall make and sign six certificates of all the votes given by them, each of which certificates shall contain two distinct lists, one of the votes for President and the other of the votes for Vice President, and shall annex to each of the certificates one of the lists of the electors which shall have been furnished to them by direction of the executive of the State.

The electors shall seal up the certificates so made by them and certify upon each that the lists of all the votes of such State given for President, and of all the votes given for Vice President, are contained therein.

The electors shall dispose of the certificates so made by them and the lists attached thereto in the following manner:

1. They shall forthwith forward by registered mail one of the same to the President of the Senate at the seat of government.

2. Two of the same shall be delivered to the secretary of state of the State, one of which shall be held subject to the order of the President of the Senate, the other to be preserved by him for 1 year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

3. On the day thereafter they shall forward by registered mail two of such certificates and lists to the Secretary of State at the seat of government, one of which shall be held subject to the order of the President of the Senate. The other shall be preserved by the Secretary of State for 1 year and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

4. They shall forthwith cause the other of the certificates and lists to be delivered to the judge of the district in which the electors shall have assembled.

When no certificate of vote and list mentioned from any State shall have been received by the President of the Senate or by the Secretary of State by the fourth Wednesday in December after the meeting of the electors shall have been held, the President of the Senate or, if he be absent from the seat of government, the Secretary of State shall request, by the most expeditious method available, the secretary of state of the State to send up the certificate and list lodged with him by the electors of such State; and it shall be his duty upon receipt of such request immediately to transmit same by registered mail to the President of the Senate at the seat of government.

When no certificates of votes from any State shall have been received at the seat of government on the fourth Wednesday in December, after the meeting of the electors shall have been held, the President of the Senate or, if he be absent from the seat of government, the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in which custody one certificate of votes from that State has been lodged and such judge shall forthwith transmit that list by the hand of such messenger to the seat of government. (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 3, secs. 5a, 7a, 8, 9a, 10, 11a, 11b, and 11c.)

Counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice President

Congress shall be in session on the sixth day of January succeeding every meeting of the electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules herein provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses. Upon such reading of any such certificate or paper, the President of the Senate shall call for objections, if any. Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received. When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to from which but one return has been received shall be rejected, but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned herein to have been appointed, if the determination provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed, to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned, is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its laws; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which the two Houses shall concurrently decide were cast by lawful electors appointed in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. But if the two Houses shall disagree in respect of the counting of such votes, then, and in that case, the votes of the electors whose appointment shall have been certified by the executive of the State, under the seal thereof, shall be counted. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the questions submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

While the two Houses shall be in meeting, as provided, the President of the Senate shall have power to preserve order; and no debate shall be allowed and no question shall be put by the presiding officer except to either House on a motion to withdraw.

When the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or other question arising in the matter, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question 5 minutes, and not more than once; but after such debate shall have lasted 2 hours it shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House to put the main question without further debate.

At such joint meeting of the two Houses seats shall be provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately upon his left; the Senators, in the body of the Hall upon the right of the presiding officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the Hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform. Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes; or otherwise as herein provided, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next calendar day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon. But if the counting of the electoral votes and the declaration of the result shall not have been completed before the fifth calendar day next after such first meeting of the two Houses, no further or other recess shall be taken by either House. [United States Code, 1934 edition, title 3, secs. 17, 18, 19, and 20.]

Act providing for successors to President and Vice President

SEC. 2. That the preceding section shall only be held to describe and apply to such officers as shall have been appointed by the advice and consent of the Senate to the offices therein named, and such as are eligible to the office of President under the Constitution, and not under impeachment by the House of Representatives of the United States at the time the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon them respectively. The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

PUBLIC HEALTH NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I report a number of nominations of Public Health officers and ask for their consideration. They are routine matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified forthwith of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WAR BETWEEN ITALY AND GREECE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have left the chair and have taken my place upon the floor for the purpose of submitting a few observations concerning the wanton, unprovoked, and cowardly attack upon Greece by Mussolini and his military forces. Evidences are accumulating that four great powers are executing a conspiracy aimed at the destruction of all democratic nations and a division of the world among the conspirators. Italy, under this plan, is to control the Mediterranean and North Africa and to have her seizure of Albania confirmed and her attack upon Greece approved.

Mussolini assembled a large military force and launched a vigorous attack upon Greece. Undoubtedly he has the support of Hitler, and expected an easy conquest; but the Greeks of today, like the Greeks of earlier days, love freedom and liberty, and though attacked by powerful foes they are courageously and heroically defending their territory against the foul and barbarous assaults of Mussolini.

I cannot help but believe that this attack upon Greece was not understood by the mass of the Italian people. They have not been the enemies of Greece; indeed, there have been friendly relations between the people of Italy and the people of Greece. During the World War Italy was attacked by the powerful military machine of the Kaiser. The Italian people repelled these assaults made upon it and welcomed the cooperation of the Greeks when they entered the conflict upon the side of the Allies. There were ties of friendship forged in that memorable conflict and there was every reason to believe, as well as to hope, that those ties would not be broken; but now Mussolini, with his military cabal, has attempted to invade Greece and has declared that his legions would speedily conquer a brave and heroic people who for centuries have defended democratic principles and have raised high the standard of culture and of civilization.

The news which comes to us of the invasion demonstrates the courage and the valor of the Greek forces. The bleak and icy hills along the Albanian and Greek border give evidence of the courage and the valor of the Greeks. They repelled the invaders whose ranks were scattered and broken, and thousands of Italian assailants met death face to face in the mountain fastnesses.

I am reminded of the words spoken by Lord Byron at Missolonghi on January 22, 1824. He, as we all know, gave support to the Greeks in the conflict in which they were then engaged in the defense of their country. We remember his words:

> The sword, the banner, and the field,
> Glory and Greece, around me see!
> The Spartan, borne upon his shield,
> Was not more free.
> Awake! Not Greece—she is awake!
> Awake, my spirit! Think through whom
> Thy lifeblood tracks its parent lake,
> And then strike home!
> Seek out—less often sought than found—
> A soldier's grave, for thee the best;
> Then look around and choose thy ground,
> And take thy rest.

This and more have come to the minds of us all during the past weeks, as the result of the unparalleled and unceasing heroism of the descendants of those of whom Byron spoke in 1824, in their brilliant defense against Mussolini's forces of aggression.

It is an inspiration to us all to know that the descendants of the fighters of Marathon have taken an irrevocable and unwavering stand, with no fear or thought of risks and dangers. The foe was at their border, invading their homes and altars; that was enough. He had to be resisted, and he is being resisted most bravely.

There is a historical parallel to that invasion. Signor Mussolini has made the same mistake that the King-Emperor of Persia made nearly two and one-half thousand years ago. The Persian King felt that the Greeks would be put to flight at the very sight of his legions; but Marathon is an eternal monument to his folly. So it is with Mussolini. He felt that the Greeks in the Pindus Mountains would fall back and raise the white flag, or that some forces within the nation would bring about an appeasement. He, too, has received a bitter lesson. There has been no appeasement in Greece. There has been no withdrawal. The voices of the counselors of defeatism have been silenced and drowned by the epic battle of the Greek soldiers in the mountain passes.

The parallel may be carried further: The triumph of the Greek armies during the Persian Wars resulted in a democracy and the development of the civilization in which we live. The struggle now going on in the mountains of Epirus may be the long-awaited favorable omen, and the dawn of the day of democracy's triumph everywhere.

As I have indicated, the invasion of Greece is but a part of the conspiracy of those who seek the destruction of democratic nations, and there are many who believe that the outcome of this almost world-wide conflagration will determine whether democracy shall continue to be a living force or whether it shall be replaced by tyranny. Democracy as never before is engaged in a life-and-death struggle, the extent of which is globe-wide. It is not only that blood is being shed on the battlefields of Greece, England, and China for the preservation of democratic ideals; sacrifices are being made everywhere, even within Germany and Italy, as well as among the people of the conquered nations.

At this crucial time, however, the Greek nation with its valiant defenders in Epirus is enhancing the morale of the forces of democracy everywhere. Each day records successful efforts to repel the assaults of the invaders and furnishes conclusive evidence of the heroic qualities and patriotic efforts of those who are defending Greece. The press carries reports of the disordered retreat of the invaders, of the demoralization of their ranks, and of the capture of large numbers of Italian combat forces, and of the large number of lifeless bodies which cover hills and valleys and mountain fastnesses.

James Aldridge, an American reporter of standing and ability, in his dispatch appearing in the New York Times, of the 14th instant, writes from the battlefield and recounts the annihilation of one of the Italian divisions. Many of the hundreds captured and killed were Italian peasants, led to a tragic end by one greedy for power and indifferent to the rights of human beings. Mr. Aldridge's dispatch is as follows:

The story of the trapped division is probably already famous in the outside world. It is known how the Greeks allowed the Alpini division to enter the pass, how a relief column was also permitted to come in, how both ends of the pass were blocked by heavy weapons, and how the Greeks from vantage points on the mountainside poured hell into the Italians strung along beneath them on the valley road.

The slaughter was terrific. Now the battlefield resembles Guadalajara. It begins on a rise, with a solitary Italian soldier stretched out in the mud. He lay right on top of the rise, with his chest and head smashed by machine-gun bullets. His tin hat had leaped off his head when he fell and lay brim down in a muddy hole yards ahead. Nobody bothered to move him for quite a while.

The Italian dead in the woods were practically always in groups and they were spread out or heaped on dry leaves in awkward shapes. Twice there were bayonet attacks by the Greeks in the earliest battle for the pass, one at the rear and one from a rocky crag that hangs over a slope in a great sweep to the road.

Most of the Italians did not even have bayonets fixed to their rifles, so they could not do much anyway, but there are unsheathed bayonets lying around everywhere.

Occasionally off to the northwest one can still hear the bark of mountain artillery. Here and there are small groups of ruddy-faced, unshaven Greek soldiers cleaning up the mess or marching with fixed bayonets. Some of these have got grenades now, which they did not have before. The captured Italian equipment is already being used by the Greeks.

They have all died with their faces in the mud, their gloved hands stretched out before them in the red, wet earth, and with smashed equipment around them. Small defensive positions made out of rock were blown sky high by shells. Great coils of field telephone wire in confusion are tied up with the sprawling figures.

One dead Roman had his arms locked around a tree as he died. Some young boys lay with their trousers still creased and their tin hats smashed in. Dead horses were under the trees. There was much paper scattered around from the soldiers' pockets and pictures of their mothers, wives, and babies were now a dirty, yellow mess in the red mud of the road.

But Greece is a small nation of 7,000,000 or so. It lacks the industrial base and material resources to effectively carry out a long and bitter campaign against Mussolini. Mussolini today—and most certainly against Hitler on the morrow—because Hitler, it may be truthfully said, is the guiding spirit in the attacks which are being made upon European nations. It was he who destroyed Austria, and Poland, and Norway, and Holland, and Belgium, and France, and who, uniting with Stalin, seeks the conquest of all democratic nations. Heroic England protects the torch of civilization from those who would extinguish it in the English Channel and the British Isles, and her assistance to the heroic Greek nation must necessarily have limitations; but it may be said that Great Britain and Greece today are courageously fighting for humanity and for civilization.

In this hour of world crisis, when the fate of democracy and those things which we hold dear are at stake, what will be the attitude of this, the world's greatest nation in industrial and moral strength and power? Greece and Great Britain are struggling against mighty foes to defend the cause of justice and freedom and liberty not only in their own lands but throughout the world. What, in this tragic hour, is the duty or the obligation of America? Certainly not to remain silent until democratic nations are destroyed and the forces of evil are directed against our shores. Are we to remain mute when words of encouragement mean much in fortifying the spirit of the defenders of freedom and democracy? Our contributions will not be merely words but material aid. Do we realize that the bitter struggle in the mountain of Epirus and the English Channel is essentially the same fight that this Republic may be called upon to continue if the gallant and heroic defenders perish?

Senators will recall the attitude of President Monroe, Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, and other great American statesmen, when Greece was fighting for independence more than a hundred years ago. Then the bravery and the heroism of the Greeks aroused the enthusiasm of the American people, who urged not only moral support but material aid in order that the Greeks might achieve independence. President Monroe, in his message to Congress on December 2, 1823, said:

A strong hope has been long entertained, founded on the heroic struggle of the Greeks, that they would succeed in their contest and resume their equal station among the nations of the earth. It is believed that the whole civilized world take a deep interest in their welfare. Although no power has declared in their favor, yet none, according to our information, has taken part against them. Their cause and their name have protected them from dangers which might ere this have overwhelmed any other people. The ordinary calculations of interest and of acquisition with a view to aggrandizement, which mingles so much in the transactions of nations, seem to have had no effect in regard to them. From the facts which have come to our knowledge, there is good cause to believe that their enemy has lost forever all dominion over them; that Greece will become again an independent nation. That she may obtain that rank is the object of our most ardent wishes.

Greece has for years enjoyed independence and has exhibited those great qualities of mind that gave preeminence to Greece for centuries before and after the Christian era. Greece seeks no conquest; she desires peace and to occupy an honored position in the council of nations. She is guilty of no offense; and yet, as I have indicated, a greedy and ruthless dictator seeks her destruction and the enslavement of her people. Only yesterday we read in the morning press that Molotov, representing Stalin, conferred with Hitler; and doubtless representatives of other members of the Axis were in the offing. They there, as I have heretofore indicated, sought to perfect their plans for the division of the world. India is to be allocated to Stalin; Mussolini is to have a free hand in the Mediterranean; and Hitler is to be the overlord of Europe. Japan, now a silent partner, is to extend her authority over the greater part of Asia.

Mr. President, dark clouds overhang the world, and if the democratic nations should be destroyed, the Western Hemisphere would be the object against which the Axis Powers would direct their efforts.

I heartily approve of the statements made by the President in his Columbus Day address at Dayton, Ohio, on October 12. Among other things he said:

We are building a total defense on land and sea and in the air sufficient to repel attack from any part of the world. Forewarned by the deliberate attacks of the dictators upon free peoples, the United States for the first time in its history has undertaken the mustering of its men in peacetime.

He further stated:

No combination of dictator countries of Europe and Asia will halt us in the path we see ahead for ourselves and for democracy. No combination of dictator countries of Europe and Asia will stop the help we are giving to almost the last free people fighting to hold them at bay.

He further stated:

We will continue to help those who resist aggression and who now hold the aggressors far from our shores.

The President further added:

It can no longer be disputed that forces of evil which are bent on conquest of the world will destroy whomever and whenever they can destroy. We have learned the lessons of recent years. We know now that if we seek to appease them by withholding aid from those who stand in their way we only hasten the day of their attack upon us.

Great Britain and Greece are being assailed by the Axis Powers. They stand in the way of the mad ambitions of such powers, who desire to crush every free people and destroy the democratic forces throughout the world.

I sincerely hope that the Members of this legislative body will lift their voices, as did Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, in the defense of liberty, and that they will properly appraise the responsibilities resting upon them and upon our country, and support measures that will afford assistance to those peoples and countries who are now fighting for liberty and for civilization.

It is our hope that the Greek spirit will continue undaunted before the Fascist legions, adding pages of glory to its noble history. We know that it will; but if insurmountable obstacles and forces overwhelm and crush them, then in our sorrow we will recall Tennyson's tribute to them in his immortal Ulysses:

> We are not now that strength which in old days
> Moved earth and heaven; that which we are, we are;
> One equal temper of heroic hearts,
> Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will
> To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 18, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou fountain of divine blessing, whose infinite mind dwells behind the shadows, and whose heart of love pulses beyond the stars: We acknowledge Thy presence in all the universe, and, with the faith that will not be quenched, we trust the infinite beneficence of Thy purpose, seeking only to order our lives in perfect harmony with Thine. Draw near to us, dear Lord, that, in the spirit of kindness and readiness to serve, we may manifest in the doing of our tasks this day a human sympathy for all suffering humanity and an active zeal for whatever may promote a wider happiness in our own beloved country and among the nations of the world.

Quicken our devotion to the highest, holiest principles of that perfect manhood revealed in our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, in whose name and only for whose sake we dare to pray. Amen.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 328) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Acting President pro tempore of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funeral of Hon. Key Pittman, late a Senator from the State of Nevada, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the rule requiring reference of the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will be waived, and the resolution will be adopted.

ELECTION POLLS, ETC.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 329), which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That a special committee of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to polls, straw ballots, and published reports which (1) have purported to indicate how persons would vote or expected to vote or were likely to vote in primary elections or other elections in which Presidential electors or Members of the Senate or Members of the House of Representatives were to be elected or in which candidates for any of such offices were to be nominated, or (2) have purported to measure or indicate the state of public opinion about matters of national importance. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations for any necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. AUSTIN. At the request of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who is necessarily absent on public business, I ask for the adoption of the order which I send to the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] be excused from further service upon the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and that the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] be assigned to service upon said committee.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is agreed to.

MR. WILLKIE'S LOYAL OPPOSITION ADDRESS

[Mr. AUSTIN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by Hon. Wendell L. Willkie on Monday evening, November 11, 1940, on the subject of a loyal opposition, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky as to the disposition which should be made of nominations which are pending. There are a number of nominations pending before committees, and I should like to know what the Senator has in mind. Some of them, I think, ought to be acted upon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are they on the calendar?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there are no nominations now on the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. There are none on the calendar. Several committees, however, have nominations before them but are not taking any action because of the situation which prevails.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think committees which have nominations before them may act on their own discretion as to whether they will report them now. If they shall report them, we will try to take action on them; otherwise I do not think we should attempt to put any pressure on the committees to make reports.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, there are several nominations before the Appropriations Committee. We have not had time since I returned to act on them, and I should like to have the consent of the Senate to bring the nominations up a little later—tomorrow or a subsequent day—if the Senate should adjourn over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Have they been reported?

Mr. McKELLAR. They have not been reported, but are ready to be reported.

Mr. BARKLEY. We can take action on any nominations that have been reported.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs has agreed to report several nominations. They are not ready at the moment, but will be in a few minutes. I ask permission to report them when they arrive.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, can the Senator from Kentucky give us any information as to when the resolution for final adjournment will be acted upon?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from California that it is understood that the House will act on such a resolution tomorrow. That, of course, assumes that a quorum of the House will be present, and I am assuming that there is or will be a quorum here tomorrow. It is understood that the House will take action tomorrow on the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then will the Senate, as soon as convenient, take up the resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the expectation; yes. I think if the House adopts the resolution it ought to be submitted to the Senate, and will be, as early as convenient.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. There will be no vote in the Senate tomorrow on final adjournment, will there?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know as to that; I cannot say. If the House should send the resolution over tomorrow at an early hour in the afternoon, we probably would vote on it tomorrow. Otherwise, it would have to go over until Wednesday.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the vote comes in the Senate, then, will depend altogether on the action of the House?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the way the matter looks at the present time; yes. Of course, there is no requirement that the House pass first on a resolution providing for final adjournment; but that has been the plan, and I suppose it will be carried out.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator tell us what form the resolution will take? Will it be a resolution for immediate adjournment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot say at just what hour; but ordinarily the resolution provides that when the two Houses conclude their business on the day on which they act, or on some other day, they shall stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. SMITH. If the motion comes over from the House, it is a privileged motion, is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a privileged motion and is not debatable.

Mr. SMITH. And we will vote on it if we can get it up?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Wayne C. Taylor, of Illinois, to be Under Secretary of Commerce.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of JOHN J. DEMPSEY, of New Mexico, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission for the term of 6 years from September 26, 1940, vice Henry A. Wiley.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations or sundry officers for appointment or promotion in the Coast Guard.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Col. Perry M. Smoot, National Guard of the United States, to be Director of Selective Service for the Territory of Hawaii, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the following nominations of persons and officers to be State directors of selective service:

For Alabama: Brig. Gen. Benjamin M. Smith;
For Illinois: Paul G. Armstrong;
For Mississippi: Brig. Gen. Thomas J. Grayson;
For Nebraska: Brig. Gen. Guy W. Henninger;
For North Carolina: Brig. Gen. John Van B. Metts;
For South Dakota: Col. Edward A. Beckwith;
For Tennessee: Brig. Gen. Thomas A. Frazier;
For Texas: Brig. Gen. J. Watt Page, adjutant general of the State of Texas; and For Wisconsin: Walter J. Wilde.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is no further business for today, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, November 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, with the spirit of gratitude in our hearts, we pray that with courageous endeavor we may be worthy of life's "well done"; herein is reality, simplicity, and the life splendid. Grant that we may have some token of Thy presence, being a covert for any who may be depressed, pursued, or who may be gazing to the past and refusing to behold the future with a mighty hope; help us all, dear Lord, to sing Thy praise, flaming again the lamps of a compelling faith that the cast-down shall not be forsaken, the wounded shall be healed, and those who are slain shall be brought gloriously to life. Let us harken unto Thy word: "Let no man glory in men, for all things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollas, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's. Almighty One, we humbly beseech Thee to perform a mighty miracle and command the sun of time to stand still until the armies of the Lord shall have driven afar the last Philistine and raise up the common brotherhood of man made powerful by the spirit of the Master. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, November 14, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message from the President of the United States informed the House that he had, on October 29, 1940, approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10285. An act for the relief of Charles S. Ladinsky and Moe Kanner.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE INTERSTATE MIGRATION OF DESTITUTE CITIZENS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts, I submit a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 629

Resolved, That further expenses of conducting the investigation and study authorized by House Resolution 63 of the present Congress, incurred by the Select Committee to Investigate the Interstate Migration of Destitute Citizens, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed an additional $5,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee thereof conducting such investigation and study or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us how much was originally appropriated for this committee?

Mr. COCHRAN. Twenty thousand dollars was originally appropriated for the committee. It has a balance of about $400. The committee has 10 days of hearings set for Washington during the month of December, and without this money it cannot function. The chairman of the committee appeared before the Committee on Accounts and gave a complete and satisfactory statement. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us the reasons for the overdraft?

Mr. COCHRAN. The committee originally asked for $25,000. The Committee on Accounts reduced that to $20,000. The committee thought they could complete their work with that. They have had so many witnesses that it has been necessary, they claim, to spend a little more money than they expected to spend. I might add the committee only had about 6 months to do its work.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ATTENDING PHYSICIAN'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 630

Resolved, That an additional assistant in the attending physician's office of the House of Representatives shall be paid the sum of $30 per month from the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for by law.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

UNDER SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4370) authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Connecticut tell us whether this legislation is an official request from the administration?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. It is an official request from the War Department, with the approval of the President. The bill has passed the Senate. It would allow the appointment during any period of national emergency, including the present period of limited emergency, of an Under Secretary of War, and the delegation, in whole or in part, to the Under Secretary of duties which are at present the duties of the Assistant Secretary. The Department has requested this legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not quite understand the reference to emergency. What is meant by that?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The language of the Senate bill is as follows:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to appoint from civil life, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Under Secretary in the Department of War to serve during any national emergency declared by the President to exist, including the present limited emergency.

This is not a permanent peacetime post, but because of the tremendous procurement program which is under way it is desired by the Department that an Under Secretary be appointed so that some of the procurement responsibilities now by law confined to the Assistant Secretary may be placed in the Under Secretary within the War Department. This would not increase the powers of the Department but would allow the Secretary to have the responsibility for placing those powers so as to improve the administration.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the bill say that Congress in any way is giving its approval to any declaration of an emergency?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I do not see where it does give any approval with respect to any emergency beyond what we have already legislated upon. There is no change in that respect.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not quite so sure about that. As it is now a national emergency has been declared by the President but has not been promulgated by the Congress at any time. I understand this proviso would be putting the stamp of approval of Congress upon the declared emergency.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I do not believe it would be approving a declaration of emergency. It would simply recognize that such a declaration has been made.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will yield, I want to call particular attention to the last sentence in the bill, which is a recognition by Congress of a limited emergency, something which we have not done directly as yet.

Mr. MICHENER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill has the same language in it to which I called the attention of the House day after day and time after time before we recessed, and there has been a constant effort in every bill that came up here with respect to national defense to recognize in some way this so-called limited emergency which was declared by the President in September 1939 without any authority. Is not that true?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I do not believe there is any recognition in this bill beyond what we have already done.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not particularly care for that language anyway, does he?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The language is in the Senate bill, and if we left the language out it would make the appointment good at any time. This is an effort to restrict it to a time such as the present one. This language does not increase the powers but is a limitation upon the powers. The power would be more general if that language was stricken out.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There seems to be considerable objection on this side to the language as it stands in the bill at the present time. I appreciate you may need an Under Secretary of War, and I do not wish to put any obstacles in the way of the War Department functioning properly and efficiently. I would suggest the gentleman withdraw his request for the present so that we may see if we cannot reach an agreement.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman that I made an effort all during the past week to see some of the Members of the minority side on the House Military Affairs Committee, and I wired to several of them, including the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], and I have a wire here from him.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is all very well, but it happens you are asking for unanimous consent, and there are a good many Members over here who are a little skeptical about the proviso I mentioned. The bill has never been before the committee, and it seems to me it would be best to withdraw it for the moment.

Mr. MAY. The matter is very urgent and it is possible we may adjourn tomorrow, and if we do——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You have not yet appointed the Assistant Secretaries we authorized a year ago. These matters are always more urgent here than they are in the Department.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman understands that the Air Corps is not so elaborate or extensive an activity as the entire War Department.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; but it is quite important for our national defense.

Mr. MAY. I understand it is very important, and the purpose of this request is to meet a temporary emergency, and this is not to be a permanent appointment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I suggest that the gentleman might just as well withdraw the request, because there is going to be objection as the bill now reads, and I think perhaps we can iron out the matter.

Mr. EDMISTON. Would the gentleman from Massachusetts object if the language referred to by him were stricken from the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I understand the position of the minority leader, his objection is not so much to the appointment of an Under Secretary of War, provided it was a straightout appointment?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I think if the Secretary of War and the administration say they need one, they ought to have it.

Mr. McCORMACK. My inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts was to ascertain whether or not the objection on his side was more to the language used than to a bill authorizing directly the appointment of an Under Secretary of War.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I cannot speak for anybody but myself, but I do not want this bill to go through by unanimous consent without the Congress understanding that they are in effect creating for all time an Under Secretary of War. We have never had an Under Secretary in the War Department. We never had an Under Secretary in any of the departments until the Wilson administration, when it was contended that we should have an Under Secretary in the State Department because they had such a title overseas. We could best deal with foreign governments by having an officer of like rank, who was an Under Secretary.

Mr. EDMISTON. We have an Under Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MICHENER. Wait a minute. If we create an Under Secretary here, we create an officer who is next only to the Secretary. He outranks all Assistant Secretaries in the Department. That is something we want to think about. We are setting up a new office, with a salary. We are doing something here that is of vital importance and which should not be done by unanimous consent. I do not want to be in the position of objecting because we have national defense. Some people will say, "You are hindering national defense"; but I say you are not hindering national defense when you are giving consideration to the creation of a new Cabinet officer, so to speak, who will serve down through the years. We can just as well take this up in the ordinary way and give proper consideration to it.

Mr. ARENDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. ARENDS. Since this bill has not been before our committee, why can we not take it up before the committee tomorrow morning and dispose of it?

Mr. McCORMACK. My purpose was to find out whether the objection was to the language or to the bill itself.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman is asking me, I certainly object to that form of language vitalizing the President's unlawful proclamation of a limited emergency.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would the gentleman oppose a bill authorizing the appointment of an Under Secretary of War without any other language?

Mr. MICHENER. I think we would be justified in denying it, without consideration. There are not 10 Members in this House who know what this is because they have not had an opportunity and they do not know what they are doing. This speed is not necessary as a matter of national defense today.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would the gentleman oppose a bill authorizing the appointment of an Under Secretary of War?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would suggest that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] refer the bill to the Military Affairs Committee and tomorrow morning we can take it up again.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was simply trying to see how far apart we were.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Personally, I am not opposed to the creation of the office at this time. I am only opposed to the way the bill is framed.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the request temporarily.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting an address delivered by me on November 15, 1940, at Chicago, Ill., before the annual convention of the United States Saving and Loan League.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEMBER-ELECT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, which was read:

NOVEMBER 18, 1940.

The Honorable the SPEAKER, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: There is transmitted herewith a letter from the secretary of state of the State of Colorado relative to the election of Hon.

WILLIAM E. BURNEY as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress to fill the vacancy in the Third Congressional District of that State.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives,
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that matter be held over until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. The matter will be deferred, then, until tomorrow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to absent myself for several days on account of the death of George Betts, cashier of the State Bank of Avis, Avis, Pa., with whom I have been associated for 25 years in business. I have a pair against adjournment with the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] who is now in the Chamber.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day, but at present the Chair does not see in the Chamber the Members who are usually present when that calendar is called, and if there is no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] for 20 minutes, under the special order heretofore entered.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I ask unanimous consent that following the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] I may be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, several Members have spoken to the Chair asking that they be recognized to make some remarks about the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] when he has concluded. The Chair would prefer that the gentleman from Illinois defer his request for a little while.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an Armistice Day address delivered by Hon. William G. Roberds.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SIDELIGHTS ON CONGRESS

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is recognized.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, to have served nearly a quarter of a century in this body of men, selected in the contests of the open forums of our land, has been a rare privilege. To me, even the cloakroom has been like a university education. Doctors, lawyers, economists, educators, farmers, merchants, and practically every business activity in America are represented. Every kind of a philosopher may be found in the cloakroom. Ideas and views are exchanged in perfect freedom. Notwithstanding the banter and good-natured raillery, there is frequently an underlying note of seriousness. In the friction of mind upon mind the truth is brought to light.

I shall not discuss the mechanical workings of the House of Representatives nor its part in the processes of free government. These have been discussed over and over. Rather, I shall mention some of the sidelights and interesting experiences gleaned from a number of years' service in this body.

I regard the House of Representatives as the greatest legislative body in the world. It gives accurate, thorough, and detailed consideration to all important legislative proposals. Its committee system, checked by full House discussion, assures well-considered legislation. These facts are well known and I shall not dwell upon them.

Good or bad or, perhaps, good and bad, this body represents a cross section of the American people. It is frequently criticized. That is one of the happy privileges of the citizen whose business it is to select the Members of the Congress. It is one of the attributes of free government. It is interesting to note that frequently those who criticize the Congress in the severest terms make an exception of their own Representative whom they know and for whom they have a high regard. Congress being a large body, it is easy to blame it for all the ills of the economic system.

As a rule, the people in any particular district have a chance to know the character and ability and industry of their own Representative. They have a chance to be close to him. He is selected in an open contest in which every citizen of the State is permitted to enter, and in the selection of whom every resident citizen of the district is permitted to cast a ballot. If in making that selection a mistake is made in the type of the Representative chosen it is the fault of the people who live there and who make the choice. They are given an opportunity every 2 years to correct any mistake that may have been made.

Sometimes those who make criticism have a selfish motive to be served. Sometimes they do not believe in free government—at least they do not believe in representative government. Sometimes they are just chronic kickers. But in the main, I am persuaded to believe that the critics are simply exercising their prerogatives as American citizens. At any rate, it is a fine privilege to live in a country where every citizen is entitled to his free opinion and full liberty in expressing that opinion so long as he remains loyal to his country.

It has been my privilege for nearly 24 years to live with, to associate with, and to work with these chosen Representatives from every part of the Union. I have seen many of them come and go. I have served with nearly 2,000 Members. Only about 12 of the Members who were here at the time I entered the service are still Members of this body.

Based on that experience, I want to say that through these years, this has been an unusually capable body of men. To be a successful Representative, one must possess integrity, ability, courage, and industry. These qualities have been the rule and not the exception. In the rare instances in which men have been chosen who lacked in any of these qualities, they have soon been discarded as they are unable to properly serve either their districts or their country. This analysis, based on the facts, is a great tribute to the intelligence of the American people and their capacity for democratic government.

One of the noticeable things in connection with the service here is the spirit of fair play which exists among the members of the House. This, too, reflects the same spirit that in large measure prevails throughout the country. You sometimes hear a man spoken of as a good loser or a bad loser. Frequently this depends upon whether the winner is a good winner or a bad winner.

During our campaigns, sometimes in our enthusiasm we use rather strong terms. Frequently people visiting this country during campaign years wonder if there is going to be an uprising or a civil war or at least some riots. When the campaign is on and the Democrats are the majority party, I can prove by most any Republican that the Democrats are extravagant, wasteful, careless, incompetent, and in fact wholly incapable of administering the affairs of the Government. When the Republicans are in power no proof is necessary.

The next morning after a campaign is over and the votes have been counted, Bill, in walking down the street, meets his neighbor Tom. Tom says to Bill, "We licked you yesterday." Bill replies with a smile, "Yes, but we will get you next time." Tom replies, "You will never do it." They forget the contest and together they continue to build America. [Applause.] Bill is a good loser because Tom is a good winner.

In some countries, however, when an election is over, the losing party takes to the woods because they know that the winning party has guns and is likely to use them. They are poor losers because their adversaries are poor winners.

One of the basic principles of our land is the recognition of the rights of the minority and the protection of the rights of the individual. This helps to maintain the right to our free opinions without risking the loss of other things which we possess.

One of the most essential qualities of a good Representative is that of courage. Everyone loves a courageous man—one who is unafraid.

I have come to realize that there are many different kinds of courage. Frequently the one who makes a boast of his courage is not as courageous—when the pinch comes—as the one who makes little claim along this line.

The supreme test of courage is not the ability to show courage when one is given the credit for being courageous. Frequently people show so much admiration for real courage that even though they disagree with a man they still have an admiration for him and will support him, notwithstanding their difference in viewpoint. While it takes some courage to disagree even under these circumstances, this is not, in my judgment, the real test of courage.

The supreme test of any man's courage in a legislative way comes when he is required to show courage and yet be under the imputation of lacking in courage. I have seen this type of courage displayed on more than one occasion during my years of service. To be courageous when one gets credit for courage is a fine thing. To be courageous when one knows he will be misunderstood and that he will be charged in the minds of others with being a coward or lacking courage—that is the supreme test of courage and is courage in its highest form.

This body can be the most generous in the world. At other times it can be merciless. When a man deals frankly with it, when he is industrious and has something to say and will say it truthfully, no more generous audience can be found anywhere. On the other hand, if he is not informed, if he talks when he has only half-baked information, if he undertakes to deceive the House, the House can be merciless, even almost cruel.

One thing about the House, it soon gets a man's measure. It figures him out and labels him, unconscious though that classification may be.

In this body is a fine spirit of tolerance. The legislation that comes through the mill is based on the fusing of ideas and often is subject to many changes from the time of its original introduction to the time when it is finally enacted into law.

We often hear the statement made, "Why does not the Congress do this," or "Why does not the Congress do that." We are asked frequently why we do not vote for a particular measure which may include what seems to be a very desirable objective.

Like all new Members, when I first came to Congress I came with the idea of doing several things which I conceived to be worth while. I found that a Member rarely has an opportunity to vote on a measure which contains one single proposition. Rarely does he have an opportunity to vote on a measure which is written just as he would have it. Very often, from his viewpoint, there are good and bad features to any measure which is brought to a final vote, and he must determine whether the measure contains more of good or of bad.

Soon after I came to the Congress I introduced a measure in which I was very much interested. It was perhaps the only perfect measure which was ever introduced. I wrote it myself. It contained only a few lines. Not having so much else to do at that time, I buttonholed a great many Members on both sides of the aisle, and I think through sympathy as much as for any other reason, it was permitted to go through by unanimous consent. I was very happy over the result.

When it reached the Senate it was referred to a committee. They delayed several weeks while I grew impatient. Finally they struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted another bill. It went to conference and a measure was worked out that did not look like either of the other bills.

I thus early received a lesson in the fact that most all legislation is a matter of compromise and that there is a possibility of many changes before legislation is finally voted upon. In fact, that is the essence of democracy. It is not one man's opinion. It is the common sense of most. This explains, too, why it is often not wise for a Member to declare categorically whether he is for or against a measure when it is introduced. He may find that he has committed himself to a measure that may have entirely different provisions when the final vote is taken.

The processes of free government are slow. But with all its difficulties, with all the defects of a democratic government, it is the best that has been devised for a free people and is best calculated to enable them to remain free.

Behind the mechanics of government are the folks that make up the government. Behind the folks, or rather within the folks, are the attributes of character that enable a people to exercise the functions of government. What we sometimes term the government here in Washington is but the machinery or the harness of government. In the hearts, minds, and character of the people in the various communities that make up a country are the real elements of a free government.

Beyond these people, beyond these citizens, are the forces of creation and Nature's rules that are used by the people of the nation in building character and in shaping their conduct.

All about us are the hidden forces of Nature, planted there by an unseen power. Perfectly harmless elements, when chemically united, become terrific explosives capable of destroying buildings and even towns and cities. In other combinations these same elements can be made into all kinds of products that will help to build cities, save labor, produce health, and promote the happiness of the human race. In the eternal scheme of things, man is given the mastery over these elements.

These forces are a perpetual challenge to the best that is in man and a continuing temptation to the worst that is in our natures. In the conflict of these powers can be found the story of the progress and decay of man and of governments. Love and friendship are the primary building forces. Hatred and envy are the destroying forces of the world. All of these motives are the sources of power.

The songs of the ages have been about the struggle for power. The inspiring stories of the race have been about the same struggle. The fable of the wind and the sun, whether the pen is mightier than the sword, liberty and tyranny, the Hannibals and the Caesars, as contrasted with the principles of the Nazarene, are but reflections of that age-old struggle.

There is in the spiritual world, as in the material, decay and growth, and often from the ashes of decay arises the new growth in youth and joy.

Just now in many nations the material forces, the motives of hatred and envy, seem to have gained the upper hand. In these countries every effort is being made to build on material things alone and to suppress the finer motives of justice, friendship, truth, liberty, equality, manhood, and fair play. In some instances every attribute of civilization has been discarded. The dogs of war have been unleashed, and the forces of greed are preparing for a Saturnalia. If it keeps up the gaunt specters of poverty and want will stalk like hungry skeletons across the battlefields and into the broken homes of war-torn lands.

In the midst of all this apparent madness it is important that one great nation remain at peace. We can have far more effect as a stabilizing force than if we enter the insane struggle of destruction. I believe that the forces of love and friendship will finally prevail in the world.

Our Nation is based on individual opportunity, on the Bill of Rights, on freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, and freedom from every form of New and Old World caste and privilege. On this basic principle we have grown from simple beginnings to the proud position of freedom and power. We have had a hundred years of the richest experience that was ever crowded into a single century.

If any nation or any people from anywhere attacks us, every American worthy of the name will be willing to meet them at the water's edge and fight with every resource at our country's disposal. [Applause.] We covet the soil of no other country, but we are unwilling to surrender an inch of our own. Our Nation is at peace. We are interested in the arts of peace. Our thoughts and our hopes are forged in the atmosphere of a peaceful relationship with all of the peoples of the world.

But that does not mean that the forces of greed and avarice are not all around us. The Communists and other subversive groups of many kinds are sowing seeds of discord and unrest throughout our land. Our guaranty of free speech, free press, freedom of religion, and other rights do not extend to the border of treason. If any man on our shores, being unable to convince Americans of the wisdom of his ideas, advocates force or torch or a bomb to compel an unwilling majority to accept his opinions or theories, that man, if he is an alien, should be deported, and if he is a citizen, he should be confined where his false theories cannot be made dangerous to our country.

Un-American organizations which teach overthrow of our Government should be dissolved and forbidden. We want neither war nor revolution. We are perfectly willing for any other people to have any form of government they wish, but are unwilling for them to dictate the form of our own. [Applause.] We believe in the building forces of nature. We believe in the home, the school, the church, and the state as the four pillars of orderly civilization.

May I pause here to say that in my judgment the problem of the ownership of land is the problem of the ages. I had not intended to discuss legislation, but I do stop to express the hope that Congress will continue the provision it has made for the financing of the ownership of family-sized farm homes in the interest of the future of our country. [Applause.]

We believe in the peaceful solution of disputes between nations. No nation can win a modern war. Everyone who engages in it loses.

For thousands of years the earth has trembled beneath the tread of giant armies, and mankind has engaged in almost continuous strife. The issues have been settled beneath the smoke of battle, but the power of might does not determine the issue of right and wrong. Most of the pages of history are filled with this story.

Let America remain at peace. Let her send her white-winged messengers of commerce to all the ports of the world, carrying the message of hope to all peoples. That is the mission of America.

I entered my service here during the war session of the Sixty-fifth Congress. It is interesting to note how strangely similar are the discussions and actions of today and those of the period of 1917.

In every crisis men forget their differences of opinion in the interest of the common country. Selfish groups are largely forgotten and all seem willing to make sacrifices. So long as this remains true, our country will be safe.

It has been a proud distinction to serve as a Member of this body. I can think of no greater privilege. It will not be easy for me to leave the House of Representatives, where I have served so long and the work of which I have liked so much, but we cannot always choose the time and the place when changes are to be made.

The service here, while pleasant, is at the same time uncertain. One must cut loose from his business or profession, and the longer he remains away the more difficult it is to start over again. Even though this be true, I know of no one who regrets his service in this body. I am taking the liberty of paraphrasing and adding my own thought and expression to a parallel drawn by a great American I was privileged to know as a friend and counselor.

The sea of American politics is always interesting. The skies are rarely clear and the waters are never still. The tide ebbs and flows and the winds of controversy forbid the calm, yet there is magic in the lure of the voyage, and many craft of every type put out to sea.

Sometimes there are lights that temporarily dazzle and gleam, then vanish forever away. Sometimes a meteor, sweeping across the sky, will attract more attention and create more comment than the serene shining of a thousand stars. But the stars continue to shine long after the meteor has burned itself out.

Occasionally the skies are clear, giving happy promise of a safe voyage to all ships afloat. Then, almost without warning, the heavens become overcast and the waters become restless. Amid the flash of lightning and the rumble of distant thunder, the storm king rushes upon the scene. The surface of the sea is lashed into a fury. The compass fails and many a promising vessel, far away from the charted course, drifts helplessly, with broken rudder, into hidden dangers and onto rocks and shoals. When the light clears and the tempest is done the shores of the political sea are strewn with the wrecks which carried with them unrealized hopes and disappointed ambitions.

Sometimes we wonder why men and women will try to sail this treacherous sea, with its storms, its waves, its eddies, and its whirlpools. Yet in their willingness to do so lies the final hope of a democracy. They that go down to the sea in ships must face its dangers. A people's government cannot survive unless its citizens are willing to take an interest in its affairs.

I believe in America and her institutions. Knowing something of the storms which our ship of state has weathered, I have implicit faith in the future of our country.

May the ships of all colleagues come safely into port. [Applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest and pleasure to the splendid exposition of the American philosophy of government which has been given so well and eloquently by the gentleman from Texas. My pleasure, of course, has been tempered by the fact that this is the last time our distinguished friend will address us on this floor.

I have served with MARVIN JONES on the Committee of Agriculture for approximately 14 years, and during 9 of these years under his chairmanship. During most of this latter period I happened to be the ranking Republican member on the committee. There are many here who have known MARVIN JONES longer than I, who have known him in capacities in which I have not had the privilege of knowing him, but I think I have had an opportunity to know him very well through our association in committee work together. I can say no more, than that I respect him as a colleague and as a man and dearly love him as a friend.

MARVIN JONES served as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture during a period of time when there was more important agricultural legislation considered and enacted than during any similar period in our history. During his chairmanship the Committee on Agriculture has been one of the busiest committees in this House. It is a big job and a difficult one to serve as chairman of any important committee of the Congress. MARVIN JONES, in my opinion, has done a superb job as chairman of the great Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.]

The machinery of legislation is set up in such way that almost anyone as chairman of a committee can operate it; but we all know there is a lot of difference in the way in which any piece of machinery is operated, and that one man can get a great deal more work out of any machine than another. MARVIN JONES had a way of operating the machinery of legislation in his committee so as to produce a maximum of work with a minimum of friction. That is the mark of a good engineer and a good chairman.

MARVIN JONES possessed in a superlative degree the ability to get along with people. He had that fine quality which is really an art, of getting people to work for him and with him. The Committee on Agriculture has brought very few bill before the House during the time MARVIN JONES has been chairman which were not accompanied by a unanimous report. Never in those cases where serious differences of opinion existed has there been the least ill feeling, or the slightest thought on the part of the minority that they had not had a fair opportunity to present their views in the committee.

No committee in the House has had a better record for getting legislation enacted during the last 9 years than this one. That fact reflects the confidence which Members of the House on both sides of the aisle had in MARVIN JONES. They knew that a bill reported by his committee had been thoroughly studied and considered. They knew that he was fair and that he would not misrepresent a measure. They knew that he understood it and personally believed in its merits.

I am sure that today I speak for every minority member of the committee when I say we appreciate the fairness with which we have been treated and the thoroughness with which legislation has been considered in the committee. We admire our chairman for the able way he has presided over the committee and for the effectiveness with which he has presented the committee's bills to the House.

We are sorry to lose him. However, we realize that MARVIN JONES had made his mark in the legal profession before he came to the Congress. We know that he has an exceptionally keen legal mind, and is possessed of a fine judicial temperament. We are not surprised that a recognition of these qualities has resulted in his appointment to a high judicial post nor are we surprised or disappointed that he should choose to return to his first love, the law. Furthermore we know that whatever duty he may have owed to his constituency and to his country as a Member of this House has been well discharged and carried out. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As a Member who has served with MARVIN JONES since 1925 with the exception of 2 years, I concur in everything the gentleman has stated with reference to our colleague. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman and the House to the valuable service that the members of MARVIN JONES' office staff in the committee and in his own office have rendered to us and to the country during his years of service. [Applause.] I feel that this is a very appropriate time to express our appreciation to them and also to express the hope that they may remain here to assist in the next few years the same as they have done in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. I am very happy to concur in the statement just made by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to my distinguished friend from Georgia.

Mr. COX. May I say for myself that I always get a kind of moral cleansing when I mix with the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, who is going away, leaving us with a deep sense of sadness. I want to join with his colleagues and all his friends in this House in saluting him, not only as a wise and good statesman but as a gentle, sweet man. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. I am happy, indeed, to concur in the splendid sentiments just expressed by the gentleman from Georgia. I know from my association with the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, that in the judicial field he is going to make the same splendid, shining record that he has made in the field of legislation, and whatever loss this Congress may suffer when he leaves will be the gain of the Federal judiciary.

I am sure I speak the sentiments of every one of the minority when I say that much as we regret the departure of the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, from this body, we are happy that he is going into a field of endeavor for which he is so well qualified, and we wish him pleasure, happiness, and success in this, and in all he may undertake in the future. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY].

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, I, too, share with you a heart of sadness to a great extent, yet gladness, for I want MARVIN JONES to get what he wants, because he deserves the best, and the best is none too good for him. [Applause.] I, like my colleague from Kansas, CLIFFORD HOPE, listened to this speech of MARVIN JONES as I have listened to a number of speeches of his, and never have I heard him talk in public or in private that he did not leave me something wholesome and worth while to think about and meditate upon. [Applause.]

MARVIN JONES has served a long time in this House from the Eighteenth District of Texas. He has represented 28 counties in his district, but MARVIN JONES is not alone from the Eighteenth District in Texas or from the great State of Texas. MARVIN JONES is of the entire 48 States in this great Nation of ours. [Applause.]

I have sat by his side for more than 10 years as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and, whether at work or at play, never have I found MARVIN JONES other than a true gentleman, noble in his purposes, with high ideals and altruistic tendencies. MARVIN JONES is a real friend. He is leaving an everlasting imprint on this House and in the hearts of his colleagues and on the legislative history of this great Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to recite the work of our great House Committee on Agriculture under his leadership, but I want to briefly say, Mr. Speaker, that you know and I know we admire many men. We respect a great number of men in private and public life, but there are few men whom we love. I believe we love MARVIN JONES, and, speaking for myself, I know that I do, not because he is MARVIN JONES but because of his fine character, his noble life, and his high ideals, his helpfulness, and his great efforts to make life better for others as he travels down life's highway. The House will experience a great loss. We as individuals will experience a great loss. The Committee on Agriculture and the cause of agriculture generally will experience an irreparable loss. But, as has been said, the field which he now goes into—the judiciary—will be ripened and enriched. I, for one, know he is going to make the great judge he is capable of making; in fact, if I had my way, instead of appointing him as a judge of the Court of Claims, I would appoint him to the Supreme Court of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, MARVIN JONES will grace any bench. When I think of his leaving the House, I regret it, but I know that our best wishes go with him, and may I say that to know him is to love him. His friendship has ennobled and broadened my life and the lives of those who have had the privilege of working and being in close contact with him.

You know a man not only when you work with him and sit side by side with him in a committee room but when you fish and play together and enjoy periods of recreation. At all times MARVIN JONES has been a man whom we all know as a fine individual, a man who will stand hitched. You do not have to tie him. That is the kind of man that makes America great. That is the kind of man we appreciate. And that is the kind of man that MARVIN JONES is.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield to my distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. The remarks made by the distinguished gentleman is concurred in by every Member of the House without regard to party. Every one of us loves MARVIN JONES. Every Member who has ever served with him has the most profound feeling of respect for him. He is one of the outstanding men, not only during his period of service in the Congress but in the entire history of this great body under constitutional government. There is no Member who has occupied a more powerful position in this body—and this is based upon the fact he has earned it in this House—than the gentleman whom we honor today; and speaking for New England, and speaking for the northeastern section of the country, I join my friends from the southern part of the country and our friends from other sections of the country in honoring our friend and in expressing our regret that our distinguished friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is leaving this body; but may I say that the Federal judiciary is being greatly strengthened thereby.

New England joins with the other sections of the country in paying honor to one of America's outstanding men and one of the outstanding Members of the House in the entire history of this great body. [Applause.]

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, of course we all concur in and appreciate those words from our distinguished leader the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN W. McCORMACK. I know we all have the feeling toward the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, that the gentleman from Massachusetts has so beautifully, so eloquently, and so touchingly expressed.

I could say many, many more things; but with it all, all I can say is, Marvin, good luck, God bless you, and may the happiest days of your past be the saddest of your future. We love you. We are going to miss you. We hope you will come to see us at every opportunity. You have always been an inspiration to us and you always will be. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on an occasion similar to this in the Senate of Kansas the late Governor, Edward W. Hoch, the father of our former colleague, Justice Homer Hoch, of the Supreme Court of Kansas, said something like this about the associations of people of different political beliefs in legislative work. I am not certain I quote him correctly, but it was to this effect: "In the garden of the heart no sweeter flowers bud and bloom than those that clamber over the walls that divide political parties."

So often during my service in the House of Representatives I have thought of this sentiment of Governor Hoch and how very true it was.

And among the many friends I have known and loved on the other side of the isle I know no one to whom it applies with more force and truth than in the case of our beloved colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES]. For many years we enjoyed an early morning game of golf, and so to the associations in legislative work was added those of athletic competition and physical exercise with the exchange of sentiments covering a wide range of thought involving every subject from ethics and religion to mutual exchanges of the experiences of our lives from childhood to manhood. During these years we grew to know and understand each other in a very intimate manner. During these years I formed an exalted personal opinion of our good friend so that I have classed him among the most loved friends of my life along with my college classmate and roommate for 4 years, the late Dr. F. E. Kauffman, and my university classmate and roommate, the late Honorable E. K. Robinette.

These old college and university classmates and devoted friends have gone to the land of their dreams, and I cherish their memories among the dearest experiences of my life. Along with them I class my dear friend Congressman JONES, who is soon to become Judge JONES of the Court of Claims.

I know that the House shares my sentiments and good wishes in the new opportunity to serve his country where his even temperament, his fine balance of judgment, and legal discernment will find a rich field for exercise and usefulness. And I am sure, too, that we are all gratified that these new duties will not remove him from Washington so that our associations will not be completely severed.

I wish, in closing, to congratulate Mr. JONES upon his distinguished career in the House which marks him as one of the leaders of the Congress of the United States. I can pronounce no higher encomium. [Applause.]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that I have recently had a slight throat operation, I cannot now pay tribute to my friend MARVIN JONES, but I should like the RECORD to show that I concur in all the good things that have been said about him.

As a result of the census of 1930 the congressional district of Mr. JONES was divided about in half. For many years he represented with much distinction nearly all of the 25 counties which I have represented since 1934. No words of mine could do proper credit to the brilliant record, the remarkably able leadership, and fine personal qualities of Mr. JONES. I honor him as much for his clean and wholesome personal qualities as I do for the qualities of statesmanship which have made him a national figure. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the service in this House of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The SPEAKER. Is there obection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, the voluntary retirement from Congress of my colleague and good friend MARVIN JONES, after 24 years as a Member of this House, is a cause of deep regret to me.

True, his new duties as a judge of the Court of Claims necessitates his remaining in Washington, but we shall miss the personal association with him, and his separation from the legislative branch of the Government will cause this House to lose his valuable service where, for nearly a quarter of a century, he has been one of its outstanding leaders in shaping and molding the legislative history of his country.

While MARVIN JONES took an active interest in all legislation of major importance, he specialized in legislation for the benefit of agriculture. For about 10 years he served as the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. It is no exaggeration to say that no single individual who ever served in Congress did more for the farmers of America than did MARVIN JONES. He originated, sponsored, supported, and secured the passage of more constructive legislation for agriculture than any other Congressman within the history of the Republic.

A State is fortunate—a nation is fortunate in having a man of MARVIN JONES' character and ability in its service, and it is no wonder that his district for so many years sent him as their Representative to Congress with each recurring election, and would have continued to do so indefinitely, had he consented to serve longer.

The judicial branch of the Government, of which he now becomes a part, is, of course, equally important with the legislative, and MARVIN JONES is prepared by ability, character, and experience to acquit himself well in both. He has the judicial temperament in a marked degree. Possessing a high sense of justice, a sound and logical mind, an unimpeachable character of honesty and integrity and being an indefatigable worker, he will adorn with distinction the judicial position which he now assumes. The Nation loses an able legislator but it gains an able judge.

Since it will be impossible for all of the Texas Members of this House to pay him tribute, as Chairman of the Texas delegation in the House, I know that I speak the sentiment of every member of that delegation when I say that we shall sorely miss his wise counsel, his comradeship, his leadership, and his good fellowship. Our best wishes and affectionate regards shall abide with him forever. [Applause].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, change is the inexorable law of nature, and we in this House come face to face with its results from day to day and from year to year. For one reason and another our colleagues leave through death, through defeat, through voluntary retirement. Since we must lose MARVIN JONES, I rejoice in the fact that it is the latter cause which takes him from our midst.

The loss we sustain in his retirement from Congress will be the gain of another branch of this Government. He goes to a seat on the Federal bench, where his outstanding legal talent and his unimpeachable personal integrity will bring to the problems that confront him the same ability, the same fairness, the same abundant energy that have made him a leader in Congress.

I have known Marvin longer than any other Member of this body. We came from the same county in Texas—Cook. We were boys there together. He lived at Valley View and I at Era. Our fathers were friends before us, his being a successful and intelligent farmer, mine a country doctor. It is no wonder he knows so much about agriculture for, as a boy, he did all kinds of farm work. When quite a young man he was a student of farm problems. We attended the local country schools, where both of us thought we were good baseball players. In those days he was more aristocratic than I, because he lived on the railroad and I did not. We both graduated from Southwestern University at Georgetown and later from the law school of the University of Texas. After leaving college we both went west, he to Amarillo and I to El Paso.

It is not surprising that he is a good man, for he was blessed with a fine father and mother. His mother is still living, and I take this opportunity also to wish her health and happiness.

Marvin came to Congress before I did, and when I reached Washington in 1931 he was first to welcome me and extend a hand in the work I was about to undertake. We had been close and intimate before. We have been so since. I have had deep and lasting pleasure in this association, and my life is richer for his friendship.

His service to his district, his State, and this Nation as chairman of the important Committee on Agriculture cannot be overstated. During the time he has held this post the legislation sponsored by him which has become law has placed agriculture on a sound business basis and has brought hope and prosperity to the farmer, who theretofore had been engaged in a struggle to keep body and soul together.

Though he will be best remembered for his service to agriculture, his work in Congress comprehends all that is highest and best for the welfare, the peace, and the happiness of this Nation.

I shall miss him from my side in this House, where we have worked together for the past 10 years, but I wish him all success and contentment in that new field where he has chosen to labor. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the very remarkable speech made by the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, his farewell address to this House. For 20 years I have served with MARVIN JONES, and as a member of the minority I am glad to testify that in all these years there has never been a finer nor an abler Member of this House than he. He has rendered great service not only to his constituents but to his country as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives. What appealed to me more, perhaps, than anything else in his farewell address was his sincere and powerful plea for peace in America and keeping this country out of war. We who have served with MARVIN JONES will miss him, but at the same time we know that he is going into another important field of Federal service of his own accord. Therefore we wish him well, success, and Godspeed. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, it seems that nothing could be added to the many compliments that have been paid today to our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas, Hon. MARVIN JONES, who, after serving as a Member of this body some 24 years, is voluntarily giving up his place in Congress for the judiciary. But, Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this opportunity pass without joining in expressing my appreciation of the high quality and unselfish service rendered the Congress and the country by this distinguished Texan, whose home is only a few hours west of the district in Oklahoma that I have the honor to represent.

I have known MARVIN JONES for many years. I enjoyed a casual association with him before our close association together in this body. He has a host of friends and some distinguished relatives in the Sixth District of Oklahoma. When I came to Congress the gentleman from Texas was one of the first whom I sought out to ask for advice and counsel. I have found his judgment on all occasions to be sound and fair and his decisions invariably backed up by facts. He never goes off on a tangent or talks without knowing his subject or without thinking the matter through.

It has been interesting to watch him pilot much difficult and controversial farm legislation through this body. During all of the heated discussions, MARVIN JONES has never been known to lose his head or offend those who have disagreed with him. The gentleman from Texas is undoubtedly one of the ablest and most effective speakers in either House of Congress. With his good nature and even temper, sincerity of purpose, and good sense of humor, he has been able to steer legislation through this House that to others would have been a far more difficult task. His high ideals and keen sense of justice and fair play to all, under any and all circumstances, are among his outstanding characteristics.

I am sure that every Member of this body, irrespective of political affiliations, will really very much regret that MARVIN JONES has today delivered a farewell message to us and will soon relinquish the seat that he has occupied with so much distinction for nearly a quarter of a century. We shall also long cherish his invaluable advice and able counsel. In his address today, as on various previous occasions on the floor of the House, he has given us and the country much food for thought.

The long legislative career of our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas, Hon. MARVIN JONES, has been a real inspiration to all of us. I am sure I speak the sentiment of each Member of the delegation in Congress from Oklahoma when I say that it is our sincere desire that he may have an even fuller life in the future than in the past; and though we know not to what summits his path may lead, whatever he may do and wherever he may go, we wish him Godspeed. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, 8 years ago next spring I came into this House, becoming a Member of it later in years than most Members. My first service was in the Committee on Agriculture in the spring of 1933. I was present during all the time we worked out the original A. A. A. Act, the greatest act that had up to that time been passed in the interest of the farming world. I believe it ranks next to the Homestead Act of Lincoln's time.

I shall never forget when Lindsay Warren walked down that aisle on January 6, 1936, and announced to this House, as we sat in dead silence, that the Supreme Court of this country had declared the original A. A. A. Act unconstitutional. I shall never forget the meetings of the Committee on Agriculture that followed.

Someone has said:

> It is easy enough to be pleasant,
> When life flows along like a song;
> But the man worth while is the one who will smile,
> When everything goes dead wrong.

And things had certainly gone dead wrong in the Agricultural Committee. Our chairman smiled, and acted.

The work we had done and the hope that had entered the farming homes where they depended on surplus crops like wheat, corn, cotton, rice, and tobacco—all were gone. The other commodities under the original bill went out also, and we just wondered what would happen. Our chairman never lost his composure. He made trips to Departments and had several talks with the Committee on Appropriations. Finally, a large appropriation was made available. I have always believed that the then chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. Buchanan, was largely actuated in granting that appropriation through personal friendship for the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. He also had a firm belief that the money would be so distributed among the producing farmers that it would be a real and genuine benefit, and would not be wasted.

Out of that appropriation came the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1936, followed by a similar act in the fall of that year, and the other legislation coming along in due time.

The farming world can never pay the debt it owes to the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES. He is the one who has held the Committee on Agriculture to the line for its aid and assistance. We have seen him through these 8 years perform the work of a real statesman. I regard him as one of the ablest men I have met in my public life, and I want him to know that I appreciate his work and am sorry to lose his leadership on that committee. [Applause.]

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, you and I probably have known Marvin longer and more closely than any two Members of this House. It happens to have been my privilege to have been associated in the University of Texas with Marvin, both as a classmate in one course and under him as an instructor in another.

Having listened to those of you who have served with him here in the House speak about the natural qualities of the man, associations such as we have had grow to a point where words are utterly futile in drawing a proper picture. It has been my strange privilege to be the second member on the House Committee on Agriculture with Marvin. It has been my privilege to know him both from the standpoint of a valiant soldier fighting on the same side and also to know him as a formidable adversary. There are few men in this House that can appreciate the situation which developed on an occasion when we were considering the passage of an agricultural act to take the place of the one so ably described by my colleague from Oregon, my distinguished friend, Governor PIERCE. The difference of opinion which occasioned that battle was so real as to have made it just about as definite a clash as could occur.

That fight was over and, in fact, had there been a change of just a few votes, I think probably I would have been more deeply wounded than Marvin in losing, because I would have realized that through me, his friend on the committee, he had lost one of his major fights on the floor. But, Marvin, God bless you, despite that battle, there has never been one single scratch on the surface of our friendship. There is not one flaw to be found throughout our long friendship.

So in the few moments when I pay tribute to my friend here I want to tell you there is not a bit of sadness in my heart, save that natural feeling of regret at being dissociated from the daily contacts we have had in our labors here on the floor, because I am going to argue with Marvin some more, and I am going to agree with him some more after he becomes a profound judge. He is one of those fellows who even in an argument gives you something. You know when you work with a real fellow you get something out of him, and when you fight against him, if you can learn something from him at the same time, you can kind of halfway understand what I am trying to tell you. So as a friend and as an opponent, statesman, and acquaintance of over half of the legitimate three score and ten that men are supposed to live, in Marvin's case I want to tell you good-bye, old pal, Godspeed, and I will be seeing you, and we will call you in that field, if we get into a jack pot, to come up and take part, and you cannot say "No." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a peculiar significance, as I see it, that, as the "entire delegation" from the State of Vermont, I rise at this time to say that my long-time friend, the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, representing a constituency so 100-percent American as I do, and I, are of the representatives of the two sole "independent republics" who denied to any government the right to dictate to us or to try to tell us what to do, any time, any place, or anywhere.

So all down through the years MARVIN JONES has stood here in my presence, the perfect representative of his constituency, not always with my partisan approval or appreciation but generally with my modified assent fundamentally, and has asserted the individualism of the average American. For that reason, and for many others, and since he has just told us that he is no longer to be with us—which I regret—I want to say, while I am gratified and honored by the fact that I have had an opportunity to be associated with him during these years, I am very sorry, and so is Vermont, that he is going; but I still feel that Texas and Vermont, true to their forebears, will carry on. Good luck. God bless you, Marvin. As one republic to another, I salute you. [Applause.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I have had the privilege of serving in Congress for 20 years. During 18 of those short or long years I have had the privilege of serving with MARVIN JONES on the Committee on Agriculture.

It may be of interest to you to relate a little incident in regard to my committee assignment. When I came to Congress they gave me as my first committee appointment a place on the Committee on Indian Affairs. When I went back to South Carolina for reelection my opponent made this statement at every campaign meeting we held in the district:

> My friends, for 17 years prior to the election of Mr. FULMER we have had Frank Lever in Congress, serving on the Committee on Agriculture. Now you have FULMER up there serving on the Indian Affairs Committee, and there is not a darned Indian in the district.

[Laughter.]

When I came back for my second term I told Mr. GARNER, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, about these charges and that I had to get on the Committee on Agriculture, and I was given that appointment for my second term.

For 10 years I served on the minority of that committee with MARVIN JONES. During the remainder of the 20 years I have had the privilege of serving with him on the committee, including the past 8 years under the Roosevelt administration, where he has served as chairman.

I want to join with other Members who have spoken in saying to you briefly that MARVIN JONES during all of these years has rendered that type of service that will be hard to match by any Member of Congress. He is a great parliamentarian.

He is the type of man who, because of his wonderful character and ability, is able and has been able to secure the cooperation of the various members of the committee, including the members of the majority as well as the members of the minority.

Because of his long service and his deep interest in agriculture, he has been able to render to his people, as well as the Nation as a whole, many years in helping to formulate and in passing many constructive agricultural bills.

His colleagues realize, out of our experience during all of these years in serving with him, that he is a lawyer of great ability.

The President of the United States has made no mistake in giving Marvin an appointment to the Federal bench. I make this statement because he is well qualified, and I am sure that history will record him as having rendered distinguished service as a judge.

On his retiring from his present position as chairman, perhaps I, as ranking member of the Agricultural Committee, more than anyone else, realize that we shall miss him, his leadership in the committee and in the House, his wonderful ability, backed by that wonderful personality and persuasive power which he possesses and which are so necessary in reporting and passing legislation in the House.

In closing I would like to make this further statement, which, no doubt, is responsible for the wonderful character and influence which he has on his colleagues. If you visit Marvin's private office, you will find on his desk a copy of the Bible, which clearly indicates to me and others who have had the privilege of visiting his office and being associated with him that certainly he must have been a reader of the Written Word, which, no doubt, has been helpful to him not only in his congressional work but in his life work.

To me this would clearly indicate that a man of this type cannot only hope to do great things in this life, but it places him in a splendid position to receive a "Well done" hereafter and that reward which is pending for those who love the Lord.

Marvin, along with others, I wish you many more happy and successful years. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to add to the well-deserved words of compliments and of praise which we have heard from each side of the aisle and from every section of the country with reference to our distinguished friend.

On this occasion, in behalf of the Texas delegation and in behalf of Mr. JONES, I take the liberty to express the deep appreciation for the genuine words of compliment and of appreciation which have been paid to this son of Texas. In a peculiar way Texas is the child of the rest of the country. From every section of the country have come your sons and daughters who were willing to cut loose from the sustaining influence of family and to win or lose in that great section where the individual is given an opportunity and only the best man is permitted to win.

MARVIN JONES is the product of that community which has been created by the people of the Nation—that belongs to the Nation. We of the Texas delegation are grateful for these voices that come from the people of the Nation expressing appreciation for the service of this son of Texas. [Applause.]

Let me mention in particular one thing MARVIN JONES has contributed much toward, and I want to make this a part of the permanent RECORD: When I came to Congress agriculture was not regarded as a part of the economic system of this country. It was regarded as a sort of nurse animal for the rest of industry. It was not considered, speaking generally, that these 30,000,000 people whose business lay right next to the soil had the same right to make money for themselves as other people had. We were dealing then with production.

The whole program of the Department of Agriculture dealt with production regardless of what the commodity brought when production had been completed. MARVIN JONES took the position in which I shared that it was all right to make two blades of grass grow where one grew, provided that when the two blades of grass were grown they brought a higher price than the one blade brought. MARVIN JONES did much toward making the entire Nation conscious of the fact that the farmers are producing to sell for profit in order that they may obtain the things they buy, and that it is impossible, utterly impossible, to prevent economic paralysis in this country if the buying power of these 30,000,000 people is paralyzed. In the rendition of this particular specific service MARVIN JONES unquestionably made a contribution to the farmers of this country, but he made a contribution also to the Nation as a whole that entitles him to the appreciation of the entire Nation.

Again in behalf of the Texas delegation I want to thank these Members from the other sections of the country for having so generously expressed their appreciation of our colleague whom we all love, whom we all honor, and whom we all wish Godspeed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH].

UNDER SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4370) authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain to the House the purpose of the amendment I understand he expects to offer?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I expect to offer an amendment which will remove any question about the national emergency by setting a definite limit on the operation of this act January 20, 1945. I believe this meets the objection raised by the members of the minority as to the uncertainty of the language in the Senate bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman designate what his amendment does?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The amendment will strike out the words "to serve during any national emergency declared by the President to exist, including the present limited emergency", and will add, "The provisions of this act shall cease to have effect on January 20, 1945, unless continued in force by a subsequent act of Congress."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to appoint from civil life, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Under Secretary in the Department of War to serve during any national emergency declared by the President to exist, including the present limited emergency. The Under Secretary of War shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War or required by law and shall be next in succession to the Secretary of War during his absence or disability or in the event of a temporary vacancy in that office. In prescribing the duties to be performed by the Under Secretary of War, the Secretary of War may prescribe any of the duties now prescribed by law to be performed by The Assistant Secretary of War. The compensation of the Under Secretary of War shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum. The Assistant Secretary of War, next after the Under Secretary of War, shall hereafter succeed to the duties of the Secretary of War during his absence or disability, or in the event of a temporary vacancy in that office.

SEC. 2. That the first two paragraphs of section 5a of the National Defense Act, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 764), be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5a. Hereafter the Secretary of War, in addition to other duties imposed upon him by law, shall be charged with the supervision of the procurement of all military supplies and other business of the War Department pertaining thereto and the assurance of adequate provision for the mobilization of matériel and industrial organizations essential to wartime needs, and he may assign to the Under Secretary of War and The Assistant Secretary of War such duties in connection therewith as he may deem proper. There shall be detailed to the offices of the Secretary of War, the Under Secretary of War, and The Assistant Secretary of War from the branches engaged in procurement such numbers of officers and civilian employees as may be authorized by regulations approved by the Secretary of War.

"Chiefs of branches of the Army shall report regarding all matters of procurement direct to the Secretary of War, the Under Secretary of War, or The Assistant Secretary of War, as the Secretary of War shall have prescribed. The Secretary of War shall cause to be manufactured or produced at the Government arsenals or Government-owned factories of the United States all such supplies or articles needed by the War Department as said arsenals or factories are capable of manufacturing or producing upon an economical basis. All appropriations for manufacture of matériel pertaining to approved projects which are placed with arsenals, Government-owned factories, or other ordnance establishments shall remain available for such purpose until the close of the next ensuing fiscal year."

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut: Page 1, line 6, after the word "War", strike out all down to and including the word "emergency" in line 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

"The provisions of this act shall cease to have effect on January 20, 1945, unless continued in force by a subsequent act of Congress."

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Would the gentleman mind modifying his amendment to strike out the word "subsequent"? With this modification the amendment then is clearly within the gentleman's expressed intention. The word "subsequent" might be construed to mean after 1945.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I accept the modification and ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the word "subsequent."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut as modified: Page 3, after line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The provisions of this act shall cease to have effect on January 20, 1945, unless continued in force by an act of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] is recognized.

TOBACCO QUOTAS

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4374) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the purpose of the bill?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has two objects in view. Heretofore flue-cured and dark air-cured tobacco have been grouped together and consequently only one referendum has been held for both types. Due to the war situation, there has been a greater decrease in the exportation of fire-cured tobacco than there has been of dark air-cured tobacco and it is necessary, in fixing quotas, that separate referendums be held—that is, a separate referendum covering each type.

The other part of the bill changes the base period. When the original A. A. A. was introduced a special period was given to tobacco, due to the fact that we were unable to find a period that really reflected what we called parity price. The general provision in that bill provided a base period from 1909 to 1914 as to all farm products covered by the bill except tobacco, and as to tobacco the period was from 1919 to 1929, due to the fact that tobacco prices during that period more nearly reflected parity. During the last 15 or 20 years there has been a greater consumption of cigarette tobacco, which has resulted in changing materially the method of producing tobacco. A cigarette leaf has to be a finer leaf; you have to space your tobacco closer; and when you do that you require more labor and you get a lighter tobacco.

We are asking that the period now be changed so as to more nearly reflect parity. The bill has been approved by the Department of Agriculture and by the Senate and House committees, and it has the unanimous support of all Representatives from the tobacco districts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has this been approved by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And by the Committee on Agriculture of the House?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And there is no opposition?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I have not heard of any.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in changing the base period for burley and flue-cured tobacco under the bill S. 4374, the parity price for burley tobacco will be increased from approximately 17.2 cents per pound to 21.8 cents per pound with prevailing price levels. This change is in line with changes which have been occurring in the tobacco industry. Over a period of years the proportion of our burley tobacco which is used in cigarettes has increased materially. In the 5 years 1909–13 about 1½ percent of the burley tobacco was used in the manufacture of cigarettes. This percentage increased to about 40 percent in the 10 years 1920–29, to a little over 57 percent in the 5 years 1935–39, and to a little over 59 percent in 1939. The growing of burley tobacco always has required a great deal of labor. The change in the industry under which more burley tobacco has been used in cigarettes has caused farmers to change their practices so as to have more of their tobacco suitable for use in cigarettes. In making this change they grow a lighter type of tobacco and have to handle a greater number of leaves to make a pound. Today the average acreage of burley tobacco per farm is only about 1.6 acres. Every leaf of tobacco has to be handled separately several times. Therefore, you have a situation in which farmers do more work to sell a pound of tobacco. This change has been reflected in the change in price relationships for burley tobacco as contrasted with other commodities. In order to take this change into account and to give burley farmers a fair parity price for the tobacco the proposed change in the base period seems to be needed.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that was called up under suspension of the rules and by unanimous consent on numerous occasions during the last month?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Yes; this is the same bill.

Mr. MICHENER. And there was much opposition to it. It was abandoned.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I may say the opposition was due to the fact that the membership was not acquainted with the true facts. Since then we have communicated with all Members whom we thought were interested, including the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], and we have their approval. They have no objection to this legislation. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE], who has just spoken, comes from a great tobacco district, and I think he will confirm the statement I am making.

Mr. MICHENER. There is no question that the people coming from the tobacco districts would be interested. That is the natural thing. This does not cost any more money, does it?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. No.

Mr. MICHENER. But it will take the money appropriated for parity payments—possibly not this year, but a reallocation will be made, and it will take something away from wheat, corn, and cotton and give it to tobacco?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. No.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what the bill does.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that statement. Of course, it does not apply to any appropriations that have been made. A special provision in the bill takes care of that. The gentleman surely will not take the position that tobacco is up to parity and that tobacco growers in the future should not be entitled to parity payments?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not know anything about tobacco, but where we pass a law and there are certain commodities, like tobacco, wheat, and cotton, receiving subsidies in the shape of parity payments, we should not by unanimous consent change the picture so that another commodity will receive payments that would eventually—not this year but next year possibly—go to other commodities, and take away from the other commodities the amount of money authorized for those commodities.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. As I understand it, the enactment of this amendment will work no injustice or hardship upon any other commodity, and I may also say for the benefit particularly of the gentleman from Michigan, whose industry must be highly commended, because there is no Member of the House who looks after the interests of what he conceives to be those of the country at large any more assiduously than the gentleman from Michigan, that no parity payments have been made to tobacco growers. The chief effect of this will be to help hold up the price of the commodity in the interim. It is not anticipated that any parity payments will be made in the future, but since this inequality has developed, an injustice is being done to the industry incidentally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (15) of subsection (b) of section 301 of subtitle A of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the words—

"Fire-cured and dark air-cured tobacco, comprising types 21, 22, 23, 24, 35, 36, and 37;"

and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Fire-cured tobacco, comprising types 21, 22, 23, and 24;

"Dark air-cured tobacco, comprising types 35 and 36;

"Virginia sun-cured tobacco, comprising type 37;"

SEC. 2. That section 312 of subtitle B of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out subsections (b), (d), (e), and (f) of such section, by striking out all of the second sentence in subsection (c) of such section, and by changing the subsection designation "(c)" therein to "(b)."

SEC. 3. The last sentence of section 301 (a) (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The base period in case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the period August 1909 to July 1914. In the case of all kinds of tobacco except burley and flue-cured such base period shall be the period August 1919 to July 1929, and, in the case of burley and flue-cured tobacco, shall be the period August 1934 to July 1939; except that the August 1919–July 1929 base period shall be used in allocating any funds appropriated prior to September 1, 1940."

SEC. 4. That section 301 (b) (15) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end of the last sentence thereof and adding a colon and the following: "Provided, That any one or more of the types comprising any such kind of tobacco shall be treated as a 'kind of tobacco' for the purposes of this act if the Secretary finds there is a difference in supply and demand conditions as among such types of tobacco which results in a difference in the adjustments needed in the marketings thereof in order to maintain supplies in line with demand."

SEC. 5. That section 312 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by striking out subsection (b) thereof.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PLACES OF CONFINEMENT OF PERSONS CONVICTED OF A FEDERAL OFFENSE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9954, to amend section 7 of the act of May 14, 1930 (46 Stat. 326; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 753 f), relating to places of confinement and transfers of persons convicted of an offense against the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act of May 14, 1930 (46 Stat. 326; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 753 f), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. Hereafter all persons convicted of an offense against the United States shall be committed, for such terms of imprisonment as the court may direct, to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States or his authorized representative, who shall designate the places of confinement where the sentences of all such persons shall be served: Provided, That any sentence of imprisonment for an offense punishable by imprisonment for a term of 1 year or less shall not be served in a penitentiary except with the defendant's consent. The Attorney General may designate any available, suitable, and appropriate institutions, whether maintained by the Federal Government or otherwise, or whether within or without the judicial district in which the person was convicted. The Attorney General is also authorized to order the transfer of any person held under authority of any United States statute from one institution to another if in his judgment it shall be for the well-being of the prisoner or relieve overcrowded or unhealthful conditions in the institution where such prisoner is confined, or for other reasons."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEN. ANDREW PICKENS

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 369, to provide for the erection of a shrine or monument to the memory of Gen. Andrew Pickens.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

KELLEY HOMESTEAD NEAR ELK RIVER, MINN.

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 376, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to accept from the National Grange a lease of the Kelley homestead near Elk River, Minn., and providing for its development and maintenance.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

VESSELS FOR STATE NAUTICAL SCHOOLS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10315, to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish suitable vessels for the benefit of certain State nautical schools, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

MIAMI INDIANS OF INDIANA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2306, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in all claims which the Miami Indians of Indiana who are organized and incorporated as the Miami Nation of Indians of Indiana may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think when a man is put in the position of asking that a bill go over without prejudice or objects to the consideration of a bill, he owes the country or at least those interested an explanation.

There has come to my attention a card which was sent out rather promiscuously by the California Indian Rights Association, Inc., in respect to Indian bills. It reads as follows:

DEAR INDIAN FRIENDS: Don't be fooled by the Willkie letters. Republicans don't keep their platform promises. Republican Congressmen prevented a vote on your California Indian bill in Congress on September 30 and again on October 7. No Democrats opposed it. HARRY SHEPPARD is the one that got it on the calendar for you.

The Roosevelt administration has given us Indians work in the I. E. C. W., in the C. C. C.-I. D., and the W. P. A., and has supported our legislation in Congress for California Indians. No Republican administration ever gave us work. Don't desert your friends. Vote for Roosevelt and vote for SHEPPARD in his district. All Democratic Congressmen now in Congress have supported your bill. Vote for your friends.

Signed by the California Indian Rights Association, Inc., 321 West Third Street, Los Angeles, Calif. Postmarked at Los Angeles, Calif., dated November 1, 1940.

The remark which I made that the people interested have the right to know why we pass these bills over or object to them is made because of that post card.

Now, in this particular bill there is granted jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the claims of these particular Indians. The bill provides that the court shall consider all such claims de novo, upon a legal and equitable basis and without regard to any decision, finding, or settlement heretofore had in respect to any such claim.

This is a rather novel departure in legislation, whether it be for the Indians or anyone else, and I may say that I have no purpose in denying the Indians or any other class of people or individuals the right to present their claims. This removes the statute of limitations, thereby discriminating against a great body of American citizens who are denied the right to present claims by operation of the statute of limitations.

It provides that such suits or causes of action shall be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and by the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed. In other words, this bill gives a preferred status to these claims. All other Government business that is on the docket of the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States must be shunted aside to hear these cases. Now, an appeal differs from certiorari, by which suits are usually taken to the Supreme Court, in that when an appeal is taken the Court gives consideration to the facts as presented by the record, while under this bill the facts are presented de novo. In certiorari, by which all other citizens must take their grievances to the Supreme Court, only a question of law is involved. So we differentiate between these citizens, the Indians, and all other citizens of the United States in giving them a preferred status, and now let us see what the record shows further in this respect.

In this particular case, according to the letter signed by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, to the Honorable WILL ROGERS, Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, under date of September 18, 1939, the records show that the obligations of the United States under the treaty as amended were fully discharged.

He goes on further to say:

This would recognize the Indians as being entitled to an annuity of $25,000 for each year since 1855 and would require the court to deduct from the total amount due for those years the amount paid for the release of the annuity and render a judgment for the difference. Moreover, the bill would create a liability where none now legally or equitably exists, requiring the United States to pay $25,000 annually forever to these Indians, a large if not the greater portion of whom (the Miamis of Indiana) are not tribal Indians and have not been subject to the supervision and control of the Federal Government since 1881.

Further he says:

The annuity was released and relinquished for a valuable consideration which was paid in full many years ago, and there is no justification for its reinstatement.

In this respect, if the Republicans object—and I shall object to the bill—they will merely be following the advice of the Democratic Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I placed in the RECORD a letter that I received from the Department of Justice in reference to this bill, in which the present Attorney General voiced certain objections and stated it would be unfair to the Government to pass the bill in its present form. You will find in the report a letter from the General Accounting Office. That report was based upon the original bill. I have a letter from the General Accounting Office, in which the General Accounting Office says that subsequent to the making of that report on the original bill the Committee on Indian Affairs submitted a committee print of the bill, which was considerably different from the original bill, and there is objection taken to that bill. So it is rather misleading to find in the report a letter from the General Accounting Office approving this bill. On the contrary, it does not approve the bill that is before the House at the present time.

I will state to the gentleman that I will absolve the Republican minority of the sole responsibility of stopping all Indian claim legislation. I have objected to them for a number of years, and I am going to continue to object to resolutions that will place the Government at a disadvantage when the time comes to defend a suit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that he has worked assiduously on these bills, and, in my opinion, there has not been any meritorious Indian bill presented on the floor of this House while I have had anything to do with this calendar, that the gentleman from Missouri did not withhold his objection, and help in its enactment. On frequent occasions I have known of the gentleman to discuss the bill in an intelligent manner, and the bill was passed which otherwise would not have been passed. As far as I am concerned, I stand not as the representative of any party but as an individual in trying to protect these colossal steals from the Treasury of the United States. At the present moment, according to the report of the Attorney General, there are over $3,000,000,000 of Indian claims now pending in the Court of Claims, under authorizations passed by Congress, going way back, in some instances, to Revolutionary War days.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Inasmuch as the question of responsibility of parties has been raised, I would like to inquire of the gentleman where he gets the idea that Mr. Ickes is a Democrat, and since when? [Laughter.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, he surely is not credited as being a Republican. I want to make the very definite statement, if there is any question on the record as to whether Mr. Ickes is a Republican or not; now and forevermore, in behalf of the Republican Party, I and we repudiate him.

Mr. MAY. Well, will the gentleman admit that he opposes this bill which the gentleman says is a bad bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

OIL AND GAS LEASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10402, to amend the act relating to rentals in certain oil and gas leases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like an explanation of the bill by the person who filed it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know anything about it. I do not have any objection to it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman who filed the bill is not here, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will merely say that the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD] is but inferentially mentioned in this postcard. There was no intention on my part to create any inference that the gentleman has not done a splendid job for his Indians and for the residents and citizens of his district. It just so happened—and I am sorry for it—that the gentleman's name was mentioned on the card. I know the gentleman has differed with me on matters of policy, but I cannot, for the life of me, conceive that he, in view of his record in the Congress, would subscribe to certain things which might be inferentially credited to him in this card. He is absolved from all responsibility. I want to reiterate that of all my friends and colleagues on the floor, there are none in higher esteem than the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman withdraw his request and let this bill go through?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will withhold my request to permit the gentleman to make an explanation if he wishes, but I shall renew it.

Mr. CHURCH. I wonder if after further discussion the gentleman would not be willing to do that?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I must request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3765, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California," approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602).

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when the bill, Calendar No. 919, was up, I commented upon a certain card which had been distributed in respect to this particular bill known as the California Indian claims bill. Because of that card I want to read into the RECORD at this time a paragraph from the letter of the Attorney General of the United States, the Honorable Frank Murphy, who has since been elevated to the Supreme Court bench, an opinion written by him as Attorney General under date of May 23, 1939, in commenting on this particular bill, H. R. 3765; and I might say Mr. Justice Murphy is a constituent of mine, a very good friend of mine. I respect his judgment and his opinions. I wish he might have been continued as Attorney General for I think we would have more faith in the opinions of the Attorney General of the United States had he been, but of course, we are glad to see him elevated.

Attorney General Murphy had this to say in respect to this particular bill:

> In vetoing a substantially similar bill (S. 1793, 74th Cong.), President Roosevelt said:
> "It appears from the report of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs relative to this bill (S. Rept. 709, 74th Cong., 1st sess.), that the total area for which an award might probably be made under the terms of this legislation would be not less than 90,000,000 acres. Thus, the bill involves a liability of at least $100,000,000.
> "In addition to having the effect of imposing a very heavy financial burden on the Government, the bill would create a dangerous and undesirable precedent for similar endeavors on the part of the present descendants of other aborigines to secure payment for lands occupied by their ancestors at the time of the original settlements in the United States or the acquisition of territory by this country. Not only would such a course of action result in an incalculable financial burden to the Government, but justice to the Indians of today does not seem to require this type of reparation."
> Since the proposed bill does not effectively meet either of the President's objections, I am unable to recommend its enactment.

So as I urge my objection to the bill I am merely following the advice of a Democratic Attorney General of the United States and a Democratic President of the United States who vetoed a similar bill. If this bill is being used as the basis of political support then somebody is surely inconsistent in his statement.

I wanted the RECORD to show clearly that I as an individual was objecting to this bill principally upon the recommendation of a Democratic Attorney General and a Democratic President of the United States, and not as a representative of any political party.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that unfortunately I was not on the floor at the time he made his remarks pertaining to the card and I am not conversant with what that card meant or said.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As a matter of fact it was very laudatory of the gentleman.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do want to assure the gentleman in connection with his statement pertaining to the report that I have no intention in presenting this legislation of using it as a political football either for or against my colleagues on the opposite side of the aisle. If the proposition will not stand on its own merits, if there is no justification for it I have no objection to the gentleman's expressing his sentiment along that line because I also hold a very high regard for him.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The card I read did not quote the gentleman's sentiment, it was the sentiment of the California Indian Rights Association.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it is only fair, not only to the author of the bill but also to the House, to place in the RECORD a letter from the present Attorney General. I ask unanimous consent that at this point in the RECORD I may insert a short letter from the present Attorney General voicing his objection to this bill and why he is opposed to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 7, 1938.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This acknowledges your letter of June 4, concerning the bill (S. 1651) relating to certain claims of the Indians of California.

The purpose of the bill is to amend the act of May 18, 1928, by which jurisdiction was granted to the Court of Claims over certain claims of the Indians of California. The bill under consideration would considerably widen the scope of the original act, which limited the right to recover thereunder to those Indans who were parties to certain unratified treaties. The pending bill would extend the right of recovery of compensation to California Indians who were not parties to such treaties.

The bill contains an express provision to the effect that the loss to such Indians of their lands without compensation therefor should be sufficient ground for equitable relief. The effect of this measure might be to create a right in Indian tribes to receive compensation for lands to which they had no title recognized by law, but which were held by them solely by aboriginal occupancy. The result would be a very heavy financial burden to the United States.

The bill also contains a provision to the effect that compensation for any lands alleged to have been taken by the United States shall be at the rate of $1.25 per acre. This provision appears to be objectionable, as it is the view of this Department that the value of the lands at the pertinent date—1852—was considerably less than this amount.

The bill further proposes to grant a right of appeal to the Supreme Court from any judgment that may be rendered by the Court of Claims. Under existing law, judgments of the Court of Claims are reviewable by the Supreme Court only on certiorari, and no reason appears to extend to a particular litigant a right of appeal not accorded to others.

In view of the foregoing considerations I am unable to recommend the enactment of the bill.

Sincerely yours,

HOMER CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are required.

Mr. TABER, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. KEEFE objected.

TO REPEAL OBSOLETE STATUTES AND TO IMPROVE THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9947, to repeal obsolete statutes and to improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9773, to repeal obsolete statutes and improve the United States Code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent that the bills listed under Calendar Nos. 948 to 951, inclusive, be passed over without prejudice?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills listed as Calendar Nos. 948, 949, 950, and 951 may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CHOCTAW INDIANS OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3524, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I had a letter from the Attorney General in which he voiced his objections to this bill. The objections were so strenuous that I feel the bill should not be on the Consent Calendar. Therefore I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PROFESSIONAL EXAMINATIONS FOR PROMOTION IN MEDICAL, DENTAL, AND VETERINARY CORPS OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10278, to authorize the discontinuance of professional examinations for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps during time of war or emergency declared by Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that this bill contains the same embarrassing question of emergency. The bill reads:

That in time of war or during an emergency declared by the President or by Congress, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, dispense with any part of the examination for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical—

And so forth. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill if it can be agreed that in line 3 the words "in time of war or during an emergency declared by the President or by the Congress" may be stricken out, so that the bill will then read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, dispense with any part of the examination for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps, except those relating to physical examination.

That is all the Secretary wants. You are going to let him use his discretion, anyway. Why not let him use that discretion without making any reference to emergencies?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I suggest that all objections to the bill would be removed if it read as follows: "That in time of war declared by Congress," and so forth. Then we strike out everything with respect to emergencies, whether declared by the President or not. There have been numerous attempts made to get this Congress by indirection to declare that an emergency exists. We have stopped three or four of these bills. Sometime or other there may be such an indication contained in some other bill. We know we are not going to declare war without knowing that we are doing so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Michigan in his hesitancy, in fact his declination to enact any legislation which would authorize the President to declare an emergency. But may I say to the gentleman that if we leave it discretionary with the Secretary of War, then he may meet this present situation, which is rather acute, regardless of whether or not we are now in the midst of an emergency. I hope it will not be declared as such. It is a fact, however, that a very heavy mobilization is going along and the strain put upon the Medical Corps is a heavy one. It must be expanded to take care of the health of these men who are going to the cantonments. Let us give the Secretary of War discretion to suspend in whole or in part the professional examinations for promotions in the Regular Army of Medical officers.

I may say to the Members of the House that promotion of officers in other branches of the Regular Army is not conditioned upon professional examinations. Under the act as it now exists only the Medical Department officers are promoted upon professional examinations. They are going to have a very tough time convening medical boards to pass upon the promotion qualifications of every officer of the Medical Corps as he is wanted for promotion, in the midst of this mobilization. Will it not suffice, therefore, to leave this matter to the Secretary of War without making any reference to declarations of war or emergencies by the President or by the Congress?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Michigan understand that this bill, along with a number of other bills with respect to procedure in the War Department, was introduced by me at the request of the War Department and the bill as presented by the War Department and as introduced by me and reported by the committee shows very clearly that the Department is not seeking to have arbitrary unlimited power or unlimited time to exercise this function; therefore, they are not subject to criticism about that and I have no inclination to want to make this permanent. But by accepting the amendment as offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to strike out in line 3 the words "in time of war or during an emergency declared by the President or by Congress," leaving it to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, dispense with any part of the examination for promotion—

And so forth, would make it permanent legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MAY. I have no objection to that, therefore I will gladly accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There was some rather lengthy discussion on this bill when it was called on October 7, and among other reasons I gave for asking to put it over at that time was that this created a very dangerous precedent and discriminated against line officers. I do not think we should be doing these things by unanimous consent. This seems to me altogether too important to the Nation as a whole and particularly to the officers involved, to jump in here and do something we are going to be sorry for later on. This hysteria which has gripped us in respect to national defense does not mean that we have got to just take a bill of this nature and try to amend it here without giving it more consideration than we are allowed by unanimous consent. Offhand it looks all right, but we must give consideration to the fact that if the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is accepted, it will make a permanent law of this, as the gentleman from Kentucky has suggested. Do we want to invest the Secretary of War with discretion to advance officers in the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps without examination?

What about the politics in the Army? We all know there is a great deal of politics in the Army in respect to promotions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In all the other branches of the Army the officers coming up for promotion are not required to take any professional examination. This is not a discrimination against them, therefore. This is merely allowing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to treat medical officers as they come up for promotion in the same way that infantry, cavalry, field artillery, and ordnance officers are treated today.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The other officers are classified and they come from one class to another as there is a demand for them. This would allow the Secretary of War to take a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps and nominate him for a generalship if he wanted to.

Mr. MAY. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Subject to confirmation, of course, by the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; he cannot do that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Without any confirmation whatsoever. I think we had better look this over.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman, of course, has been discussing the question of economy here in connection with Indian claims. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that if this bill goes through it will amount to a vast saving to the Government by the elimination of the sessions of these boards and these examinations, both physical and mental?

Mr. WOLCOTT. We are going to spend something like eight or nine billion dollars this year for defense, and I guess cutting out the meetings of a board here to pass on the qualifications of certain officers will not be too much of a saving in view of what we are going to spend on national defense. I would not be justified in letting this bill go through merely on the assumption that we are going to save the time of somebody down there in the Department. They are all on salary, anyway, and do not get any more for these examinations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan, referring back to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, if the gentleman from Michigan has any objection, in the event the bill is passed, to inserting a semicolon at the end of the first paragraph following the word "examination," and saying:

Provided, That original appointments in the Medical Corps of the Army shall be made from among graduates of reputable schools or colleges of medicine or osteopathy, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is already the fact.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know whether osteopaths are included at the present time.

Mr. MAY. Yes; they are. They are included in legislation passed by this Congress.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under date of June 27, 1940, Maj. Gen. E. S. Adams, The Adjutant General, states:

Replying to your letter of June 18, 1940, there is no law or regulation permitting the commissioning of osteopaths in the Regular Army.

Mr. MAY. That was written into the recent bills we passed, both the National Guard bill and the soldiers' and sailors' civil-rights bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under bills which are now law, then, they could select officers from the profession of osteopathy?

Mr. MAY. That is right; just the same as the others.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is positive of that?

Mr. MAY. I wrote it into the bill in conference myself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was not informed on that, and I understood that it is not permissible at the present time.

Mr. MAY. If the gentleman will examine the law, he will find the word "osteopath" in it, if I am not desperately devoid of memory.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With respect to the process of promotion in the Medical Corps, may I say that officers in the Regular Army Medical Corps must be graduates of recognized medical institutions; and the gentleman from Kentucky has just explained that that field has been widened. They are commissioned as first lieutenants, not as second lieutenants, on the theory, which is proper, I believe, that they spend so many of their early years going through medical schools that they have reached an age that, when commissioned, they should be commissioned as first lieutenants instead of second lieutenants.

Mr. MAY. That is right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the promotion law proceeds to state that they shall be promoted on the basis of length of service in grade from then on, not on a seniority list for promotion. A first lieutenant of the Medical Corps who has served 5 years—I think it is—comes up for promotion to the rank of captain. This bill would merely give the Secretary of War the discretion to suspend the professional examination; that is all. It does not increase the number; it does not give any power to the Secretary to hasten promotions; it does not promote anybody except in accordance with that time schedule.

Mr. MAY. It does not discriminate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am humbled by the information which the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Kentucky have in respect to military affairs. I will surely bow to their will in this respect. I do think, however, that we should be forewarned that there might be an opportunity for doing the thing we want to guard against in promotions in these services.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from New York this question: The gentleman would not want this to be permanent legislation; therefore, would the gentleman object to inserting ahead of the language of his amendment a date, say January of some subsequent year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I speak for myself alone, and I probably should have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the members of that committee, but I should be satisfied if this discretion could be exercised by the Secretary of War during a period of time which we might consider reasonably to cover the mobilization and the maintenance of this new Army, which, under the selective draft law, is 5 years.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAY. I may say that we discussed this very question at length in the committee and the bill itself provides for the time of the present emergency or some future emergency which would mean, of course, that the legislation may terminate in 1 year or 2 years.

Mr. CHURCH. Yes; but I understand from the gentleman from New York that we are going to strike that language. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is before the House and now I am asking him if he will not insert ahead of his amendment the words "until January 20, 1945," or "January 20, 1943."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would suggest in that respect May 15, 1945, which is the date of the expiration of the selective-service law.

Mr. CHURCH. Then the gentleman would accept that amendment to his amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would; yes.

Mr. CHURCH. Then if the gentleman's amendment is adopted there will be no objection here. That is the parliamentary situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The parliamentary situation is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am willing to withdraw my objection if the gentleman from Kentucky is willing to liberalize the bill to that extent.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from New York has suggested an amendment to which I shall agree.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And I withdraw my objection and offer the amendment referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in time of war or during an emergency declared by Congress, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, dispense with any part of the examination for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps, except those relating to physical examination.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: Page 1, line 3, after the word "That", insert "until May 15, 1945", and strike out the remainder of line 3, down through the word "Congress" in line 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair might appropriately invite the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that a similar Senate bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill (S. 4224), and shall ask to substitute the House bill, as amended, for the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the provisions of H. R. 10278, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CHEROKEE INDIAN NATION OR TRIBE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3133, for the relief of the Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,185.72 with interest at 5 percent from June 30, 1919, to the date of the appropriation of the said sum herein authorized, which sum was appropriated by the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat., pp. 21, 22), and by the terms of said act was required to be "credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund," a trust fund bearing interest at 5 percent, but which said sum was erroneously deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipt, by miscellaneous receipt covering warrant No. 122, as of August 14, 1919.

When appropriated said money shall be credited to the Cherokee school fund and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said money to the surviving attorneys of the Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe selected by them in pursuance to the act of March 19, 1924 (43 Stat., p. 27), to reimburse in part said attorneys for expenses heretofore incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the claims of the said Cherokee Indian Nation or Tribe, brought under said act of March 19, 1924, in the name of "The Cherokee Nation against the United States."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SNAKE OR PIUTE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1432, authorizing the Snake or Piute Indians of the former Malheur Indian Reservation of Oregon to sue in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

CORONADO INTERNATIONAL MONUMENT, ARIZ.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4130, to provide for the establishment of the Coronado International Monument in the State of Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill, first, as to the cost to the Government if this bill is enacted; the annual upkeep; and if it is not true if this bill be enacted it would permit not only grazing but prospecting and mining in the proposed Coronado International Monument?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first item of cost there has been appropriated in another bill $10,000 to establish the monument at that point on the international border where Coronado crossed into Arizona 400 years ago this spring. No further appropriation will be required, unless perchance it be for upkeep. The proposal, however, is that the actual monument be of such nature that no appreciable amount of upkeep will be required.

In regard to the last question asked, yes; this bill does provide that in such national monument the area will be open to grazing and also to prospecting and mineral development. That ideal is only fair and just to the pioneers who dwell in that area. Part of the proposed area now is public domain. Some of it is in the national forest. Our stock people wish to graze on that land. It is excellent for that purpose. Our mining men wish to prospect for mineral on that land, and if there is mineral there we feel they should have the privilege of prospecting.

This is not a new principle. We have extended the right of grazing and mineral prospecting on other public lands and national forests and Indian reservations. The idea has my concurrence. I believe in it.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman mentioned the other bill. Does the gentleman know that bill by number and does that bill modify the provisions of this bill in any way with reference to the provisions herein with regard to grazing, prospecting, and mining in this monument area?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. My bill is identical with the Senate bill. The Senate bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman put into the record the number of the other bill?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. We are now considering S. 4130.

Mr. CHURCH. That is correct. The other bill you mentioned appropriates $10,000. You mentioned the provisions in that. For the purpose of the RECORD I would like to know the number of that bill.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I cannot recall it offhand because we passed that bill in the first session of this Congress. It was a bill which provided for an appropriation to carry on the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the coming of Coronado. That was passed in the spring of 1939. This bill merely provides a little more definitely for the suitable carrying out of the intent and purposes of the original appropriation.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, on account of the change in policy in this bill, in that it is provided that in this park area there may be prospecting and mining, I believe that is of such importance that we should not take up time on the Consent Calendar, and I am constrained to object.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SIUSLAW NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1433, to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands conveyed or relinquished to the United States, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195), the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, approved April 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 115), or the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (50 Stat. 522), within the western Oregon land project, situated in Lane, Lincoln, Tillamook, and Yamhill Counties, Oreg., are hereby added to and made parts of the Siuslaw National Forest, Oreg., and shall hereafter be subject to the rules and regulations applicable to national-forest lands acquired under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended, but special provisions included in conveyance of title to the United States, valid and subsisting at the date of this act and thereafter legally maintained, shall not be affected by this act: Provided, That this act shall not affect any revested Oregon and California railroad grant land, title to which has not passed out of the United States, or any public-domain land which is not embraced in relinquishments purchased under the acts hereinbefore mentioned.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISPOSAL OF TOOLS AND EQUIPMENT ON THE NEW ENGLAND HURRICANE DAMAGE PROJECT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3991, to authorize the disposal of tools and equipment on the New England hurricane damage project.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon completion or discontinuance of the Federal Government's work in rehabilitating and reestablishing forest-protection improvements and in the reduction of forest-fire hazards in the various towns or other political subdivisions of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut under appropriation for New England hurricane damage in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the respective States so much of the fire protection and improvement tools and equipment, purchased from said appropriation for said work for use in the respective States, as in his judgment may be needed for continuance of said work and forest-fire protection by said States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT, 1938

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 4311, to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subparagraph (E) of paragraph (13) of subsection (b) of section 301 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is amended so as to provide for the determination of farm normal yields for corn, wheat, and cotton on the basis of the same period of years used in the determination of county normal yields for those commodities, by striking out in the first sentence thereof the words "with respect to which such normal yield is used in any computation authorized under this title" and by substituting in lieu thereof the words "in which such normal yield is determined."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RENTALS IN OIL AND GAS LEASES

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to Calendar No. 931 (H. R. 10402) to amend the act relating to rentals in certain oil and gas leases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that is the Horton bill, is it not?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I objected to that previously because of the fact that I thought it had some influence on the submerged tide lands of California. I find I was in error, and at this time I wish to withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan to return to the bill H. R. 10402?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to rentals in certain oil and gas leases issued under authority of the act of February 25, 1920, as amended, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1940, is amended by striking out "second and third" and inserting in lieu thereof "first and second."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10543) to make the excess-land provisions of the Federal reclamation laws inapplicable to the lands of the Washoe County Water Conservation District, Truckee storage project, Nevada, and the Pershing County Water Conservation District, Nevada.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the purpose of the bill?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. In areas of high altitude and early frosts where hay for livestock is the chief crop, it has been found very difficult to limit one person's holdings to 160 acres as an economic unit. There is a precedent for enactment of this bill, a very similar situation—that of the Colorado-Big Thompson project. This bill is modeled after the exemption of that area from the 160-acre limitation, which is in the act of June 16, 1938, Fifty-second Statutes at Large, page 764. This act permits one person to hold more than 160 acres of land, under an irrigation project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the excess land provisions of the Federal reclamation laws shall not be applicable to land in the Washoe County Water Conservation District, Nevada, irrigated from the Boca Reservoir, Truckee River storage project, Nevada, nor to the Pershing County Water Conservation District, Nevada, irrigated from the Humboldt River Reservoir, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into a contract with said districts, amending, in accordance with this act, the contract of December 18, 1936, between the United States and the Washoe County Water Conservation District, and the contract of October 1, 1934, between the United States and the Pershing County Water Conservation District.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], under the special order of the House heretofore entered, is entitled to recognition at this time for 20 minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

THE UNIFICATION OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, now that the bickering of the Presidential campaign has subsided, I believe that all the bitterness, all the wanton waste of words that may have left scars should be wiped out. We are approaching a great holiday season, and I say that we should reap the spirit of the glorious Christmastide and instill into all hearts the thought of "peace on earth, good will toward men," so that when the Seventy-seventh Congress convenes on January 3, 1941, we shall be able to work together for a more prosperous and a stronger United States of America.

The thought of every American should be for unity, and I address this not alone to my colleagues but to the Nation and to my constituents of the Ninth Congressional District of Pennsylvania. Let us forget for the time that we are Republicans and Democrats and remember that we are Americans first, last, and always. In this way we shall be able to work together for the common good of all of our 132,000,000 American people, with malice toward none, and with the future of a united country as our goal.

Certainly we have our differences. No individual, nor group of individuals, can agree upon every question. But from our differences can come constructive criticism, so long as one single individual or group does not attempt to usurp all of the power and instead respects the ideas of the minority. It was upon such principles that the foundation of our great Republic was laid, and upon these principles we have, in little more than 150 years, become the greatest nation in the world.

There are many problems before us as we look toward the new year, and they must be solved if we are to continue to be the greatest nation on earth. They will be solved if we respect the American tradition of loyalty toward our leaders, with intelligent opposition from the people should the leaders err, and the following of the principles embodied in our Declaration of Independence, our Constitution, and our Bill of Rights.

We cannot have class pitted against class and hope for a future of peace and prosperity for America. Therefore it is highly necessary that labor and industry, agriculture, business, and government work hand in hand to bring about the strengthening of our national defense and the restoration of our economic prosperity.

The question of our defense remains the paramount issue as we approach the convening of the Seventy-seventh Congress. It is not a question of where to place the blame for the lack of preparedness in the past, but a question of uniting so that together we can build that defense to such a strength that all nations will respect us, and in the shortest possible time. The Government must relieve industry from the burden of restriction through objectionable kinds of taxes and bureaucratic regulation, so that the leaders of business and industry will be able to speed the production of the equipment needed to make the defense of America impregnable. Thus the Congress must provide legislation which will not strangle private enterprise but will help it create the employment we need. For we must remember that although the heads of our military forces must advise us as to the needs for our defense, it is up to private industry to supply them. This is a tremendous task, and it cannot be accomplished when Federal regulation and control, impede the turning of the wheels of industry and the humming of mill and factory.

The cooperation of labor is vitally needed. It has come to my attention since the national-defense program has begun that a number of strikes have shut down plants engaged in defense work. I have viewed with concern the strikes that have hampered the vital work of the airplane factories in the State of Washington, the shipyards in New Jersey and Maryland, the building of cantonments for the housing of our soldiers at Fort Dix, N. J., and most recently in the Vultee airplane factories in California.

When every minute and every hour is so vitally important to the safety and security of all America, I believe that it is just as essential in case of grievances—especially in matters pertaining to national defense—that labor sit around the conference table to adjust its problems. From such unity there shall arise that defense which will be the greatest insurance for a lasting peace for our country.

Second in importance only to the defense program is that of economic recovery. We know that we still have great numbers of unemployed and partially employed people in the United States who are yet enduring privation and distress. It is necessary that this situation be corrected in order to insure our peace as well as our prosperity, for threats from within come from fear and dissatisfaction, and when we rid our Nation of its distress we will accomplish the elimination of the seedbeds of hate and subversive activities. The Seventy-seventh Congress must provide legislation to bring this about.

This can only be accomplished through unity, through such loyal opposition as cited by Wendell Willkie in his recent address following his defeat for the Presidency. It is necessary that we give our wholehearted loyalty to the President, but at the same time we must weigh all legislative proposals with critical judgment, reserving the right to disagree and to present opposite viewpoints. In this way we shall be truly representative of all of the people of America, signifying our unity at the same time that we signify our inherent right to think and to speak for ourselves. Upon this base we built our Republic, and our national unity and the preservation of our representative democracy at this great moment in the history of human liberty depends upon the continuation of such alert watchfulness over the American way of government.

The farmer plays an important part in the domestic picture. He has been the "forgotten man" for many years, and he still remains without the measure of prosperity which is his due despite the many schemes fostered and the experiments attempted in the past years. I sincerely believe that the convening Congress in January should immediately consider the McNary-Haugen type of plan, which, to my mind, is the solution to the problem of the farmer.

This plan provides that the American farmer receive the cost of production price for the amount of more than 70 farm products sold in the domestic market. It provides further that any surplus will be sold to foreign markets at the world-market price. It also provides that no competitive farm products can be brought into this country from foreign soil unless a tariff of 10 percent above the domestic cost of production price is placed upon them. This will insure the domestic farmer of his American market. It will make him once again the captain of his own soil, a self-reliant, dependable, and prosperous producer. And, lastly, it will prove to be a means whereby the saving to the Federal Government will be one real step toward the balancing of the national Budget, for through its program the Department of Agriculture in the fiscal year of 1939–40 spent more money than any other department of the Government.

And let us not forget that when the farmer is prosperous everybody else is prosperous. The farm group represents one of the largest single groups of people in America, for almost 30,000,000 people depend upon agriculture for their livelihood. When the purchasing power is restored to so large a number, they will buy the things that are produced by mill and factory, they will engage the services of professional people, and this will be a long step toward the banishment of the depression which has been with us the past 10 years.

As we move into a period in which we need unity more than ever before, and when we work to achieve a unified America, let us not forget that to the south of us are 21 countries which are becoming increasingly important to our own present and future. We are duty bound, under the Monroe Doctrine, to protect and defend these countries. Our national defense, therefore, is also the defense of Latin America. I say to you that the little nations of Europe, such as Holland, Belgium, and Poland, would have been mighty glad to have had the protection of a Monroe Doctrine and a big-brother nation when they were overrun by the dictators. The Latin American countries should think of this, and they should show their gratitude to us for the security we afford them. Their return for this protection, I believe, should be a willingness to purchase as much of the commodities they need, and which we can supply, from us.

We use 90 percent of all that we raise and manufacture, and thus we are 90 percent self-sufficient; but we could export much of the remaining 10 percent to the South American countries and insure for ourselves, and for them, a united continent of self-sufficient and neighborly peoples.

In the early part of this year representatives of the United States and of these countries met at Habana for the purpose of studying this problem. The outcome of this meeting was that the Congress voted to increase the capitalization of the Export-Import Bank by $500,000,000, this money to be loaned to the Latin American countries to aid in the building of their defense and in the development of their countries. Twenty million dollars of this money, which comes from the pockets of the American taxpayer, has already been advanced to Brazil for the building of a steel plant. I do not believe the money should be expended in this way; I do not believe we should advance them money to build factories for the manufacture of products which compete with our own, for this will, in the end, only rob the American worker of millions of hours of man-hour labor. I do believe we should loan them the money to develop rubber plantations, to cultivate hemp, to mine manganese, nitrates, tin, antimony, zinc, and other of the strategic materials and minerals which we need but do not produce here.

These are a few of the important problems which the assembling Congress will face in January. I am sure we have, in our program of national defense, our needed unity, for it is a problem outside the realm of politics. But politics likewise must be adjourned from the problem of our economic security. We must rather unite in our energies, our courage, and our sincerity so that we can be of usefulness to the future of America.

Aside from the foremost issues of defense and recovery, we must act for the public good in many other ways. We must alleviate the conflict between the rights of man and the authority of government, and for this reason the Walter-Logan measure should be speedily passed. This measure does not attempt to limit the scope of government, nor to reduce governmental authority, but it does provide that wherever an agency of government attempts to exercise power over a citizen, that citizen shall have the right of an appeal to the courts. This will guarantee constitutional rights of every citizen and prohibit any Government agency from being the judge of its own case. I believe it proper, for I believe that the people of America would rather trust their liberty, their rights, and their interests to our courts which have functioned worthily since the founding of our great Nation, than to countless bureaucrats who issue rules and regulations, and soon come to regard themselves as a law unto themselves, safe from interference by the courts and by the Congress.

We must also improve upon the present social security legislation in order to provide for the aged who do not come under the present laws, and assure them security in the evening of life.

We must pass legislation to provide compensation for the widows and orphans of the veterans of the last World War who are not receiving compensation under the present laws. The House, in this present session, passed by an overwhelming majority a measure which provided a small pension for the needy widows and dependents of these veterans, but the bill has lain dormant in the Senate. I believe that if the Senate fails to act upon the measure in these waning days of the Seventy-sixth Congress, it should be enacted into law by the new Congress which convenes in January.

With these and other measures we must work to solidify the greatness of America into something material for all of our people of all ages. We must insure for ourselves and our posterity, through the work of the next Congress and the unification of our 132,000,000 people, an America which will go on to greater heights as the greatest Republic in the world—one Nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short article from the national magazine of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein two short quotations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my unequivocal opposition to the proposed adjournment of this Congress, either today, tomorrow, next week, or at any time during this period of grave emergency.

It has been said that there is nothing for Congress to do. That has been said before. In a press conference on June 4 and in a press conference on June 11 the President said he could see no reason for Congress to remain in session except for the laudable purpose of making speeches. I shudder to think what would have been the state of our national defense had we complied with the President's wishes last June.

Since that time we have authorized a two-ocean Navy. We have authorized an expenditure of around $7,000,000,000 for defense purposes. We have increased the lending capacity of the Export-Import Bank by $500,000,000 in order to aid the countries of the Western Hemisphere. We have passed the Alien Registration Act. We have authorized the mobilization of the National Guard and Reserve Corps. We have inaugurated a military-training program. We have enacted a so-called excess-profits tax bill. We have amended our patent laws with a view to protecting inventions valuable to our defense. We have given the N. A. C. A. additional authority and it has been making commendable progress.

In short, Mr. Speaker, since the President suggested that Congress adjourn last June we have inaugurated the defense program. Much remains to be done. Tomorrow may be too late. We are living in a grave hour of fast-moving, unpredictable events. In this hour we must recognize our responsibilities and unselfishly perform our duties.

It would indeed be pleasant for each of us to return to his home, to be with his home neighbors and friends. I have no doubt that the young men entering the training camps and on the high seas would rather be with their families than hundreds or thousands of miles away. These young men recognize their duty and find joy in making sacrifices to perform that duty. Surely Members of Congress, too, who asked these boys to come to the aid of their country, are no less willing to make personal sacrifices.

No one here can rise in his place and seriously contend there is nothing more for Congress to do. Is it to be said that our whole duty is performed simply in passing bills the President recommends and in appropriating funds? The appropriation of funds is only a small part of our duty. We have the responsibility of seeing that the money appropriated is wisely spent.

As contracts are let and expenditures made, we should remain here to check continuously the progress being made. The Committees on Military Affairs, on Naval Affairs, and on Appropriations should be constantly inquiring into various phases of the defense program. Or a joint committee of the Senate and House might be established for the purpose, not with a view to interfering with the work but rather with a view to keeping our people informed as to what is going on and to make constructive suggestions in the interest of efficiency. Practically all the information many Members have with regard to the progress of the defense program is what they may have gleaned from the public press or perhaps from a personal interview with departmental officials from time to time.

In our efforts to establish an impregnable defense for this hemisphere, each of us has something constructive to offer. Some of you may recall that as long ago as March of 1938 three members of the Committee on Naval Affairs joined with me in a minority report on a naval bill. In that report we vigorously opposed the imposition, for the first time, of a limit on the number of aircraft the Navy may possess. We endeavored to emphasize the importance of aircraft.

Let me read a few paragraphs from that report. On page 5 you will find these words:

> The evidence before our committee emphasized the extreme flexibility of aircraft in the defense of the American Continent where aircraft can be available in either ocean within 24 hours.
> The Congress may also most profitably read the evidence before the committee as to the amazing advances in aircraft even in the past 2 years since the Inskip report was published. Each day witnesses new achievements by aircraft. * * *
> The proposed legislation now for the first time imposes a limit of 3,000.
> Yet England has just presented an air program providing 12,000 planes and placed air defenses on a parity with the Army and Navy in the amount of appropriations. This is in startling contrast to the American allocation although America seems ideally adapted to emphasize air defense.

When we wrote that report we were in the minority. Today we are in the majority. In 1938 the administration did not accept our view. Today our view is the administration's view. I only wish that the administration could have been convinced in 1938 that our suggested emphasis on aircraft was sound.

Just a few days ago we read the account in the public press of the destruction of three Italian battleships by British bombers in their raid at Taranto. Some of you will recall that only a few of us on the Naval Affairs Committee insisted that a battleship could be destroyed by aircraft. We were opposed in that view by the majority of the committee, by the Navy Department, and by the administration.

I mention these things not in the spirit of criticism. I mention them simply to point out that each of us, as individual Members of Congress, has something constructive to offer for the building up of an adequate national defense. We should remain in session in order that we may make our contribution.

Much remains to be done. If we adjourn we will be deliberately refusing to assume the responsibilities that are ours.

This morning's paper carries the story of a mysterious fire and unexplained explosion at two chemical plants in Pennsylvania. At Johnstown fire destroyed the plant of the Pennsylvania Chemical Co., which was engaged in filling a Government order for incendiary bombs.

This is only one of several successive explosions in important ammunition plants in the United States. We are confronted with the very serious problem of dealing with foreign agents in the United States, in dealing with the problem of sabotage. Are we to adjourn with this problem unsolved? Are we to adjourn without taking effective steps for dealing with this serious situation?

According to an Associated Press dispatch of November 15, our able colleague Congressman DIES has indicated that his committee will need $5,000,000 for next year if the extremely important investigation he is making is to be carried forward "as it should be." It is evident from the recent sabotage activities in our defense industries that the work of this committee should be enlarged, and we should remain here to cooperate with the committee in its work.

I say again, much remains to be done. Tomorrow may be too late.

National defense involves more than men and equipment. It involves more than enacting laws and making appropriations. It also involves placing our entire economy on a sound basis. We are confronted with a public debt of $45,000,000,000. It has been reported that the Secretary of the Treasury intends to ask Congress to increase the statutory debt limitation to $65,000,000,000 and to impose additional taxes.

We should begin to work on this problem today, not tomorrow or next week or at the next Congress opening in January. Tomorrow may be too late.

Our entire tax structure needs revision. I have stated that many times. We cannot simply continue to impose one tax and then another in a patch-quilt fashion. The Ways and Means Committee should proceed to hold hearings on the subject. It should proceed immediately to prepare necessary legislation for the raising of the revenue necessary to finance the defense program. We cannot continue deficit financing. And it is most important that the taxes imposed be levied equitably, in accordance with ability to pay and in accordance with our concerted efforts to stimulate production.

Throughout the country there is great apprehension about the future of our fiscal situation. We do not know what day inflation panic may set in. We cannot postpone until next session this impending problem. Tomorrow may be too late.

Moreover, there are a number of important measures pending on the House or Senate Calendars and pending in committees that should receive our immediate attention. I do not propose to enumerate all of them. There is, for instance, the Walter-Logan bill. It was reported by the House Committee on the Judiciary. It has passed the House overwhelmingly. It is pending in the Senate.

If we adjourn now, all that we have done in connection with this extremely important bill will come to naught. The measure will have to be reintroduced, again considered by the House Committee on the Judiciary, again voted on in the House, and again sent to the Senate.

Exactly the same situation exists in connection with the bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act. It has passed the House by a substantial majority and is pending in the Senate.

There is also the Ramspeck civil-service bill to extend the civil-service system. That measure has passed both the House and Senate and is presently pending in conference. If we adjourn, we undo everything that has been done in this bill toward extending the civil-service system.

Mr. Speaker, I say again, much remains to be done, and it is our duty to remain in session until it is done, until this period of emergency has passed. This is not a one-man government. This is a republic. We are representatives of the people. We have responsibilities and duties to perform. It is imperative that we prove ourselves able to discharge the tasks that are ours.

We might well weigh the words of Winston Churchill, now Prime Minister of England, in his speech in Parliament in opposition to the position taken by Chamberlain that Parliament should adjourn. He said:

> After all, we are passing through a period of very rapid daily change in Europe of the most disturbing character, and it does not seem quite right that Parliament should go away for 25 days as if nothing was going on and as if it had lost interest in matters which affect the whole future of this country. It is derogatory to Parliament, it seems to me, that it should be thought unfit as it were to be attending to these grave matters, that it should be sent away upon a holiday in one of the most formidable periods through which we have lived. I know that there is a certain undercurrent of derision of Parliament even among its own members, and a feeling no doubt among ministers "what relief it will be when we have got them sent about their business and we can get on with our work." That is exactly the idea which in other countries has led to the institution of dictatorships, the same process of impatience with the parliamentary machine which has swept it away and has led to its replacement by one-man rule.

During the 6 years I have been privileged to be a Member of this body I have repeatedly emphasized the importance of Congress. I have always opposed attempts to reduce Congress to a position of subservience. We must be ever mindful that we are servants of the people. We are their voice. If we permit Congress to fall into a position of subservience, the representative Government we cherish will cease to exist. The voice of the people will be stilled. We must not, we cannot, allow Congress to fall into disrepute. If we adjourn now, refusing to assume the responsibilities that are ours and refusing to fulfill our duties, leaving unfinished tasks behind us, we will have taken a step which may very readily be a step in the ultimate destruction of our Republic.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed adjournment of Congress touches on the very future of democracy. Elsewhere in the world legislative bodies have been reduced to a mere functionary of the man at the head of the government. Elsewhere in the world legislative bodies have come to be meaningless and without purpose. We must not allow that to happen here. It will happen unless we can demonstrate that we have a purpose and that we can and will fulfill that purpose.

I repeat, for I cannot emphasize it too often: We must not adjourn. Much remains to be done. Tomorrow may be too late. I earnestly solicit your consideration of the seriousness of the adjournment proposal as it relates to the future of representative government. I earnestly solicit your opposition to adjournment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman has made an extremely valuable contribution, and he has made a fine fight against adjournment, and I rise to ask the gentleman if he does not think it is rather absurd to believe that we cannot meet, even if we do not meet in this Chamber? There is the caucus room; there are other rooms in the Capitol; and there are big Government auditoriums in Washington where the Congress could meet, if necessary. So the repairing of the roof of the Capitol does not constitute a real necessity for the adjournment of Congress, even if there is danger that the roof may fall upon us. I trust it will not be used as an excuse to adjourn.

Mr. CHURCH. I agree with the gentlewoman from Massachusetts. Even if there is danger of the roof falling, this Congress can meet somewhere else.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. In England the people are carrying on in dugouts. I think the Congress of the United States, in view of the economic chaos and the international difficulties in which we find ourselves, can find some place to meet, and that meeting place need not be a dugout. But the Congress certainly should remain in session, even if we did have to meet in a dugout. These are extremely critical times in the history of our country, as the gentleman knows. I am as utterly and entirely opposed to the adjournment of the Congress as he is.

Mr. CHURCH. I thank the gentlewoman for her contribution.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. Has there been a statement to the effect that we should vacate this Chamber because of the dangerous condition of the roof? Has there been a statement to that effect?

Mr. CHURCH. Let me yield further to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, who is on her feet and who just referred to the roof situation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have read articles in the newspapers which state that the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. David Lynn, said it is not safe for us to meet in the House Chamber, that the roof may fall at any moment. Of course, we have been meeting all during the summer, and I suppose it was perfectly possible for the roof to have fallen during the summer.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is one of those who have been most attendant to her duties in this body, she has insisted that Congress remain in session. I recall that she opposed adjournment without enacting certain legislation desired by our veterans. Insofar as this roof matter is concerned, I think the powers that be are making much ado about this at this time, simply to provide themselves with an excuse to have Congress adjourn.

Mr. STEFAN. I am not criticizing what the gentlewoman from Massachusetts said regarding the roof. On the contrary, I wish to confirm what she has said. The Architect has made some statement to our Committee on Appropriations that the roof is in dangerous condition. Should we have a heavy snowfall we may have a repetition of what happened here in Washington some years ago when the roof of a theater caved in, killing many people. Certainly the gentleman does not mean to imply that the Congress wants to adjourn just because we have some dangerous construction in the Capitol Building?

Mr. CHURCH. I never intended to convey that impression, but I do think the administration would like to use this as an excuse for its efforts to have Congress leave Washington.

Mr. STEFAN. That is not the reason for adjournment. I compliment the gentleman on his very fine address. [Applause.]

SENATE

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1940

The Senate was called to order by the Secretary, Edwin A. Halsey.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, whose gift is length of days, who dost apportion our work according to our strength: As Thou hast pardoned our transgressions, do Thou sift the gatherings of our memory, that evil may disappear and only good may stand revealed. We call Thee holy, yet how poor is all our thought of holiness. Thy name is Love, yet how little we know of what Thy love may be. Come Thou to us in kindling thought, and open Thou our lips that we may praise Thee for Thy gifts, especially for Thy presence, for the love of friends, for new opportunities of service, and for joy in the growth and happiness of children. Grant us an ever-deepening sense of sympathy and understanding for those who bear the burdens of the world, and give to us, dear Lord, clear thought and quiet faith. Let the spirit of Thy peace abide with us through all the days to come, that we may feel Thee even as the wind upon our cheeks, as the tide about the shore, as a hand within our own. In Thy dear Son's name we ask it. Amen.

The SECRETARY. The Vice President being absent, and the office of President pro tempore being vacant by reason of the death of the late beloved Senator Key Pittman, of Nevada, the Secretary of the Senate, under authority of rule I, paragraph 2, has called the Senate to order.

We, the women of the Michigan State Grange, ask and plead with you, the President of the United States, and to the Michigan Congressmen of the United States to withdraw all entanglements leading to wars on foreign soils.

Further: We are willing to sacrifice our lives and fortunes to protect America, but we are unalterably opposed to sacrificing the lives of our husbands and sons to protect American interests or other interests in foreign countries.

We beg of you to act before it is too late and before we have become involved in a foreign war.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred the resolutions, with an accompanying letter, adopted unanimously at the meeting of the board of managers of the Sons of the Revolution in the State of New York, in New York City, on October 28, 1940, recommending to the Congress that there be submitted to the people of the United States a constitutional amendment forbidding Presidential tenure of office for more than two elective terms of 4 years each.

I am heartily in sympathy with the objectives sought by the members of this organization. I believe if the question could be submitted directly to the people on its merits, independent of the complications of a political campaign, the proposal, as set forth in a joint resolution I am introducing today, would be approved overwhelmingly by the American people. I think this is the time to give the question serious consideration. I shall do everything I can to secure the approval, at the earliest possible date, of the program contemplated in this joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter and resolutions will be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The letter and resolutions above referred to are as follows:

SONS OF THE REVOLUTION,
IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York City, October 29, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with the instructions of the board of managers of this society, I hand you herewith resolutions unanimously adopted at the board meeting held yesterday.

Your cooperation along these lines, we believe, will be a material contribution toward the stability and safety of our country.

I am,

Respectfully yours,

L. LIVINGSTON SANDS, Secretary.

Whereas from the beginning of our American Government until now there has existed an unwritten tradition against any President of the United States holding that office for more than two consecutive terms of 4 years each; and

Whereas by their acts and their writings the greatest of our American Presidents and statesmen, from Washington down, have warned of the dangers to our democratic form of government attached to unlimited tenure of office by the President; and

Whereas the breaking of that tradition, after 150 years of unquestioned acceptance by the people, would not only destroy the tradition forever but would establish a new precedent which is fraught with great danger to our form of government and therefore our liberty; and

Whereas we believe the tradition as such might, under conceivable emotional stress, be broken, except as it is embodied in the basic law of the land—the Constitution: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of managers of the Sons of the Revolution in the State of New York recommend to the Congress of the United States that there be submitted to the people of the United States a constitutional amendment forbidding Presidential tenure of office for more than two elective terms of 4 years each; and be it

Resolved, That the properly constituted officers of this society be, and they hereby are, instructed to present these resolutions to the proper authorities of the United States Congress.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks a copy of the joint resolution on this subject to be introduced by me, which is as follows:

(S. J. Res. 303, introduced by Mr. CAPPER November 19, 1940, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.)

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to terms of President of the United States

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. No person shall be chosen as President after the date this section takes effect who shall have held, or exercised the duties of, the office of President during the whole or any part of each of two separate terms.

"SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 shall take effect on the 1st day of February following the ratification of this article.

EXTENSION OF SOCIAL SECURITY COVERAGE—AMENDMENT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to Senate bill 4269, and ask that it may be printed, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance. I also ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the amendment be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WAGNER to the bill (S. 4269) to extend the coverage of the Social Security Act with respect to old-age and survivors' insurance and unemployment compensation, to provide for a variable basis for Federal grants to States for old-age assistance, to amend the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 7, after line 19, and on page 17, after line 2, insert a new subdivision (5) as follows and renumber the succeeding subdivisions accordingly:

"Service performed in the employ of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing which is wholly owned by one or more States or political subdivisions, or any instrumentality or authority created and existing by virtue of legislative acts of two or more States, where the employee performing such service is a beneficiary, or a contributing member, or has an unrealized interest in, or is designated as a future beneficiary by the rules of, any pension, relief, or retirement fund established and maintained by authority of the constitution or statutes of a State, provision of a municipal charter, or ordinance of a municipality or other political subdivision: Provided, That such persons as are separated from said service without pension, retirement, or compensation award shall not thereafter be affected by the provisions of this paragraph."

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. WAGNER in conjunction with his amendment is as follows:

EXTENSION OF SOCIAL-SECURITY COVERAGE

The recent elections have established the objectives and principles of the Social Security Act more firmly in American life than ever before. Congress should now press forward, without delay, in the essential task of extending this act to the millions not now protected by its terms. To that end I propose to reintroduce in the next Congress, in perfected form, my bill S. 4269, which would extend coverage under the old-age and survivors insurance program to about 10,000,000 additional persons, including some 4,000,000 agricultural workers, 2,500,00 domestic servants, 750,000 employees of nonprofit institutions (excluding ordained ministers and members of religious orders), and 1,500,000 employees of States, counties, and municipalities not now covered by pension plans. In addition, the bill would cover under unemployment-insurance protection about 5,000,000 more workers, including those employed in establishments having fewer than eight employees.

As I have repeatedly stated, nothing in S. 4269 is calculated to repeal or interfere with the independent status of existing pension systems covering teachers, firemen, policemen, or other public employees to reduce the benefits thereunder or to turn over to the Federal Government the reserve funds of such systems. The bill was introduced at the request of the American Federation of Labor and is based squarely on their traditional principle of extending pension protection to those not enjoying it and safeguarding pension protection where it exists.

While there is no possibility of action on the legislation at this session, I am introducing an amendment at this time to reinforce this original objective and to express in concrete form my complete agreement in principle with the many individuals and organizations who have written or conferred with me in the matter and offered their valuable data and suggestions, including Mr. Joseph Burkard, president of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association of New York City and chairman of the national committee representing civil-service employees presently enjoying pension rights and privileges; Dr. Frank D. Whalen, chairman of the Joint Committee of Teacher Organizations of New York City; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; Dr. George Counts, president of the American Federation of Teachers; Mr. Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of the National Educational Association, among many others. The amendment, specifically and without reservation, exempts from coverage under the Social Security Act all public employees already protected by pension plans under State, county, or municipal auspices. In terms, the amendment would exempt all—

"Service performed in the employ of a State or any political subdivision thereof or any instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing which is wholly owned by one or more States or political subdivisions, or any instrumentality or authority created and existing by virtue of legislative acts of two or more States, where the employee performing such service is a beneficiary or a contributing member or has an unrealized interest in or is designated as a future beneficiary by the rules of, any pension, relief, or retirement fund, established and maintained by authority of the constitution or statutes of a State, provision of a municipal charter or ordinance of a municipality or other political subdivision: Provided, That such persons as are separated from said service without pension, retirement, or compensation award shall not thereafter be affected by the provisions of this paragraph."

The Social Security Board is now conferring with interested persons and groups in a study of the technical problems involved in perfecting this phase of the legislation. The social-security committee of the American Federation of Labor is also exploring the problem fully with its affiliated organizations at the convention now in progress. It is my hope that a final draft may be worked out upon the foregoing principle, with the approval of all public-employee groups concerned, in time for consideration early in the next session by the special subcommittee of the Committee on Finance established by Senate resolution to study changes in the old-age insurance provisions of the Social Security Act.

HON. CHARLES MCNARY,

Would greatly appreciate advice from you relative to proposed congressional schedule for remainder of session. I believe that the reasons for remaining in session which were valid before the election are even more valid now. I believe that critical world situation today makes it imperative for the Senate to remain in session so that they can become active on short notice.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 303) submitted by Mr. BYRD on August 26, 1940, as follows:

The special committee shall make such investigation of the manner in which the national defense program authorized by the Congress is being executed as it may deem appropriate for the purpose of obtaining such information as will enable it to make recommendations to the Senate, in the form of proposed legislation or otherwise, for action designed to expedite the execution of such program.

For the purposes of this resolution, the special committee is authorized, whenever it may deem such action advisable during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses—

(2) To employ clerical and other assistants;
(3) To request the departments and agencies (including the Council of National Defense and corporations owned or controlled by the United States) in the executive branch of the Government to which funds have been appropriated, allocated, or otherwise made available to be expended for any purpose connected with the national defense, to make weekly reports to the special committee with respect to the expenditure of such funds and other matters relating to the national defense;
(4) To require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents;
(5) To administer oaths;
(6) To take testimony;
(7) To make expenditures;
(8) To sit and act with any committee of the House of Representatives having functions similar to its own; and
(9) To make reports and recommendations, in the form of proposed legislation or otherwise, to the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think that resolution ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be passed over for the day.

MOUNTAIN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to a Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1681) to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert new provisions and to amend the title.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask a parliamentary question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is debatable.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Senator from Tennessee moved to consider this bill and has the bill become a proper matter of consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will rule that he has the authority to lay before the Senate at any time a message from the House of Representatives. Pursuant to that authority the Chair felt constrained to lay before the Senate the message coming from the House under paragraph 7 of rule VII.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I suggest that the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 107 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(i) Terms of the district court for the eastern division of said district shall be held at Jackson on the fourth Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September; and for the western division at Memphis on the first Monday in April and the first Monday in October.

SEC. 2. All provisions of law inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Is the pending amendment open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that it is.

Mr. DANAHER. I send to the desk a proposed amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report the proposed amendment to the House amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the House amendment, it is proposed to add a new section, to read as follows:

Power of appointment of all officers of the court in each of said districts shall be vested in the Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, anyone who has paid even scant attention in the turmoil which has prevailed——

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Will not the Senator state the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. DANAHER. I am about to do so.

Mr. STEWART. I shall be glad to hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator yield before he makes his statement?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this bill has been on the Vice President's desk for nearly 3 months. I think it is unfortunate that it should have been called up on a day when the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], who has taken a deep interest in the bill, happens to be ill and was compelled to leave a committee meeting this morning for that reason. I am sure that is only a coincidence, I hasten to say to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I have been trying without avail, until this good day, to secure action ever since the bill came back from the House. My intention has been known; I notified the Senator from Kansas of my purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Kansas is ill this morning and cannot be present, and I am asking the Senator——

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think, because one Senator who happens to be against the bill is absent, the measure should be held up.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I submit to the Senator, if the Senator from Connecticut will yield further——

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I submit that this is a little more than the absence of one Senator. The absence happens to be that of the Senator who has led the opposition to the bill, and, inasmuch as Congress is going to remain in session for the duration of the emergency anyway, I am wondering whether the Senator from Tennessee would not be willing to have the bill laid aside at least until we can communicate with the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not willing to have it laid aside, for the reason that the Senator from Kansas has incessantly objected to the bill from the time it was returned to the Senate by the House. I think on every occasion he has opposed it, and has not been willing that it be brought up, and now, possibly on the last day of the session, when it is in order to bring it up, and I gave notice that I was going to bring it up, I think it should not be postponed; I think the bill should be voted upon.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, the motion to concur in the House amendment has been in order at any time during the last 3 months, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has watched and has been ready to meet the question if such a motion were made at any time. I have also been interested in the bill. It could have been brought up at any time since it came over from the House. According to my understanding of the rule, it is a preferential matter; there was no objection to bringing it up at any time, and it was in order at any time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I happen to be familiar with what happened with regard to this bill, before the so-called recess of the Senate, and I think the facts should be stated. I have no particular interest in the bill. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] almost every day for weeks prior to the time when we started to take the 3-day recesses were insisting that the bill be brought up. The Senator from Kansas objected to its being brought up, and finally, at my own suggestion, the Senators from Tennessee, although reluctant about it, agreed that the bill should go over until after the recess, and should then be taken up. So, the reason why the bill has not been considered during the 3 months referred to by the Senator from Ohio was the objection of the Senator from Kansas, and his threat to speak indefinitely upon the bill if it were brought up. In order that that might be avoided, the bill went over until after the period of the 3-day recesses, with the rather reluctant consent of the Senators from Tennessee, but on the insistence of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Kentucky whether we are to have an opportunity to pass upon all the bills which it was agreed should go over until after the election.

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot tell the Senator about that, but I probably will be able to advise him more definitely later in the day. At least, I hope so.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I wish to propound a further parliamentary inquiry in order that the situation may be clear. I should like to ask whether or not the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, that the House provisions be substituted for the Senate provisions, is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable.

Mr. DANAHER. And if the amendment were not submitted as it has been stated, the pending question would be on the motion to substitute the House text for the Senate bill. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. The motion is to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The motion is to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. I understand, and I wish to make it clear what is before us.

Senators who have listened to the reading of the bill without having known the history back of it might wholly fail to realize that there is here undertaken a step which would strip an existing and sitting and senior judge of the prerogatives and powers of his office. It would substitute in lieu thereof a confirmation of those powers in a judge designated previously as a "roving" judge, for the sole and singular and particular purpose of transferring patronage from the senior judge of the district involved.

If the Senate of the United States is to engage in that kind of tactics, if we are to support that kind of action, after the measure has been before the Judiciary Committee and that committee reported the bill which the Senate previously passed, under circumstances such as those referred to by the Senator from Michigan, in the absence of the Senator from Kansas, I merely wish to call to the attention of the Senate what is involved. The amendment which I have submitted is one which would remove any question of patronage enjoyed by anyone, by any judge in the district, and would transfer the power to appoint officers of the court to the Chief Justice of the United States. If there is any Senator present who does not want to have the Chief Justice of the United States appoint the officers of the court, let him say so. But if we are to negate all existing laws and make special rules of law for the districts affected, then let us go the whole length, and put the appointing power in the Chief Justice of the United States, as to whom there can be no question.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I have concluded.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DANAHER. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator know of any other district in the United States where the power of appointment of court officials is vested in the Chief Justice of the United States?

Mr. DANAHER. No; I do not know of any. That is why I say that if we are to undertake corrective legislation of a sort which will negate all existing law and run counter to the law affecting the districts of Tennessee let us put the power in the hands of a man as to whom there can be no question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to make a motion which will take precedence over the motion submitted by the Senator from Connecticut, not in any sense challenging his motion but to make the preferential motion merely to clear the situation of what I think is its major vice at the moment.

I protest again the present consideration of the measure in the absence of the Senator from Kansas, who, as the Senator from Tennessee testifies, has led the battle against the bill for 3 months, who left a committee meeting this morning ill, and is unable to return at the present time. My only recourse in order to bring this phase of the matter to the attention of the Senate is to move to refer the House amendments to the Committee on the Judiciary, which I now do, and upon that question I asked for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan, on which he asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to speak in support of the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Some years ago the Senate provided for a roving judge in Tennessee. There are three districts in Tennessee, and the Senate provided for a roving judge to cover the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee. The judge was appointed, and has served since that time. So far as I know, the arrangement has been satisfactory.

In May of this year the Senate passed a bill creating a fourth, or middle, district in Tennessee. There was great controversy as to whether there should be a fourth judge in Tennessee. Personally, I think a fourth judge was unnecessary. This roving judgeship was to expire with the death of the incumbent. I think all the figures show that three judges are sufficient, and that three districts are sufficient. But the Senate passed a bill creating a fourth district.

The House refused to agree to the creation of a fourth district in Tennessee, and instead of the Senate provision they substituted the very peculiar bill which we are now considering, which provides that the roving judge shall be, in effect, considered judge of the eastern district of Tennessee, that he shall sit at Chattanooga, and shall have the right to appoint the court officials in Chattanooga in that general district.

Under the law as it has existed for many years, when there are two judges in a district, and there is any dispute as to the appointment of judicial employees, the senior judge makes the appointments. If the judges can agree, they should agree. With respect to these two judges, I understand there has been at least one Democrat appointed to one of the positions, and there has been an attempt at cooperation. I do not know all the facts. However, the attempt of this bill is to abrogate that rule which applies to every district in the United States where there are two Federal judges. There is such a situation, for instance, in the southern district of Ohio. The attempt of the bill is to abrogate the rule that the senior judge, whoever he may be, and whatever his party may be, shall appoint the judicial employees in case of a dispute, and to substitute for that a new rule, that a particular judge, the roving judge, shall sit at Chattanooga, and shall appoint at least half the judicial employees of that district.

The bill goes somewhat further, because it also makes that judge permanent. Under the bill the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate—

A successor or successors to said judge as vacancies may occur.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Ohio is mistaken in the statement he made with respect to appointing half the judicial officers of that district. Only a portion of the eastern district is put in the new district, and a part of the middle district is in the new district.

Mr. TAFT. But under the House bill there is no district. The House bill does not create a new district.

Mr. McKELLAR. In effect there is a new district, and the new judge will be given only the power of appointment in the new district.

Mr. TAFT. It is not a new district. The bill does not create a new district.

Mr. McKELLAR. The House thought it did.

Mr. TAFT. The Senate bill did, and that is why I think the bill ought to go back to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, because the bill establishes a principle, a new principle, which has never been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and it proceeds to say—

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent said judge—

The roving judge, the junior judge in the eastern district—

or his successors from becoming the senior district judge by succession, or from exercising the powers and rights of senior district judge of said district.

So that if the present senior judge should die, then this roving judge becomes the senior judge of the eastern district, and he has all the appointments. Of course, if the Republicans should come into power they would promptly introduce legislation similar to this, to give back this power of appointment to some junior judge the Republicans might appoint.

In other words, the bill throws the whole question of appointment of judicial employees into politics, where it ought not to be. For years the rule has applied that in case of dispute the senior judge of the district shall appoint the employees in his district. This is an attempt at special legislation for the eastern district of Tennessee, to abrogate that rule, and create a rule by which a junior judge shall have certain appointments, and the senior judge shall have certain other appointments.

Under those circumstances it seems to me obvious that this new principle which throws the whole judicial system of the United States frankly into open partisan politics, ought at least to be considered by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, which has never considered the principle, and which considered a wholly different principle in the bill which was originally submitted.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PROFESSIONAL EXAMINATIONS FOR PROMOTION OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4224) to authorize the discontinuance of professional examinations for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps during time of war or emergency declared by Congress, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert "That until May 15, 1945, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, dispense with any part of the examination for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps, except those relating to physical examination", and to amend the title so as to read "An act to authorize the discontinuance of professional examinations for promotion in the Regular Army of officers of the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the conference report on the civil-service bill must go to the House after it shall be acted on by the Senate, and inasmuch as it is a privileged matter, I suggest that the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] may be permitted to call up the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair intends to recognize the Senator from New York as soon as the matter now before the Senate shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was thought that that matter might consume some little time, and that the conference report to which I referred might be considered now.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to Senate bill 4224.

The motion was agreed to.

FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD NATIONAL STEAMSHIP COS.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Claims I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 327, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The resolution refers to the Court of Claims for study and report to the Senate a bill which has been before this body for some time and which has been passed and has been vetoed. It is necessary that all the evidence in the matter be gathered, and it is hardly possible for the Committee on Claims to do so. Under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1911, the Senate has frequently referred such matters to the Court of Claims for study and report to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 327, which aims to accomplish that purpose only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 327) submitted by Mr. DANAHER (for Mr. BARBOUR) on November 15, 1940, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4420) entitled "A bill for the relief of the First, Second, and Third National Steamship Cos.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and take such action as it may take in accordance therewith and report to the Senate; and also report specifically to the Senate (1) whether there were any sales of or valid contracts to sell the subject vessels to said companies, and whether the companies breached any contracts, and thereby damaged the United States Shipping Board to the extent of $384,256.26, or any part thereof; and (2) whether the payment to said companies on October 7, 1935, was a payment of all of the moneys due and owing said companies on account of the claims of said companies existing on December 31, 1925, notwithstanding any statute of limitations, laches, any release, settlement, accord and satisfaction, or prior adjudication; such report to be made by the Court of Claims, or action under this resolution to be taken by the court, so as to make its action and report during the first session of the Seventy-seventh Congress, if possible.

FRANCES FOLSOM CLEVELAND PRESTON

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in June the House passed a bill allowing to Mrs. Frances Folsom Cleveland Preston, the widow of former President Cleveland, a pension. She is the only living wife of a former President not drawing the usual $5,000 pension.

I have conferred with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the acting minority leader, and he is entirely agreeable that this bill be considered.

I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 9589, and that it be considered and passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have had this matter under consideration. I should be very pleased to have the bill acted on unanimously.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Pensions is discharged from the further consideration of the bill. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 9589) granting a pension to Frances Folsom Cleveland Preston was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, the name of Frances Folsom Cleveland Preston, former widow of Grover Cleveland, late a President of the United States, and pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 per year.

REGULATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is my purpose in rising at this time to move to proceed to the consideration of a bill which may take more or less time. The bill to which I refer is commonly called the Logan-Walter bill. As all Senators know, it relates to certain safeguards, checks, and balances on the executive departments of Government. The bill has already passed the House. I think every Senator is familiar with the purposes and objectives of the bill.

I understand full well the desire of Senators to adjourn and go home. I think no Senator has a greater desire to return home than I have, and I would not do anything to impede the adjournment of Congress. I am not one of those who feel that the Congress must remain in session to watch the President of the United States. I do not conceive that to be the duty of the legislative branch of the Government, but I do think the legislative branch of Government has a duty to perform. Its duty concerns legislation. To my mind there is no more important bill before the Congress than this bill, consideration of which I shall presently ask. It has been considered by committees of the Senate and of the House for more than 2 years. The House acted more than a year ago. The bill has been on the Senate Calendar with a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee. A similar Senate bill also has been on the calendar.

Months ago a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee was appointed further to study the House bill. On that subcommittee were the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and myself. We worked somewhat at length on the bill, and had the assistance of men who are experts in the subject of administrative law. We think we improved the House bill. At any rate, the Judiciary Committee has authorized us to offer amendments to the House bill when the bill is taken up for consideration, and we propose to do so.

Everyone is familiar with the fact that for more than a year we have tried to obtain consideration of the bill, at a time when there would have been no limitation on debate, and when the Senate was not busy. We realize that now may not be an opportune time to ask for consideration of the bill, but some of us believe that it is the only time we shall have; and, notwithstanding our desire to adjourn, notwithstanding our desire to go home, which is equally strong with the desire of any other Member of the Congress, we believe it is the duty of the Senate to act on the bill before we adjourn.

We do not wish to prolong the discussion. Those of us who favor the measure are perfectly willing, if desired, to have a limitation on debate of 1 day or 2 days. We have already agreed among ourselves that we will take no time in presenting or discussing the merits of the bill.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who has worked hard and long on this measure, is prepared to address the Senate today on the merits of the bill. At the conclusion of his address, so far as those of us who favor the bill are concerned, we are willing to have the Senate vote. If the opponents of the bill desire to discuss it, we are perfectly willing to have them make such discussion as they desire. We are not even asking the Senate today to vote for the bill—at least, I am not. The only thing I ask is that the bill be taken up and disposed of, one way or the other.

I know that many arguments have been made against the bill. One of them is that the President will veto the measure if it comes to him. To my mind that is not an argument at all. I have said on the floor, and I have said publicly many times, that our duty is one thing, and the President's duty is another. If we believe the bill should be passed, we ought to pass it. If the President believes it should be vetoed, he ought to veto it. That is the sum and substance of the whole matter in that regard.

I may say, without violating any confidences, that this morning I talked with the President about this particular bill, and the President expressed his sympathy with the objectives and purposes of the proposed legislation. He raised some objections to form and detail, but we discussed those matters, and I said to the President what I have said to the Senate—that if the Senate should pass the bill, and the President should think it ought to be vetoed, I should be the first to ask that he veto it. That is his duty and his function in our Government. Our duty is separate. Ours is to consider legislation and to vote either for or against it. That is all we ask. We ask that the motion be agreed to and that we have reasonable debate, and that at the conclusion of the debate Senators vote on the proposed legislation as they choose. If it is good legislation, vote for it. If it is bad, vote it down.

With that statement, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6324.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion subject to debate, and, if it is subject to debate, is the debate to be limited merely to the question of considering the bill, or may it deal with the merits of the measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to consider the bill during the morning hour is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in order that the Senator from Utah may proceed without any limitation on his right to debate, because I want the bill fully explained, I withdraw my motion to take up the bill, and the Senator may continue his remarks at this time. At the conclusion of the Senator's remarks I shall move to take up the bill. I want the bill fully explained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico withdraws the motion to consider House bill 6324. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken for a minute or so,

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am very anxious that Senators be present and hear the discussion of the Senator from Utah. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I observe that the hour is now past 2 o'clock. Therefore, I renew the motion previously made that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6324.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I understand that the motion is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair continues to recognize the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. KING having concluded, his speech is printed entire herewith.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] has indicated some of the preliminary steps which have been taken and which have resulted in bringing this measure to the Senate for consideration today. This bill, as indicated by the Senator, has been the subject of years of study and profound consideration not only by Congress but by many lawyers of ability and organizations in every field of business and industry. It bears the name of one of the ablest and most distinguished Senators who has occupied a seat in this Chamber. I should add that the able Representative from the State of Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] introduced and piloted through the House of Representatives a bill containing substantially the same provisions as the so-called Logan-Walter bill.

The bill offered by Senator Logan was studied for several years by the Judiciary Committee, and was given careful and earnest consideration, after which it was unanimously approved by the Committee on the Judiciary, and passed the Senate shortly thereafter. A motion to reconsider was submitted, and the bill was restored to the calendar with the express understanding that it would receive consideration at a later date during the session. Up to the present hour, efforts to secure consideration of the bill have been blocked, and there are indications that the consideration of the bill will be opposed and its passage, if possible, prevented.

First, may I pay tribute to our deceased colleague, Hon. M. M. Logan, Senator from the State of Kentucky, who for more than 2 years considered various proposals dealing with the broad question of administrative law. Senator Logan was a profound student of our Constitution and of our Federal Government. He did not accept the view which, unfortunately, is becoming current, that we do not have a Federal Government such as provided by the Constitution of the United States but a powerful National Government. He believed in constitutional limitations, and was unwilling that the States should lose their identity and be swallowed up by an increasingly powerful National Government. He believed in the tripartite division of governmental power and recognized the vital necessity of maintaining unimpaired the authority of the Federal judiciary. He looked with deep concern upon the gravitational forces which were not only undermining the authority of the judiciary but unduly expanding the power of the executive and legislative departments. He enjoyed the confidence of the people of the Commonwealth of Kentucky. He had served with distinction as attorney general and as a judge of the highest tribunal of the State, and came to the Senate armed and equipped—because of ability and integrity and knowledge of public questions and of problems of government—to render important service to the people of his State and of the United States. His death was a loss to Kentucky and to our country.

As I have indicated, the bill before us did not spring Jovelike from the brow of Minerva, but it was the product of days and months of serious and profound study upon the part of Senator Logan, members of the Committees on the Judiciary of the House and of the Senate, and of leading lawyers and students of constitutional government in various parts of the United States. It received the endorsement of the most eminent lawyers of the United States and is supported by patriotic organizations who believe in our form of government and who look with concern upon the radical elements and subversive forces and individuals and groups who seek to weaken our form of government and to establish a system of state socialism. It cannot be denied that there are groups who are opposed to the letter and the spirit of the Constitution—to the maintenance of judicial authority as provided in the Constitution of the United States. There are some in our midst who would strengthen the hands of the executive and others who would increase the authority of the legislative branch so that its declarations might not be subject to challenge or impeachment. There are increasing attacks upon constitutional government. With the growth of bureaucracy, the ramparts protecting State and individual rights, and the authority of the judiciary, are being assailed. Administrative absolutism stalks triumphantly through the land, and efforts to defend and protect the government which the founders of the Republic transmitted to us meet with strong and, too often, bitter opposition.

The so-called Logan-Walter bill has for its object the preservation of constitutional government. It seeks to maintain the limitations provided in the Constitution and to preserve the triparte division of powers so clearly set forth in the fundamental law of our country. The measure has also been assailed by groups who look with favor upon policies which lead to socialism. It is also urged by some that the bill before us has not been sufficiently studied. There is no foundation whatever for such contention.

For a number of years lawyers and students of our Government, and bar associations, as well as groups interested in good government, have looked with more or less concern upon the growth of bureaucracy and its growing encroachments upon the rights of individuals and of States and their political subdivisions. As I have stated, the bill before us has been subjected to a most critical examination from groups and individuals in every field of public and private life. The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate conducted hearings on a measure practically the same as the Logan bill which was offered in the Senate. These hearings continued from March 17 to April 5, 1939, and cover more than 100 pages of printed matter.

Briefs and statements were submitted to the committee of the House by representatives of the Federal Trade Commission, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Justice, the Department of War, and Department of the Treasury; also by the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Power Commission, and the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. Chester T. Lane, General Counsel of the Securities and Exchange Commission, appeared and testified, as did the Solicitor for the Department of Commerce; also the head attorney for the Department of Agriculture, the assistant legal adviser for the General Accounting Office, the secretary of the National Lawyers' Guild, and also a representative of the national organization of business mail users. In addition, an analysis of the bill was included in the record which had been prepared by the Brookings Institution. I should add that briefs were filed by bar associations of a large number of States. There was also a report submitted by a special committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association.

As I have indicated, seven of the executive departments of the Government presented evidence, as did six of the major regulatory commissions and boards. The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate held hearings upon a bill similar to the one before the committee of the House. The hearings before the Senate committee occupied 8 days and are found in the more than 210 pages of printed matter. The careful consideration given to the question of administrative procedure and administrative reform is revealed in the testimony which was submitted. I should add that there also appeared before the committee a representative of the Board of Tax Appeals; a member of the Brookings Institution; Prof. Harold J. Laski, of London University, who presented the English experience in connection with administrative law problems; the professor of administrative law of the Georgetown University; practicing attorneys from Portland, Oreg., New York City, and from Minnesota; a trial examiner from the Securities and Exchange Commission; and also Mr. Gregory Hankin. In addition, the committee heard Dean Roscoe Pound, an outstanding figure in the legal firmament, who presented valuable and important testimony with reference to the bill under consideration. The testimony of Dean Pound is so comprehensive that I hope all Senators will examine the same. At this point in my remarks I shall read a few excerpts from the testimony of Dean Pound:

> I have tried to present the case for committing this matter to the circuit courts of appeals, which is perhaps most important in what the board of governors of the American Bar Association has approved (S. 915). I will make this further suggestion: The idea in this plan was to try to utilize, as far as possible, and unify what we regard as a good feature of the present administrative practice, namely the intradepartmental board; to try to give it a legal and regular basis. It was thought and I think that would have this advantage: It would enable the administrative superior to really know who has done what is being done and how he has done it. There is a vast deal of irresponsibility in the present situation, which is illustrated by the Kansas City Stockyard case (the Morgan case). It is not always entirely clear to an administrative superior just who has done something, and how he has done it, and what the basis is. * * * if you had an administrative body which really formulated just what was done and why they did it, * * * in a good many cases you would not need judicial review, and it would operate more or less to require that to be well done. Whenever it is well done you have obviated a good deal of the need for review. I think the purpose that is involved in that provision (the provision for intradepartmental appeals) is first, to develop an organization under the existing practice; and second, to make better provision for the kind of record necessary for any effective judicial review, and to obviate the necessity for it as far as possible (pp. 180–181).

It is apparent from the foregoing that the contention that the measure was not fully considered is without foundation.

A subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary which conducted the hearings, favorably reported S. 915, the companion bill of what is known as the Logan-Walter bill, now before us. On May 17 of last year the Logan bill was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary without a dissent. H. R. 6324—the companion bill—was reported to the House on July 13, 1939.

In addition to the consideration given the bill by the congressional committees, it was studied and approved by the National Grange, the American Federation of Labor, the National Publishers' Association, the National Retail Druggists' Association, and the National Association of Manufacturers. And I should add that the subject of the bill has been studied and examined intensively by the American Bar Association since 1933. In 1936, following such intensive studies, successive drafts, based on prolonged and earnest studies from 1933 to 1936, were prepared and sent to every teacher of administrative law in a number of law schools, and to every lawyer throughout the United States who was believed to be informed and interested in the subject. Their studies and criticisms of the bill were requested. Appeals for studies, criticisms, and suggestions of the bar generally were published in the Journal of the American Judicature Society and the Journal of the Federal Bar Association.

Specific requests were addressed to all the judges of the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals. The responses were carefully studied, and such of the suggestions as were believed to have merit were worked into the final draft. The Special Committee on Administrative Law of the American Bar Association had the services at one time during its life of such legal students as Dean Roscoe Pound; Professor—and now Justice—Felix Frankfurter; Mr. John Dickinson, then Assistant Secretary of Commerce and later Assistant Attorney General of the United States; Walter F. Dodd, formerly professor of law at Yale, and a recognized authority in this field; and Louis G. Caldwell, formerly general counsel of the Federal Radio Commission, not to mention others of equal importance.

The measure has been studied and approved by more than 30 State bar associations.

It appears from the above, that the criticism to the effect that the bill has not been adequately studied is without foundation.

Another dilatory argument is frequently presented by those who would delay the passage of the bill; namely, that action on the pending bill should be deferred until the report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure is submitted. This contention, it is submitted, is likewise without merit.

In the first place, it should not require the examination of the promised forthcoming report to determine that hearings should be held before rules and regulations are promulgated. The holding of hearings has been adopted as the method for insuring fairness and impartiality in the adopting of legislation, and it has been followed by the committees of Congress since the creation of the Government. Hearings are held voluntarily by some Federal agencies before they promulgate regulations, especially of importance, and a few of the agencies are required by statute to hold them. The bill in this respect will merely provide uniform procedure for the giving of notice of hearings prior to the issuance and amending of rules and regulations. It is widely recognized that a hearing is essential to that sense of fairness in which the citizen must have confidence, and its importance has been stressed time and again by the Supreme Court. Surely the report of the Attorney General's committee is not needed before Congress can properly make a declaration that agencies shall hold hearings before they shall quasi legislate.

The Attorney General's committee recommendations are not needed in providing for uniform judicial review of final orders and decisions of the various administrative agencies. Dean Pound, in the testimony before the Senate subcommittee, stressed the confusion that exists today with respect to the judicial review of administrative action. That confusion is well known to legislators, attorneys, and students of administrative law. The citizen must choose between expensive methods of review when any review at all is available, and review is not available in many instances.

In addition, the scope of judicial review provided in the pending bill is merely a restatement of the jurisdiction which courts exercise over many agencies at the present time. Thus, orders of some of the important regulatory commissions, such as the S. E. C., the Federal Trade Commission, the N. L. R. B., the Federal Communications Commission, and so forth, may now be set aside if the findings are not supported by substantial evidence—which is a corollary of the provision in the Logan-Walter bill to the effect that an order shall be set aside if the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence—or if the decision is not supported by the findings, or if a fair hearing was not held, or if the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the Commission or is contrary to the Constitution or statutes of the United States.

One fallacy in the argument of those who oppose this bill lies in the fact that it is assumed that the judicial review which it provides is so broad as to obstruct the operation of the administrative agencies. This simply is not true. As indicated above, the scope of review is the same as is now exercised over many commissions' orders, and the purpose of the bill is to extend that jurisdiction to cases where it does not apply at the present and to unify the provisions with respect to judicial review. The bill does not, as is frequently maintained, provide for a substitution of the discretion of the court for that of the administrative agencies. The agencies are left as the fact-finding bodies; the substantive power and authority of administrative officers is in no manner curtailed. All that is provided is that these powers shall be exercised in a fair, impartial, and just manner. The findings of fact are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence, just as is the case today with respect to some of the agencies.

Therefore it is difficult to understand why the studies of the Attorney General's committee should be examined before a uniform judicial review provision is adopted—a review that restates to a large extent the review that is exercised by the courts at the present time with respect to the orders and decisions of various agencies.

Mr. President, the general purpose of the so-called Logan-Walter bill is to provide for judicial review of a large class of administrative rulings not now the subject of review, except by a bill in equity filed in the United States district court on the ground of such arbitrary action as violates the due-process clause of the fifth amendment.

PURPOSES AND GENERAL PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

While judicial review of the administrative action of various presently constituted commissions, such as the Federal Communications Commission, the National Labor Relations Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and the like, is already provided for, there is a vast category of administrative rulings in controversies of a civil nature between the citizen and the Government which have never been subjected to judicial review except by a bill in equity—a method itself highly unsatisfactory to the citizen because it goes only to such arbitrary action as violates due process.

Illustrative of the type of administrative action which is not now subject to judicial review is the licensing power of the Federal Government exercised through many different agencies; for example, the licensing power with respect to marine officers, airplane pilots, and fisheries.

To understand the necessity for judicial review of administrative action, it is desirable to go back to certain historical and legal fundamentals. There are fundamentally but two kinds of government; one of which looks upon the state as supreme and the citizen as a creature of the state, and upon law as that which the ruler or administrator does. This is the totalitarian—communistic, fascistic—concept of government and of law. Under this concept of government, no rights exist in the citizen; only privileges, extended by the state or the ruler and subject to withdrawal by such issuing authority. Under such a conception of government the state itself is subject to no law. Its will or the will of its ruling class or of its dictator is law.

To the contrary, under the Anglo-American democratic polity, the citizen is the source of government and of law. Government rests upon the consent of the governed, and there is an objective law, formulated through the citizen, to which both citizen and government are subject. In the citizen exist certain inherent fundamental rights which attach to his very personality. To protect and perpetuate these, he sets up government as an agency of his own; and to protect and perpetuate these rights he sets up also a body of law—including in the United States constitutional limitations upon the power of the majority to override the inherent rights of the individual, as a minority—to which both the citizen and the government, including the government official, are subject. In the totalitarian concept of government, the citizen in controversy with the government, is by definition and prearrangement at a disadvantage; but it is of the very genius of the Anglo-American polity that in controversies between the citizen and the government, the citizen and the government are both upon terms of equality under the law.

As there are but two possible fundamental concepts of government, so are there but two fundamental methods of administering government. One is by force and fear, the method of the dictatorship. The other is by consent of the governed through a voluntary obedience, prompted by a sense of moral obligation and prompted by confidence in the fairness of his government, on the part of the citizen. The latter method is the method of democracy. While, of course, even in a democracy there must be an ultimate element of potential force to deal with the highly recalcitrant lawbreaker, the vast and intricate machinery of law enforcement in a democracy is largely dependent upon the good will and voluntary conformity to law and obedience to governmental decisions by the citizen himself.

While concepts of government and of the administration of government and law divide themselves into two classes, as above set forth, all governments have two aspects in common, the characteristic of stability and the characteristic of flexibility. Any organism which is to survive, whether it be a natural organism, such as a plant, animal, or human being, or an organism like a state, must have these two characteristics or capacities in order to have both significance and survival. Stability is necessary to order. Flexibility is necessary to adapt the organism to inevitable changes in environment to which all life, whether natural or governmental, is subjected. And it is in the fine balance between the element of stability or order in the organism and the element of flexibility or change that the organism finds its identity and its survival.

It is as true in respect of governments as it is of individuals that the completely stable or orderly organism is dead and the completely changeable one is chaotic. There must be a balance between the element of stability or structure and the element of fluidity or change. Just as the human being must have a skeleton and substance of body tissue to give him structural existence and identity, so he must have a capacity for motion and adaptation, both mental and physical, in order to survive. A completely stable individual is a dead man. A completely changeable individual is an insane man. A normal individual possesses both of these characteristics of stability and change in fine balance.

Expressive of these two characteristics of a living governmental organism there are two aspects in its law and in the administration of law: Rule on the one hand and discretion on the other. It is through rule that order, equality, and uniformity in the treatment of the citizen and certainty in economic and social life is accomplished, and it is through rule that there is subjection of both the government and the citizen to an objective law, of which the whole body of citizens is the source. It is through the element of discretion in the administration of law that government obtains its flexibility, its capacity to adapt itself to swiftly moving events and swiftly changing conditions. Here again there must be, for a successful governmental organism, a due balance between the element of rule and the element of discretion. If the emphasis is too far upon rule, the result is a severity and rigidity in the administration of law which itself becomes intolerable; but if the emphasis is undue upon discretion, then the freedom of the individual is threatened, indeed may be lost, in the personal judgment of the administrator. Unrestrained discretion in the administration of law or government is typical of the king, and the democracy which unduly extends to its own officers discretion in the administration of law may find Demos itself a tyrant.

A further fundamental which must be borne in mind before a discussion of the subject of judicial review of administrative action is fully understandable is the difference between the substantive and the adjective law in relation to the administration of law and government.

Mr. President, a suitable analogy and significantly picturesque illustration lies in the great water systems of the West, where the water is collected in reservoirs and held there for irrigation. The water is conducted from the reservoirs in great canals, and from the canals to laterals, and then in individual ditches to the field of the farmer. The substantive law may be likened to the water; the adjective law may be likened to the canals, laterals, and ditches. If the water does not flow through these channels, it does not reach the particular land for which it is intended. The channels may, of course, be too many or too tortuous, and thus the water exhausted by evaporation before it reaches the land; but they also may be so few or so amorphous that the water never, with precision, reaches a particular tract; and if there are no channels, the water does not flow. To the channels may be likened the rules of procedure and of pleading. And to pursue the figure, if introduced into the channel, there is a strainer to take out of the water impurities, this may be likened to the rules of evidence, which select relevant and competent material for the trier of fact.

Bearing in mind that, as above pointed out, a governmental organism must have the characteristics of both stability and change, it is largely within the substantive law that the governmental organism adapts itself to its changing environment, economic and social. But it is largely within the adjective law that there is preserved to the citizen that uniformity and equality and fairness of dealing, sometimes characterized as due process, which is essential to his confidence in the fairness of his Government—essential, therefore, to his willingness to obey the law. Mr. Justice Frankfurter has well phrased this when he said:

> Remember, there are very precious values of civilization which ultimately, to a large extent, are procedural in their nature. * * * All tribunals, administrative, or judicial, have to inquire and examine before they decide. Historic experience lies behind the right to a day in court, and a full day.

It is common to look upon the procedural or adjective aspect of the law as technical, and yet it is easy to demonstrate that in its fundamentals it is the opposite of technical. For example, the function of findings of fact required of trial judges and trial commissioners is far from technical. On the contrary, findings of fact are the watchdogs which guard the citizen in his controversy with the Government—or, indeed, guard the citizen in his controversy with the citizen in the courts—and insure against star-chamber methods. Findings of fact insure to the litigants and to the reviewing tribunal that the conclusions reached by the trier of fact are based upon the evidence submitted in the controversy, rather than upon extralegal considerations. This has been pointed out in Saginaw Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Communications Commission (96 F. (2d) 554, 559, 68 App. D. C. 282, 287 (1938)):

> The requirement that courts, and commissions acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, shall make findings of fact is a means provided by Congress for guaranteeing that cases shall be decided according to the evidence and the law, rather than arbitrarily or from extralegal considerations; and findings of fact serve the additional purpose, where provisions for review are made, of apprising the parties and the reviewing tribunal of the factual basis of the action of the court or commission, so that the parties and the reviewing tribunal may determine whether the case has been decided upon the evidence and the law or, on the contrary, upon arbitrary or extralegal considerations. When a decision is accompanied by findings of fact, the reviewing court can decide whether the decision reached by the court or commission follows as a matter of law from the facts stated as its basis, and also whether the facts so stated have any substantial support in the evidence. In the absence of findings of fact, the reviewing tribunal can determine neither of these things. The requirement of findings is thus far from a technicality. On the contrary, it is to insure against star-chamber methods, to make certain that justice shall be administered according to facts and law. This is fully as important in respect of commissions as it is in respect of courts.

It is sometimes thought, especially by laymen, that the procedural side of the law is not only technical but unnecessary. But, as indicated by the analogy above drawn, it is not only not unnecessary, it is inescapable. Indeed, the relationship between the adjective and the substantive sides of the law is identical with the relationship between form and substance throughout all aspects of life. Without substance, form has no content. Without form, substance has no significance. The technique of the sculptor or of the surgeon or of the chemist in dealing with, in the first instance marble, in the second human flesh, and in the third inanimate matter, is like the adjective law. No more can the physician carry into the field of therapeutics or the surgeon into the field of operation the substantive principles of medicine without a technique, than can the judge or the commissioner carry into the field of judicial or administrative controversy the substantive principles of law without a procedural or adjective technique. (Indeed, the analogy is significantly close when one bears in mind that even in the field of surgery there is an aspect of technique which may be likened to the rules of evidence, to wit, the process of cleansing the field of operation from extraneous pathogenic factors which would interfere with the normal recuperative process.)

The procedural or adjective side of the law in the Anglo-American polity has developed through centuries of experience, beginning in England and extending throughout the common-law world. Certain fundamentals, guaranties of fair hearing, are necessary to that confidence on the part of the citizen in the objectivity, uniformity, and equality in administration of law which is the predicate, and the necessary predicate, of obedience to law. One of the ultimate tests of the desirability of a governmental or administrative or judicial process is pragmatic: Does it satisfy the citizen that he is being dealt fairly with in controversies between himself and the other citizens, or in controversies between himself and the government? Ultimately, the success of the process in a democracy does, as above pointed out, rest upon the consent of the governed; and unless he is content with it he will not give support or obedience, but will exercise his right to change the government or the method of government which he regards as unfair. And so, ultimately, the success of administrative action, as well as of judicial action, in dealing with controversies between citizen and citizen, and citizen and government, rests upon conformity to the accepted procedural standards developed in the common law, to which standard the citizen, because they satisfy his sense of fairness, will give his allegiance and obedience.

The procedural aspects of fair hearing, sometimes characterized by the phrase "due process of law," are few and easily recognizable. One is that there shall be uniformity and equality in the application of the law. Another is that there shall be opportunity for a hearing of a public nature. Another is that there shall be opportunity for examination of the opponent's witnesses and documentary case. Another is that there shall be notice of the charges or claims of the opposite party, and opportunity of defense; and such reasonably precise definition of the issues of fact and of law as will enable the citizen to prepare his claim or defense. Another is that there shall be some due selection of the relevant material by application of rules of evidence, that is, facts relevant to the issues defined. Another is that all of the evidence upon which the decision ultimately rests shall be known to the litigants, and that the decision shall be rested upon that evidence, and not upon extrinsic or secret considerations. Another is that the citizen shall have a right to argue his case to the very mind or minds which have heard the evidence and are to adjudicate thereon. Another is that the person or persons who try the controversy shall be impartial, and shall guard themselves from partiality by attending, in a decision of controversies, only to the relevant facts and the pertinent rules of law, and by refusing to be influenced by extrinsic considerations or personalities.

These fundamentals of fair hearing are accomplished by the rules of procedure, the rules of pleading, and the rules of evidence. The rules of procedure give notice to the parties of each other's contentions, and provide for time to prepare and a place and a manner of hearing. The rules of pleading define the issues. The rules of evidence select the material relevant to the issues. The making of findings of fact and conclusions of law and the entry of a decree or order are again procedural, having to do with the manner of hearing.

It is to be reiterated that these fundamental adjective rules have been developed through centuries of experience under the common law in dealing with controversies between citizens and between citizen and government, and that a minimum of them is necessary to that sense of fair hearing that exists in the citizen in the common-law world as a predicate to obedience to the processes of law and government. It is to be noted, therefore, that so far as these minimum adjective guaranties of fair hearing are concerned, they are so fundamental as not properly to be subject to change. They are the product of experience, and they cannot be altered materially without so seriously affecting the relationship between the citizen and government in respect to his willingness to give obedience and allegiance to the same as to threaten the existence of government and the successful administration of law.

But, on the contrary, the substantive rules of law by which rights and duties are given recognition and definition are necessarily subject to change. It is as necessary that the substantive law be subject to change as it is that the adjective law be, in its essentials, certain and permanent, because it is through change in the substantive law that a government resting upon a consent of the governed adapts itself, to the satisfaction of the citizen, to the shifting conditions and aspects of economic and social life.

Attention to the history of the development of administrative agencies will illustrate and demonstrate the danger of departure from the fundamental proposition just announced, that the adjective side of the law, so far as the minimum safeguards of fair hearing are concerned, must not be changed; whereas the substantive law is a necessary subject of change. The workmen's compensation commissions of the States, and later the Federal compensation agencies set up under the Longshoremen's Act, will serve as an initial illustration. When they were set up, entirely new substantive concepts were substituted for the common-law ideas concerning rights and duties in respect of industrial accidents. The common-law substantive concept was one of no liability without fault, and one in which the liability of the employer was further hedged about by the rules of contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and the fellow-servant rule.

All these substantive concepts, including the fundamental substantive concept of liability only on fault, were swept aside in the setting up of the workmen's compensation commissions; and for them were substituted the theory of liability without fault, the theory of the insurance liability of the employer for all industrial accidents occurring within the scope and course of employment, the burden of this to be passed on to the community as a whole through the increased cost of the product. Accordingly, systems of tariffs were set up according to which various types of accidental injury in industry were to be paid for, initially by the employer, secondly by his insurance carrier, and ultimately by the public. All this was on the substantive side. It represented a shift in concepts of substantive law definitive of rights and duties as between employer and employee, which shift was made to meet a new economic and social situation arising out of industrial growth, as a result of which it was no longer thought fair that the individual workman should bear the burden of injury in industry.

New substantive concepts also arose as a foundation for the work of the Public Utilities Commissions—reasonableness of rates, public convenience, interest, and necessity, rather than rates made by contract, as a standard for the licensing of new businesses or for the extension of the activities of those already licensed. Similar new substantive concepts were built to underlie the activity of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The "blue sky" laws, which provided for State and ultimately national securities and exchange commissions, also introduced new substantive concepts, to wit, public protection and safety. Under the activities of the Federal Trade Commission lies the new substantive concept of fair competition. There was, of course, a common-law concept of fair competition, but it was very much narrower than the standard devised for the Federal Trade Commission.

All of these new substantive theories of rights and duties in respect of the relationship between business and the citizen, and business and government, were the product of changing economic, social, and industrial conditions. Characteristic of all of these new substantive concepts, it is to be noted, was their breadth and the extent to which the element of personal discretion in the administration of the law was enlarged as a result of them.

Substantive concepts at the common law were, in the large, much narrower, in the sense of being more precise. There was, of course, known to the common law such a thing as a substantive standard. The standard of due care is an illustration. It was broad in its concept and in its application by the jury and the judge, and was subject to a substantial amount of personal judgment. But by far the greater part of common-law categories, definitive of rights and duties, is much more precise. The common law has principles, such as the principle of no liability without fault. It has rules, such as the rule in Shelley's case, or the rule that a contract must have consideration. It has concepts, such as the concept of a trust. It recognizes a status, such as the status of infancy. And it has, as stated, also within it the broad substantive concept which we term a standard. But it is characteristic of the standard, as a guide to the determination of substantive rights and duties, that it is very broad and necessarily subject in its application to a wide personal discretion on the part of the administrator. The concept of public safety or public convenience, interest, and necessity, or of fair prices, or of fair competition, or of fair wages, is so general that in its application the commission inevitably, in administering the law giving it such a standard to apply, uses a very high degree of personal judgment. And by setting up the galaxy of commissions, both State and Federal, to administer substantive standards of so broad a nature, there has been extended into a very large field of activity, in which the citizen comes into contest with the Government, a personal discretion which approximates that of a king (except that it is subject to short tenure on the part of the official), unless it is subjected to the adjective or procedural guaranties of equality, uniformity, and fairness in the administration of the law which have been above referred to as so essential to the confidence of the citizen in a democracy in his dealing with his Government.

Further attention to the development of such commissions as have been referred to makes clear that not only were the substantive concepts which underlie their activities new ones—necessarily so, as I have said, in order to meet new economic, social, and industrial conditions—but also in the building of the machinery through which these commissions applied their statutes, the procedural safeguards of the common law were thrown aside. This was not necessary, and for the reason already set out, was highly undesirable. While it was necessary to change substantive concepts, procedural methods of the common law could in the large have been retained so that the commissions, in selecting facts and in holding hearings, could have proceeded in a manner which would have had the confidence of the citizen, and which would have protected him against arbitrariness and against having his case determined upon extrinsic considerations—political, personal, and the like—rather than upon legal considerations.

It is interesting to note that in the State of Rhode Island, under the statutes which altered the substantive concepts of liability for industrial accident and set up the new theories adverted to, procedural safeguards of the common law were not scrapped but were retained by leaving the administration of the new statutes to the courts—to which were given some additional procedural facilities for investigation of accidents—rather than to a newly set up commission. But in the vast majority of States not only were the substantive concepts thrown aside in setting up the various commissions referred to but also substantially all of the experience and the product thereof of centuries in the common law in respect of procedural safeguards was thrown out the legislative window. Finding a defect in substantive concepts administered by the courts, the legislatures, and the Congress leaped to the conclusion that the machinery of justice as administered by the courts, as well as the substantive concepts, was wrong and useless and outworn, when, as a matter of fact, as demonstrated, a necessary minimum of procedural requirements developed at common law is essential to the success of any institution of a judicial nature, whether it be called a commission or a court, if it is to maintain the respect and confidence of the citizen in a democracy.

The plea made for the abolition of the rules of evidence and the rules of procedure and pleading in respect of the activities of the commissions was that these adjective requirements would slow up the administrative processes to an undue degree. It was said that the speed and complexity of modern life was such that the cumbersome methods of the courts were no longer feasible. Of course, the contrary of this has been well demonstrated, and could have been foreseen. A precise definition of the issues by pleadings, contrary to taking time, saves time, because it narrows the controversy. And the sensible application of the fundamental rules of evidence, especially the hearsay rule, and the rule requiring the evidence to be relevant to the issues defined by the pleadings, contrary to taking time, saves the time of the tribunal involved from examining collateral and irrelevant material. It is, of course, to be recognized that some of the rules of evidence have become anachronistic both for courts and commissions, and it is not suggested that all of the rules of evidence in all of their nicety must be applied in commission hearings. Frequently, for example, the best evidence rule can be dispensed with because of the dependability, under modern methods of office practice, of copies. But such fundamental rules as the hearsay rule, which insures the right of cross examination, and such fundamental evidential concepts as that cases must be decided upon relevant evidence, cannot be abandoned. On this subject, the following comment, on the applicability of the rules of evidence to commission proceedings is pertinent:

> But while the old tools may not be wholly suited to the new tasks, they should, like the evidence before commissions, be used "for what they are worth," not thrown away. They may have some uses for which new tools, or no tools, are a poor substitute. The reaction against courts and their methods may be oversevere. Characterization of the rules of evidence as "useless technical requirements," or as ceremonial obstacles to getting at the facts, indicates a failure to recognize that the "distillate of experience" may be wine as well as dregs, and that necessity, the common excuse for not taking pains, may be the mother of conjecture as well as of invention. It is submitted that even the expert commissioner should receive hearsay sparingly, should not deny himself the testing value of cross-examination, and should be willing to introduce what he acts upon.—Administrative Tribunals and the Rules of Evidence, by Harold M. Stephens, Harvard University Press, 1933, chapter VII, pages 102–103.

Thousands and thousands of pages of the records made at commission hearings in this country, both State and national, convincingly attest the proposition that throwing the rules of procedure and the rules of evidence out of the window have done just the contrary of saving time, both for the tribunal and the litigant, and just the contrary, it may be added, of saving expense.

When it is borne in mind that the new substantive concepts which underlie the activities of the commissions are so broad as to invest the administrator in applying them with a very large degree of personal discretion, it is clear that if, in addition to thus broadening substantive concepts and personal discretion, the adjective—procedural and evidential—safeguards to fair hearing, are thrown aside, the element of personal discretion in the administration of law and government has been, in respect of both the manner of hearing and the application of the substantive concepts, extended to an unprecedented degree. And when it is borne in mind that the function of the various commissions, both State and Federal, is to supervise and regulate a very large proportion of the business, economic, and social activities of the citizen, the result is that a dangerously large amount of governmental control, regulation, and supervision of the citizen's activities is being carried on subject to almost no limitation upon the personal discretion of the administrator, except the limitation of tenure of office.

The practical consequences of abandoning the adjective safeguards of fair hearing are extraordinarily serious to the citizen. It is of the very genius of the Anglo-American concept of government that the citizen, in controversy with the Government, shall be on terms of equality with the Government before the law. That is to say, both the Government and the Government official and the citizen are expected to be obedient to the law, and neither the Government nor the official is to have an advantage over the citizen. As a practical matter, however, in the holding of hearings and in the determination of issues of fact and law and the issuance of orders, if the discretion of the administrator is broadened on the substantive side and is subjected to no procedural limitations, the citizen is at a very great disadvantage. The administrator can practically decide what he pleases, and upon such considerations as he pleases; and the citizen has substantially no recourse; and that is the situation today. That is the basis of this proposal to remedy the wrong, and, if possible, to restore to American citizens rights of which they are being deprived by administrative absolutism, which characterizes so many of the departments today.

If issues are not narrowed by pleadings, and the controversy limited so far as evidence is concerned to relevant and dependable material, the record is filled with an enormous mass of opinion, hearsay, and collateral matter; and the record becomes so large that no honest mind, either of an examiner or commissioner or reviewing tribunal, can, in this busy day, completely and accurately examine it. Moreover, in such a record thus made without procedural safeguards, it is almost always possible to find some substantial evidence to support the final order of the commissioner, with the result that his finding must be sustained under most of the statutes; and this despite the fact that the real basis for his decision may be the collateral and irrelevant considerations which have been brought to his attention as a result of the failure to enforce procedural and evidential safeguards to fair hearing. If findings of fact are not made, then it is impossible for the litigant or the reviewing tribunal, either one, to know whether the ultimate order issued by the commissioner is based upon the evidence presented to him in the hearing or upon entirely extrinsic considerations.

The abandoning of the fundamental rules of evidence and fundamental procedural safeguards to fair hearing, and also the broadening of substantive standards, inevitably puts the citizen, in his controversy with the Government before commissions, at a distinct disadvantage. He is substantially at the mercy of the decision of the commission or administrator. While much of the foregoing has been phrased in terms of commissions and commissioners, it is all relevant to hearings held and rulings made by the executive departments of the Government and their branches. Take, for example, the revocation of an airplane pilot's license by the Civil Aeronautics Authority; or the revocation of a marine officer's license by the department or agency having supervision over the issuance of such a license; or the termination of the right to carry on commercial fishing in public waters. The standard of issuing the license is one of public convenience, interest, necessity, or safety. If the license can be revoked without a hearing in which the licensee is protected by procedural safeguards, so that he can be assured that the revocation is based upon evidence relevant to his fitness to have the license continued, he is substantially helpless. Unless there is a definition of issues by suitable pleadings, he cannot even know what the controversy is about. Unless there is a selection of relevant evidence, and unless there are findings of fact, he cannot know what the considerations were which dictated the decision. They may have been legal; they may have been personal or political. Unless there have been procedural safeguards which give the citizen access to the evidence submitted against him and permit due examination of witnesses, he again can have no assurance that the decision is based upon legal, and not political, grounds. All of this threatens decidedly the relationship between the citizen and his Government. The defeated litigant who feels that he has had a fair hearing will, in the vast majority of cases, obey the law. But the defeated litigant who feels that he has not had a fair hearing is a potential lawbreaker and becomes dissatisfied with his Government and its methods.

Various suggestions have been made toward the solution of the problem which has thus been created by the adoption of broad substantive standards for the commissions and administrators and the throwing aside of procedural safeguards. The radical protagonists of government by commissions and administrators who object to what they term the "strait jacket" methods of the common law and its courts, would build in the United States a separate system of administrative tribunals, including appellate tribunals, entirely freed from judicial control and judicial review by the constituted Federal courts other than the Supreme Court of the United States. This idea for a separate set of administrative tribunals, including appellate tribunals, has its genesis in the continent, with its civil or Roman law background, rather than in the common law. Many of these administrative organizations want to go back to the Byzantine days and adopt the continental system, under which in many cases juries are not permitted, star-chamber procedures are had, and findings of fact are not required. That is the disposition manifested by too many of the Federal agencies today. It is a dangerous departure from common law; it is a dangerous departure from constitutional government, and if persisted in must inevitably lead to tyranny and to the impairment, if not destruction, of democratic institutions.

In continental Europe, where government is conducted according to the concepts of the civil or Roman law, the Anglo-American idea that the citizen in his controversy with his government shall be on terms of equality therewith, both the government and the citizen being subject to the law, does not prevail. And there is warrant for the belief that the protagonists for a system of separate administrative tribunals, including reviewing tribunals, disassociated from Federal judicial review except by the Supreme Court, are actuated by a desire not only for a substantially untrammeled discretion in the administration of law, but by a desire that the citizen shall be at a disadvantage in his contest with the Government. It is to be noted in this respect that a final review in the Supreme Court of the United States of the decisions of administrators and commissions would be, as a practical matter, an insufficient protection to the citizen, for the reason that there is no longer any right of appeal to the Supreme Court, and none is likely to be established.

The system of discretionary review on petitions for writs of certiorari seems likely to persist. Moreover, few citizens can sustain the burden in either time or money entailed in an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. The citizen must look largely to the trial and intermediate tribunals for the preservation of his rights. And a system of administrative tribunals, including reviewing tribunals, committed to a substantial abandonment of the procedural safeguards to fair hearing, and committed to the point of view that the Government should have an advantage over the citizen in controversies between the two, will not protect the citizen; and such a system would not long merit or have his allegiance or support.

The pending bill aims at a proper correction of evils which have grown up through the extension to commissions and administrators in the Federal system of government of not only broad, substantive standards but freedom from procedural safeguards to fair hearing. It requires, in the first place, the administrator himself to hold a hearing, as a result of which he shall listen to evidence and shall make findings of fact and conclusions of law and an order, in written form, based thereon. It provides for the taking of testimony and the subpenaing of witnesses. Thus, the bill will build, at the bottom of the reviewing process, a basis of review.

It is against the abuse of this discretionary authority on the part of various departments and agencies that we are protesting. That is the reason for the introduction of the measure under consideration and the demand that it shall be enacted into law.

Judicial review, looking to the protection of the citizen in both his substantive and adjective rights, must have, to begin with, something to review and a record thereof. A very substantial portion of the administrative rulings of the Government, outside the constituted commission—rulings, for example, by bureau chiefs in the vastly complicated executive branches of the Government—are made at the present time merely in the form of letters, and nothing in the way of an even informal hearing is required. If the citizen gets a hearing, it is at the grace of the administrator or bureau chief. All this will be changed by the Logan-Walter bill. A ruling against an aggrieved citizen must, at his insistence, be subjected to a hearing by a board of review, which is to make findings of fact, conclusions of law, and an order, and to provide for the perpetuation of testimony.

Under the Logan-Walter bill, after the record and findings of fact and conclusions of law have been made by the intra-agency board, the department or agency head may approve, disapprove, or modify the order; and from his final action, if it is against the citizen, the citizen may appeal to the constituted Circuit Courts of Appeals of the United States, including the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. These reviewing tribunals will thus be able to see to it that not only have the substantive standards under which the commissions and administrators operate been duly followed but that fundamental procedural safeguards to fair hearing, for the protection of the citizen, have been followed. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that even where statutes are phrased, as many of them are, so as to free the administrator or commission from the rules of evidence and pleading, this does not permit, within the due-process clause of the fifth amendment, the abandonment of such fundamental minimum safeguards to fair hearing as are inherent in the very nature of the Anglo-American theory of government and governmental administration. It said, in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. R. Co. (227 U. S. 88, 93 (1913)), that though administrative bodies are not limited to the strict rules of evidence, nevertheless, "the more liberal the practice in admitting testimony, the more imperative the obligation to preserve the essential rules of evidence by which rights are asserted or defended."

And in the same case the Supreme Court forbade commissioners to "act upon their own information, as could jurors in primitive days."

There is much evidence to show that commissioners and examiners have received evidence not relevant, and have acted in a capricious and arbitrary way in reaching their decisions.

In the case of United States v. Abilene and S. Ry. Co. (265 U. S. 274, 288 (1924)), the Supreme Court ruled:

> A finding without evidence is beyond the power of the Commission. Papers in the Commission's files are not always evidence in a case. Nothing can be treated as evidence which is not introduced as such.

The function of findings of fact, to assure that decisions proceed from the evidence, has been recognized by the United States Supreme Court in the cases of United States v. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Co. (293 U. S. 454 (1935)), and Florida v. United States (282 U. S. 194 (1931)). See also on the necessity of adhering to the fundamental rules of evidence and procedure, the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in Saginaw Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Communications Commission (96 F. (2d) 554), and other cases therein cited; and the decision in Tri-State Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Communications Commission (96 F. (2d) 564); see also chapter VII of Administrative Tribunals and the Rules of Evidence, by Harold M. Stephens, published by the Harvard University Press, 1933.

Under these rulings the circuit courts of appeals of the United States are armed with authority, and the fundamental guaranties of the due process clause of the fifth amendment arm them further with authority, to hold the commissions and administrative agencies to at least such a minimum of fundamental safeguards to fair hearing as have, through the experience of centuries, been demonstrated as necessary to obedience by the citizen to the decrees of government as announced through tribunals of whatever nature, either judicial or administrative.

By none of the foregoing is it meant to charge that commissions and administrative agencies do not perform a useful and necessary function in government. Not all law and governmental administration can be guided by the precise rules which govern property and commercial transactions or which define crimes. Although government by commissions and administrators has been unduly extended, under the fetish of necessity for expertness and speed and efficiency to meet the exigencies of modern conditions, nevertheless, commissions and administrators do in some part of their activities perform a necessary and useful function. But in many instances they have abused their authority and deprived citizens of their rights.

Commissioners and administrators in some spheres perform a useful function, but they often transgress, thus requiring the enactment of a measure such as the one under consideration, which will prevent them from establishing a system of administrative absolutism.

But that function itself, so far as the allegiance and support of the citizen are concerned, is becoming threatened and will be gravely threatened and eventually overthrown, if the commissions and administrators are not required to submit themselves to the fundamental procedural safeguards to fair hearing.

As it is not intended by the foregoing to assail the usefulness, within the proper field of government and under proper procedural safeguards, of commissions and administrators, so also it is not intended to assail the capacity of all commissioners or administrators, or to indicate that all of them violate the fundamental procedural safeguards to fair hearing. It is worthy of note that experience teaches the commissioners and administrators themselves that in order to do efficient work, and in order to have the support of the public, they must hold fair hearings and must follow to that end suitable adjective guaranties—fundamental rules of evidence, pleading, and procedure. The Interstate Commerce Commission, for example, commenced its activities with the usual statutory release from applying the rules of evidence, pleading, and procedure; but it has built for itself, from experience, a set of rules, and has followed a method of hearing which has tended strongly toward the preservation of the common law safeguards, if indeed it has not in some substantial part subjected itself to them.

But the plain fact is that judges are more able than administrators and commissioners to see to it that both the Government and the citizen are fairly dealt with under the law. Many commissioners are laymen, untrained in the art of fair hearing as it has developed at the common law. Some of the examiners had never looked into a lawbook, had never had an opportunity to weigh evidence, had never had any responsibility, but were thrust into office too often through political pull, rather than by reason of efficiency or competency, or civil-service examination. Obviously, men of that character placed in such responsible positions will work irreparable injury to the morale of the people, will commit grievous injuries and cause grave injustice, which will threaten to a large degree the confidence of the people in the integrity, the honesty, and the fairness of democratic institutions and of our Government. I believe that some of the commissioners are required to do the impossible task—so far as a fair hearing is concerned—of investigating alleged violations of law, filing complaints before themselves upon such investigation, holding hearings upon such complaints, then reaching conclusions, and finally carrying forward enforcement proceedings. They are the police, the investigators, the judges, and the jury. There is no restraint upon their discretion or authority.

Such a combination of executive and judicial duties is subversive of fair hearing, especially when it is remembered that, in addition to their executive duties of investigation, prosecution, and enforcement, the commissioners and administrators, in effect, make the details of their own laws by issuing the regulations which carry the policy-declaring statutes into effect. Moreover, commissioners and administrators are subject to the duty of carrying out legislative and executive policies in their proceedings; and they are not surrounded by a tradition which, in fairness to the parties, seals their proceedings against the extrinsic representations of persons not parties to the controversy and of considerations not relevant to the controversy. It is common knowledge that commissioners and administrators hear, in respect of controversies before them, in the absence of the parties, the representations of others. They lack, moreover, that independence which proceeds from permanence of tenure. Judges are, to begin with, trained and experienced in the art of adjudicating upon controversies in a manner which inspires confidence, even in the losing litigant, that he has had a fair hearing from his Government and its tribunals. They, moreover, have that independence which proceeds from complete divorce from politics and from extended tenure. Judges have no duty whatever except to ascertain the facts and the law and decide the case thereon. They have no political policies to carry out; they represent no political organization.

They are forbidden to act upon any considerations other than those introduced into the controversy by the parties themselves and their counsels. Without assuming to say that the judicial office is sacred or the judge infallible, it is nevertheless a necessary conclusion that the judge is in far better position by training, experience, and the necessary methods of his office, to preserve fair hearing for both people and government in controversies between the two than is the commissioner or administrator. It is inescapable in such a government as ours, which is dedicated to the proposition that the government itself and its officials shall, equally with the citizen, be bound by an objective law, of which the citizen, not the state, is the ultimate source, that there be a body of officers, whom we call Federal judges, removed from politics, given independence through extended tenure, trained and experienced in the art of a fair hearing, to whom shall be entrusted the duty of seeing that the government officer and tribunal, as well as the citizen, shall obey the law. One of the most necessary of the functions of the Federal judiciary is, and will be, that of seeing to it, through judicial review, that, in the administrative or commission proceedings which now cover so large a part of governmental administration, there is fair hearing for the citizen as well as for the government.

Thus, the Logan-Walter bill, by, at the outset, requiring a hearing, with a record thereof, and findings of fact and conclusions of law, and order, and by subjecting this hearing to judicial review in the constituted Federal circuit courts of appeals, aims to safeguard fundamental principles of fair hearing that pervade the Anglo-American polity, the perpetuation of which principles is necessary to the continued allegiance of the citizen to his government, and to the continued obedience by the citizen to the decrees of his Government through tribunals, whether judicial or administrative. It is noteworthy that trial judges, in both State and Federal systems of courts, are necessarily subjected to such judicial review as will insure an application not only of the substantive rules but of the procedural safeguards to fair hearing.

But we are developing a system under which administrative agencies are not subject to judicial review. Apparently they have received a roving commission to proceed, regardless of the right of litigants to a fair hearing or to those constitutional rights which are the product of our civilization and the result of democratic institutions.

Only recently, for example, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia overturned the decision of a municipal court judge who had refused to give fair opportunities to defendants in a criminal case to present their testimony; and only recently also the same court returned to the United States district court for further proceedings a case in which the trial court had failed to make adequate findings of fact and directed it to do so. (Thomas v. District of Columbia, 90 F. (2d) 424; Boss v. Hardie, 93 F. (2d) 234.)

Senators are familiar with the Morgan case decided over and over again by representatives of the Department of Agriculture. It has gone to the Supreme Court three or four times because of the failures of representatives of the Agricultural Department to deal fairly and justly with the matters before them and with the citizens who were brought before them.

Why should commissioners and administrators expect to be more free than trial judges themselves from fundamental requirements guaranteeing fair hearing?

Mr. President, the tremendous growth of bureaucracy, with its attendant evils, has been recognized by the American people, and demands have been made that legislation be enacted for the protection of American citizens against its invasions. The evils attending administrative absolutism have been so widespread as to develop a Nation-wide demand for relief against attacks made upon personal liberty and the rights of the people generally.

The attention of former Attorney General Hon. Homer Cummings was called to the growing menace to democratic institutions from bureaucratic methods. The Attorney General, through his Assistant Solicitor General, Mr. Golden W. Bell, stated, in reply, that—

> The desirability for improvement and development in at least some of the subjects treated in the proposed measure will hardly be questioned; the details and methods, on the other hand, leave wide room for differences of opinion.

The measure referred to contained the provisions found in the Logan-Walter bill. In replying to Mr. Bell's letter, Mr. McGuire answered the suggestion made by Mr. Bell that an attempt to standardize administrative procedures might result in practical difficulties, and stated that the Constitution of the United States required but a phrase to vest in the Federal courts jurisdiction over all cases arising in law, equity, or admiralty. And, further, that the judicial codes, commencing with the first judicial act, did nothing more than attempt to establish a standard procedure to be followed in all litigation arising under the Constitution and the Federal statutes.

President Roosevelt, early in 1939, wrote Attorney General Murphy and called his attention to the fact that while Mr. Cummings was Attorney General, a draft of a bill had been submitted to him, and that there had been correspondence between the Assistant Solicitor General and persons favoring the bill referred to, and that after a committee had reported on this bill he wrote for information in regard to the measure.

In his letter to Attorney General Murphy, the President stated:

> I have been greatly impressed by your statement to me that the experience of the Department of Justice in endeavoring to uphold actions of administrative agencies of the Government, when the validity of their decisions is challenged in the courts, leads you to the conclusion that there is need for procedural reform in the field of administrative law. A thorough and comprehensive study should be made of existing practices and procedure with a view to detecting any existing deficiencies and pointing the way to improvement.

The President suggested that the Attorney General cause to be made an investigation and study of the entire problem.

From the President's letter it appears that the Department of Justice had informed the President of its experience in endeavoring to uphold the action of administrative agencies.

Notwithstanding the Nation-wide protest against abuses by administrative agencies, the record shows that many of them continue their arbitrary and illegal practices. As a result, measures were offered in the House and the Senate the provisions of which are found in the so-called Logan-Walter bill. Opposition to this bill has come primarily from administrative agencies, administrators and regulators themselves, and from individuals and groups who would endow administrative agencies with unlimited discretion and render them immune from judicial review. This Republic was and is a protest against arbitrary power, and all attempts to abridge constitutional limitations should be opposed.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Jones v. Securities & Exchange Commission (298 U. S. 23), had occasion to review the conduct of the defendant administrative agency. The Court emphasized the importance of protecting individuals from invasion of their fundamental rights by administrative bureaus and commissions. The proceedings upon the part of the Commission were held to be arbitrary and the investigation carried on by it had not been based upon specific grounds. The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States constitutes a defense—if a defense is needed—of constitutional government, and was a rebuke to the Government agency for its transgressions. I desire to place in the RECORD excerpts from this important decision:

> The action of the Commission finds no support in right, principle, or in law. It is wholly unreasonable and arbitrary. It violates the cardinal precept upon which the constitutional safeguards of personal liberty ultimately rest—that this shall be a government of laws—because to the precise extent that the mere will of an official or an official body is permitted to take the place of allowable official discretion or to supplant the standing law as a rule of human conduct, the Government ceases to be one of laws and becomes an autocracy. Against the threat of such a contingency the courts have always been vigilant, and if they are to perform their constitutional duties in the future must never cease to be vigilant to detect and turn aside the danger at its beginning. The admonition of Mr. Justice Bradley in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S. 616, 635) should never be forgotten:
> "It may be that it is the obnoxious thing in its mildest and least repulsive form; but illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way—namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure. * * * It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be obsta principiis."

The Court further declared:

> Arbitrary power and the rule of the Constitution cannot both exist. They are antagonistic and incompatible forces, and one or the other must of necessity perish whenever they are brought into conflict. To borrow the words of Mr. Justice Day:
> "There is no place in our constitutional system for the exercise of arbitrary power" (Garfield v. Goldsby, 211 U. S. 249, 262). To escape assumptions of such power on the part of the three primary departments of the Government is not enough. Our institutions must be kept free from the appropriation of unauthorized power by lesser agencies as well. And if the various administrative bureaus and commissions, necessarily called and being called into existence by the increasing complexities of our modern business and political affairs, are permitted gradually to extend their powers by encroachments—even petty encroachments—upon the fundamental rights, privileges, and immunities of the people, we shall in the end, while avoiding the fatal consequences of a supreme autocracy, become submerged by a multitude of minor invasions of personal rights less destructive but no less violative of constitutional guaranties.

As Senators will perceive the Court emphasized the importance of protecting individuals from an invasion of their fundamental rights by administrative agencies and commissions, even though such invasions may by some be deemed "petty encroachments." The Court further declared that the philosophy that limitations and legal restraints may be brushed aside upon the plea that good perchance may follow finds no countenance in the American system of government.

Many other citations are available, demonstrating the caprice and arbitrary procedure of various administrative agencies. It comes with poor grace from officials, acting as quasi judges, who adjudicate important controversies, to proceed not with scales of justice in their hands but with flaming swords with which to accomplish certain ends alleged to be necessary to reach social objectives. They are little interested in the protection of personal rights but become biased in favor of personal rights which supposedly are to benefit the general welfare. Many of them somehow believe that the abstract thing called general welfare is separate and distinct from the welfare of individual persons. In violating the fundamental precepts of this Government, they express frantic absurdities in their efforts to prevent the passage of an act which does not curtail their substantive power, but which merely requires that they shall exercise that power in accordance with law, the Constitution, and the basic considerations of fair dealings, decency, and impartiality. There is another group opposing the bill consisting of individuals who, either through a lack of understanding or alien influence, are opposed to judicial review, and would substitute unlimited discretion by Government agencies. I am not willing to follow the vagaries of those who seek to impose the continental system of law upon the people of this Republic.

Dean Roscoe Pound, who is recognized as one of the greatest authorities in the legal field, said in substance that this administrative theory of government comes from professors. May I add in passing that there are too many professors and teachers and lecturers in our country, who are not in sympathy with constitutional limitations and who are influenced by alien ideologies. The interests of our country would be better served if some professors in our law universities had greater devotion to constitutional government and less concern in various practices of some foreign countries where individual rights are not protected and administrative absolutism prevails.

Among the opponents of the Logan-Walter bill are Dr. Blachly, who recently published a book entitled "The Government and Administration of Germany," also another entitled "The Government and Administration of France," and a distinguished and able lawyer, John F. Dulles. Dr. Blachly, as I am informed, has never practiced law but he is called a political scientist. He recently published another book entitled "Regulatory Action and Control." Chapter X of this book is devoted to a criticism of the bill under consideration and was published separately and rather widely distributed before the entire work was offered to the public, and while the House and the Senate were considering the so-called Logan-Walter bill.

These two distinguished Americans have been prominent in their attacks upon the principles incorporated in the Logan-Walter bill.

A number of the opponents of the bill in question have drawn their inspiration from the Roman law, and they exhibit a preference for administrative law as found in various European countries, rather than the common law, and our judicial system built up upon the foundations of the common law and the Constitution of the United States. They desire the continental system, lacking checks and balances and a regard for personal rights, and seek to impose upon the American people a form of administrative absolutism similar to that found in many European countries.

Dean Roscoe Pound, appearing before the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate when it was considering the pending bill, stated:

> The doctrine of administrative absolutism is very strong in some quarters. I am afraid it is strongest in the universities.
> You have to discount a good deal you find in the books in our academic circles, because I do not think the nonlawyer or layman has quite appreciated what our legal situation was, on the one hand, or the legal situation behind the development of administration, on the other hand. It requires a good deal of understanding of legal history and legal development to appreciate a situation of that sort.

I am repeating when I state that much of the criticism against the Logan-Walter bill finds its inspiration and support in systems of government indifferent to human rights and limitations upon governmental authority.

In the discussion of the subject under consideration we are compelled to emphasize the underlying antithesis between our Government, with its checks and balances, with its regard for personal liberty, and other governments. This is necessary because of the opposition to the Logan-Walter bill, which is based upon reasoning and theories at variance with the concept of a limited form of constitutional government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Under this limited form of constitutional government, how may it be justified to prorogue the Congress and leave the Executive in sole and complete control of the situation? He asserts that the emergency is so terrific that he cannot be more than 12 hours away from Washington. If that is so, I assert that Congress should not be 60 days away from Washington without a chance to reassert its own prerogatives. While the Senator pleads so eloquently and persuasively, and with my complete consent, for the maintenance of our checks and balances, I ask him also to say at least a plaintive word for the maintenance in fact as well as in theory of this system through the continuance of congressional authority for the life of this so-called emergency.

Mr. KING. May I say that the question before me now relates to one aspect of constitutional government and I am insisting upon an interpretation of the Constitution which protects each branch of the Government and also the rights of American citizens. I cannot embark upon all phases of the question of checks and balances and constitutional limitations, and I am sure that my friend will excuse me from entering other and broader fields than those embraced within the Logan-Walter bill.

I have mentioned Mr. John F. Dulles, chairman of the committee on administrative law of the New York City Bar Association, and Dr. Blachly, because, as I have stated, they have been able and conspicuous members of the forces opposing the Logan-Walter bill. Mr. Dulles delivered an address several months ago in opposition to the pending bill, and Representative CELLER, of New York, had the address inserted in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 1210. Among other things, Mr. Dulles states:

> It is inefficient to separate the powers of government into three branches—legislative, executive, and judicial.

Senators will perceive that opposition is expressed to the pending bill upon the ground that it is "inefficient" to divide our Government into three branches—executive, legislative, and judicial. Mr. Dulles also declares:

> We preferred and felt we could afford an inefficiency which was protective against possible tyranny * * *. But during recent years our world has changed * * *. The duties and responsibilities of government have enormously increased. Under such conditions government naturally strives to become more efficient, and this is expected of it. One expression of this urge for efficiency is the administrative agency. Thereby certain fields of human activity are turned over to the administration of commissions endowed with broad authority to legislate, to administer, and to enforce, within their respective fields. In this way it is felt there can be attained an efficiency not obtainable under a system of checks and balances.

Mr. President, the views expressed by some opponents of the pending bill remind one of the reasons assigned in autocratic governments for the suppression of the rights and liberties of the people.

Undoubtedly some Americans are dissatisfied with democratic institutions and constitutional government, and contend that efficiency can be obtained only by concentrating governmental authority in the hands of the executive department and administrative agencies. The statements to which I have just called attention seem to support the view that the Constitution, with its tripartite division of power, with its checks and balances, is outmoded and should be cast aside or materially changed, and, further, that individual liberty may be limited in order to obtain "efficient" government. This is a dangerous doctrine and contrary to the ideals held by the American people. It is based upon the assumption that efficiency is obtained only through administrative agencies possessing unlimited discretion and freedom from judicial scrutiny.

The puzzled citizen, bewildered on all sides by thousands of unintelligible rules and regulations; restricted by arbitrary requirements in every phase of his business life; incapable of even ascertaining the existence of many of these boards, commissions, bureaus, divisions, and agencies; lost in the maze of regulatory officialdom, not knowing when his activities will be scrutinized by this agent or that; caught in many instances between contradicting policies of two or more different agencies; incapable of playing the business game fairly from the viewpoint of the Government, simply because he cannot, as Mr. Dulles indicates, find out what the Government thinks the rules of the game are; this citizen may well question the view that through administrative agencies we are securing "efficiency." One need look no further than the action of the Secretary of Agriculture in one case—the Morgan against the United States case—commenced in 1930 and not yet concluded—in which the action has been denounced by the Supreme Court four different times as violative of constitutional rights, to conclude that perhaps this administrative regulation is not the acme of efficiency.

Mr. Dulles recognizes that there is "a widespread feeling that the tribunals are a menace to personal liberty and a step toward despotism, and that they need to be curbed." But he is "not in sympathy with such proposals" as have been promulgated to curtail the spreading abuses.

Mr. President, another factor in the operations of quasi-judicial bodies that jeopardizes individual freedom, is the assumption that the individual case is unimportant. A review of the activities of administrative agencies justifies the statement that the rights of the individual are not of prime consideration. Mr. Dulles, speaking of commissions and administrative agencies, states that—

> Such commissions often feel that they have a mission, not to deal judicially with individual cases through the meticulous application thereto of fixed rules but rather to achieve promptly some broad social reform. The individual case assumes little importance of itself and is to be dealt with primarily from the standpoint of its bearing upon the whole. Such an approach is alien to the historical approach of the lawyer.

Mr. President, this approach to the issue presented is alien not only to lawyers who believe in our form of government, but, it seems to me, is contrary to every precept of free government. It has been said that similar arguments are made by those who oppose liberty of the people, whether it be social, political, or religious liberty. They would trample under foot these liberties in order to accomplish what is conceived by dictators to be best for the general welfare. It makes but little difference to a citizenry deprived of its rights whether the tyrant is an individual dictator or hundreds of thousands of regulatory officials and employees—the result is usually the same. That administrative power is arousing concern in our country is acknowledged by Mr. Dulles, who states:

> No one can deny that administrative power, such as is indicated, constitutes a potential threat to democratic institutions. The techniques are precisely those which have been effectively utilized in countries like Germany and Russia—to center all power in government and to deprive the individual of independence.
> They may readily convert our Government from one of laws to one of men. What I have already said sufficiently illustrates this. There is danger when the mass of rules, regulations, and decrees is such that it is practically impossible for a citizen independently to determine his rights. We approach a government of men, when a citizen must go to some public official and ask what the law is and when, in most cases, he has no practical alternative but to accept the version which is given him. There is danger when there is no safeguard, such as grand-jury action, against the institution of proceedings of so great injury that the mere threat thereof is coercive. There is danger when the prosecutor is himself the grand jury, judge, and petit jury, without effective right of review by any independent judicial agency.
> But because such dangers are inherent in administrative tribunals, we need not assume that they will be realized.

Mr. President, administrative absolutism is defended by some upon the theory that the ordinary, usual, and constitutional processes would interfere with the administration of the affairs of government. With respect to the bill before us, there is no justification for this view. The bill does not permit the court to substitute its own view of the facts for that of the Commission. As I have indicated, some administrative agencies are necessary under present conditions to perform the functions of fact-finding agencies, but in so doing they must be amenable to constitutional limitations and just and fair procedural methods. The Logan-Walter bill will not interfere with this function, but as stated it requires that this function shall be carried on according to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and according to the acknowledged rules of fairness and impartiality.

It has been suggested by some that there is a similarity between the philosophy of many of those who seek to transfer to legislative agencies authority and power granted by the Constitution, and the teachings of Karl Marx, and that there is a tendency in our country through administration agencies toward social and, indeed, political policies and practices of the Soviet Government. Karl Marx believed that with the development of a social and political system which abolished individual property rights there would be no need of law; that controversies would be decided immediately by administrative determination without regard for judicial procedure.

Dean Pound states:

> Under the theory of the economic advisor of Soviet Russia, in the ideal socialism there would not be any law, but we would be ruled by administrative orders. I mention that because it shows the ideal toward which this administrative absolutism is tending.

This growth of administrative absolutism is a danger which must be faced and checked if individual liberty is to survive in the United States. It is alien to our philosophy of government. The Constitution was founded upon the theory that elected representatives of the people would enact the laws, and that those enactments, together with the action of the executive officials in administering them, would be subject to a judicial scrutiny in order to protect the people from arbitrary encroachment upon their rights, either in the enactment or administration of the laws. It was thought that no matter how responsible or well qualified the elected representatives or the executive officers were, the preservation of individual rights demanded that they be subject to checks and balances. As Jefferson so aptly stated:

> In questions of power, then, let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution.

Yet today, some administrative officers and their subordinates issue rules and regulations having the force and effect of law. This legislation is enacted, not by representatives elected by the people, but by appointive officials, answerable to no one in many instances, and never to an electorate. These same officials also administer their legislation, deciding controversies between the Government and the citizen involving important personal rights. This quasi-judicial work is not being carried on by officials with independent tenure of office and with legal qualifications, but by supposed experts of administration, in many instances not even equipped with the legal training or background essential to the make-up of legislative, administrative, or judicial officials.

These appointed legislators now strenuously object when it is proposed that they shall hold hearings and listen to those who will be affected by their legislation—a practice which the elected representatives in Congress have followed for 150 years. These public servants raise a great hue and cry when it is suggested that they be subject to the checks and limitations which the Constitution wisely placed upon the actions of the elected representatives of the people. And these so-called judges severely criticize the requirement that they shall hold a hearing and listen to the citizen's evidence before a decision is rendered depriving him of his rights—a method of procedure which the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly declared is required not only by the due-process clause of the Constitution, but by any definition of fair dealing and impartiality of decision.

In this Government of limited powers, of checks and balances, there is being developed an administrative system which many contend is, and should be, subject to no checks upon itself. This method of government, despite any supposed and theoretical advantages, flies in the face of all our governmental experience, and is basically at odds with the underlying concepts of law and government in the United States. The bureaucratic tendency in this country, as well as in other countries, is to require that in disputes between citizens and the Government, recourse shall not be had to the regular courts, but to commissions, boards, bureaus, and agencies, for a final determination of such matters. Do those who support such a method of settling disputes between the Government and the citizen forget that governing power has, since the beginning of time, been the destroying agent of individual rights and liberties?

We have seen individual liberties destroyed in other lands during the past few years, under the same philosophy which is being urged by some in America, just as they have been trampled under foot by governing power in many lands. We have seen the rights of minorities ignored. We are aware of the growing tendency in this country to scoff at the "blessings of liberty" and at those alleged "reactionaries" who would fight for the priceless heritage of freedom that has been handed down to us. Many persons believe we cannot escape the increasing arbitrariness of men in public office—some called experts, exercising the functions of legislator, prosecutor, jury, judge, and executioner, grasping for more power, resentful of criticism, intolerant of all opposition, strongly believing that they are somehow endowed with the gift of running other people's lives and business better than those people themselves. We have seen these tendencies toward administrative absolutism, fed by the philosophies of the civil law and the socialistic doctrine of law by edict—philosophies alien to the Anglo-American theory of constitutional, limited governing power—tendencies which must result, if not checked, in a government of men rather than a government of law.

One of the important witnesses appearing before the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate was Hon. Monte Appel, of St. Paul, Minn. He had held various Government positions, among them Assistant Attorney General of the United States. He is also chairman of the committee on administrative law of the Minnesota Bar Association. He submitted an able statement concerning the Roman law and the common law and the serious results attending the abandonment of a sound judicial system. He stated that under the Roman law the Emperor was regarded as the fountainhead of the law and was therefore above the law, and from that view the further doctrine was developed that the servants of the Emperor were above the law. It followed from that view that "public officials had no responsibility to the private citizen for unlawful or illegal action," and as a result a system of law was developed that the public official was above the law. That view was not accepted by Lord Coke and the jurists of Great Britain who finally established in our law the basic concept that both the public official and the private citizen are subject to law and so the common law developed the concept of the supremacy of law. Under that view a public official has no authority except that conferred upon him by the Constitution and the statutes enacted by Congress. Mr. Appel states that—

> There has grown up on the part of many well-intentioned people, who feel that they must move fast for the good of humanity, a resentment toward the courts * * * and that we will get along faster if we throw off this doctrine of the supremacy of law, and that the way to do it is to curtail so far as possible the scope of judicial review. I think that philosophy is definitely a dangerous one.

He referred to the practice of "narrowing the scope of judicial review which would definitely tend to build up a separate administrative system which knows no precedents and is not subject so much to the law as it is to the views of those who administer it."

The pending measure attempts to check the strong tendency in this country toward what Dean Pound has termed "administrative absolutism," and attacks the problem upon a procedural basis. In an effort to protect individuals against arbitrary administrative action, as well as to provide for the more effective operation of Government agencies, the bill lays down uniform procedural requirements with respect to three stages in the administrative process, namely: The issuing of rules and regulations by administrative agencies; the administrative determination of controversies between citizens and the United States; and the judicial review of final orders and decisions of administrative bodies.

I. THE ISSUING OF RULES AND REGULATIONS BY ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

The rapid growth of administrative law in the United States, especially during the past 50 years, has resulted in the creation of more than 130 administrative agencies, each clothed with the power to issue rules and regulations. A typical example of this power is that which has been conferred upon the Securities and Exchange Commission:

> The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

This rule-making power, or the authority to fill in the details of statutes under broad standards laid down by Congress, is quasi-legislative in character. The general practice has been to issue rules and regulations without notice to or public hearing of interested persons. In other words, what amounts to legislation is being enacted day after day by appointed officials—not by the elected representatives of the people—and without consulting those who will be most affected by the legislation—contrary to the practice followed generally by Congress through its committees.

The bill, therefore, requires that public notice shall be given and a public hearing held before any rule or regulation is issued, amended, or rescinded. It is important to note at this point, however, that this procedural requirement must be met only in connection with rules and regulations "of general application affecting the rights of persons or property." The statement frequently made by persons opposing the bill, to the effect that every rule and regulation, no matter how trivial or inconsequential or if it relates solely to the internal organization of an agency, must be preceded by public notice and hearing and subjection to judicial review, is not accurate, in view of the definition of the phrase "administrative rule." The hearing is required only with respect to rules and regulations of general application affecting the rights of persons and property, and it is generally conceded, even by opponents of the measure, that many of the agencies do hold hearings with respect to important rules which are to be promulgated.

Rules and regulations in existence on the date of the enactment of the pending bill, and which have been in existence less than 3 years, must be reconsidered by the agency which issued them, after public notice and hearing, if any person substantially interested in the effects of the rules requests such reconsideration. Any such request for reconsideration of a rule must be made within 1 year following the enactment of the Logan-Walter bill. Provision is also made for the publication of approved rules in the Federal Register, so that all citizens may be advised of the action taken and of the existing state of the law by which they are governed.

A state of confusion generally exists today in respect of this rule-making power. As stated, the majority of agencies conduct no hearings prior to the issuance of rules and regulations; a few of the more recently created bodies are required by statute to hold them, and a few have done so voluntarily in certain instances. There is no uniformity in the amending of rules, and there are instances of citizens being penalized by reason of their relying upon a rule which has been subsequently modified or rescinded. In this respect, the bill provides that an individual acting in good faith in accordance with a rule is protected for 30 days after publication in the Federal Register of its rescission or a holding that the rule is invalid.

Further, in some instances the agency has failed to issue regulations until years have elapsed after the enactment of the statute authorizing the regulations. To prevent the chaos attending such delay, the bill requires all rules and regulations to be issued within 1 year after the enactment of the statute authorizing such rules and regulations, subject, of course, to subsequent amendment and modification.

The argument made by some opponents of the bill, that it would be impossible to issue rules and regulations concerning some of the complicated functions of government within 1 year is not impressive. It is difficult to conceive a factual situation so complicated that a fairly well-considered rule could not be promulgated after a year's study. Certainly Congress, in enacting a statute delegating rule-making power to an agency, intends that its announced policy with respect to that statute shall be carried into effect by the agency at as early a date as possible. Surely the citizen, after 1 full year, can reasonably expect to be informed as to the effect the statute will have upon him. One year would not appear to be an unreasonable and harsh limitation.

The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is given jurisdiction to enter a declaratory judgment, upon the petition of any person substantially interested in the effects of any administrative rule, within 30 days after its publication in the Federal Register, as to whether the rule is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the statute under which it was issued, or whether it was issued under proper authority and after the requirements of notice and hearing had been set. Such declaratory judgment does not preclude the raising of the validity or invalidity of the rule in any subsequent controversy in the courts of the United States. The provision for an immediate judicial review of rules and regulations will have a salutary effect upon the agencies issuing them and will undoubtedly lead to a more adequate and complete consideration of the rules before they are promulgated.

It is felt that the requirements of notice and hearing, together with publication, in connection with the rule-making power, will remove a prolific cause of disputes between individuals and Government agencies and will enable citizens and their attorneys to keep abreast of the ever-changing mass of administrative rules and regulations.

The President's Committee on Administrative Management, in its report No. 5, submitted to the President in January 1937, refers to the serious aspects of governmental regulation of business resulting, as stated, in the uncertainty of the law. The further statement is made that during the last two decades executive unity has been especially "threatened by a multiplication of regulatory boards and commissions, some of which possess extensive rule-making powers and others of which do what in effect amounts to rule making as a by-product of their so-called quasi-judicial functions." It is also stated that "one-man responsibility * * * is preferable to decisions by boards, for the reason that a board is a screen behind which responsibility can be hidden and defeated." It is further stated that though courts have upheld the constitutionality of the delegation of rule-making powers, "they have frequently held regulations as ultra vires and have recently enforced limitations upon the authority of the Congress to delegate these powers." Undoubtedly, as the report states, the rule-making powers, like Topsy, just grew. It is further stated that "the rule-making process should be regularized to insure validity of rules to guard against haphazard methods, to require consultation of technical authority, to improve draftsmanship, and to reduce the maze of rules and regulations to an understandable system." The report, as I read it, criticizes the present method and states that purely administrative regulations of internal management need to be cleared through the Bureau of the Budget to insure conformity with whatever uniform regulations the President may have prescribed on personnel, matériel, financial control, and other aspects of public administration. The committee adds that modern legislation should throw all practicable safeguards around the rule-making power and Congress should "investigate the advisability of providing a means of challenging the validity of regulations that affect the public by a simplified procedure without delay, and at a nominal cost." The committee announced that in connection with the delegation of rule-making power there should be safeguards such as, first, notice and formal hearings; and second, publication of draft regulations.

Another suggestion was made to the effect that as a part of administrative management all rules and regulations should be cleared through the office of the solicitor of the department for legality, and through designated experts for technical justification, and so forth.

It is also suggested that the final clearance of the so-called rules and regulations should be checked by the clearance officer who would be responsible for the propriety and, as I assume, the validity of all rules. The report also states that the "rule-making power stands at the very center of this larger problem for the reason that there are no fewer than 115 Federal agencies which are under 964 statutory provisions and 71 Executive orders and proclamations, which issue rules and regulations that affect the public."

Since this report was made additional administrative agencies have been created together with an increased number of statutory provisions and Executive orders and proclamations.

It is further stated that many Executive orders and proclamations, numbering many thousands, have been issued. The committee then adds—

> It is important that a course be pursued which will substitute principle for discretion and thus protect the rights of individuals—

And further—

> That the purpose of the rule of law is rather to minimize arbitrary, discriminatory, or hit-or-miss exercise of authority.

It is also suggested in the report that the rule-making authority, as recommended by the President's Commission, has inherent checks but that they do not operate in the exercise of power in individual cases and it is there that arbitrariness creeps in, personal spite finds expression, and favoritism and discrimination are readily possible.

> There are a few safeguards, however, uniform rules to guide, canalize, and to narrow down the otherwise untrammeled discretion of the administrator and above all the right of appeal to an independent tribunal authorized to protect the individual against orders that do not conform to those rules.

The report also states that—

> The rate-making power must be in conformity with the idea of the rule of law as applied to twentieth century American government. The courts are properly the guardians of private rights and the protectors of the individual against arbitrary administrative action.

If the views of the President's Committee on Administrative Management were followed, perhaps some of the abuses which have characterized the conduct of some administrative agencies would be prevented. It is apparent that the Committee were cognizant of the growing arbitrary administrative procedure, and therefore suggested a plan that would protect citizens against oppressive and unjust conduct upon the part of administrative agencies.

II. THE ADMINISTRATIVE DETERMINATION OF CONTROVERSIES BETWEEN INDIVIDUALS AND THE UNITED STATES

Section 2 of the bill is designed to prevent arbitrary and irresponsible action by administrative officers and employees, particularly subordinate employees, in the administration of their respective statutes and the rules and regulations issued thereunder. The bill establishes a system, uniform throughout the various agencies, of administrative appeal; that is, a means by which the acts of employees of the Government may be reviewed within the administrative agency itself.

Under the proposed procedure a person aggrieved by a decision of any officer or employee may, within 20 days, file a written petition with the head of the agency, stating his objections and requesting that the matter be heard on appeal. He shall be given an early hearing by a board of three members, designated by the head of the agency to hear the appeal, of which at least one member shall be a lawyer. As many of such boards shall be appointed within the agency as may be necessary to handle the appeals, and they shall meet at various and convenient places throughout the United States. The aggrieved shall be afforded an opportunity to call his own witnesses, cross-examine the Government's witnesses, and compel the production of documents, and so forth. The proceedings are to be reported by a stenographer and made into a record of the case and a copy of the record is to be furnished the aggrieved party. Within 30 days thereafter the board shall file written findings of fact and a written decision, subject to the approval, disapproval, or modification of the head of the agency; and a copy of such findings and decision shall be furnished the aggrieved.

> The chairman of any board, upon request of any party to the proceedings, shall require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses.

The simple provision, section 4–c, is one of the most important in the matter of protecting the rights of citizens, for, with the findings of facts of the agency conclusive upon him, if supported by substantial evidence, it is essential that he have the right to introduce all pertinent testimony on his side of the controversy. Under the present practice of many agencies, the matter of issuing subpenas is entirely within the discretion of the administrative body, which is the citizen's adversary; and complaint has been made that the citizen is thus placed at a great disadvantage in building up his own evidence. He has no right to compel the attendance of witnesses in his own behalf, but he must petition his adversary to issue subpenas. The Logan-Walter bill would grant him the right to have subpenas issued and would not leave him at the mercy of his opponent in this respect.

Independent agencies—those with two or more officers at the head—may provide by rule that a trial examiner shall hear the controversy in the first instance, file his written findings of fact and decision with the agency and with the aggrieved, and, if written objections are filed thereto, the agency itself shall hold an early hearing, as above provided. If there are more than three officers at the head of the agency, any three of them may hold such hearing; and, if there are less than three, then intraagency boards of three shall be established as above provided.

The advantages to be derived from the procedure of administrative appeals are obvious. In the first place, it will result in the making of a written record of each case, which will greatly facilitate court review of the administrative decision—as I shall point out. Then, too, there is the advantage that the appeal will bring to the attention of the head of the agency just what has been done by his subordinates and why it has been done. With the hundreds of controversies arising in many of the departments and agencies, it is impossible at present for the responsible heads to know the decisions of subordinates; but under the requirement in the proposed bill that the written findings of fact and decision of the board shall be approved by the head of the agency, the individual will secure the advantage of a decision by a responsible official. This should constitute a protection, not only to the citizen, but to the heads of agencies who are responsible for the acts of their employees. No better example of the need of this type of procedure can be cited than the admission in Congressman CELLER's minority report (see H. Rept. 1149, pt. 2, p. 2, 76th Cong., February 21, 1940), when he stated:

> I have been confronted with mere "whippersnappers"—young students just out of law school—who apparently are given undue authority in originating, if not effectuating, final decisions. These young lads might be excellent in drafting briefs and memoranda of law, but when it comes to deciding important issues involving important rights, the wisdom of years and the mellowness of experience should prevail.

The importance of a written record, as the basis of written findings of facts and decisions, has been stressed by Mr. Justice Frankfurter:

> Those who decide should record their judgments and give reasons for them, which in itself will have a fruitful psychological effect. You feel much more responsible—all of us do—if we have to sit down and write out why we think what we think.

The eminent legal scholar, Dean Pound, testified before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, on S. 3676, Seventy-fifth Congress, dealing with this question, stated the argument in support of the procedure required by the pending bill:

If you had an administrative body which really formulated just what was done and why they did it you would then have a pretty good safeguard. * * * It would also have this advantage: If that is well done, in a good many cases you would not need judicial review, and it would operate more or less to require that to be well done. Whenever it is well done you have obviated a good deal of the need for review. I think the purpose that is involved in that provision is, first, to develop an organization under the existing practice, and, second, to make better provision for the kind of record necessary for any effective judicial review, and to obviate the necessity for it as far as possible.

III. THE JUDICIAL REVIEW OF FINAL DECISIONS AND ORDERS OF ADMINISTRATIVE BODIES

There is now no general procedure for appealing from adverse decisions and acts of administrative officers to the courts of the United States. A long line of litigation in the Federal courts has resulted from questions as to whether administrative decisions are subject to court review, whether the facts as found by the agency are conclusive upon the court, and generally how far the courts may go in interfering with administrative action. The claim is even made by some that administrative action is or should be entirely free from judicial scrutiny. The uncertainty of the present situation results in hardship and injustice to litigants, and places upon the court in each instance a heavy task—that of ascertaining its own jurisdiction—which results in long and expensive delays.

Dean Pound has traced the development of judicial review of administrative action from the writ of mandamus, if the official did not properly perform his duty; to the writ of certiorari, when something needed correction; to the writ of prohibition, when the official was acting beyond his jurisdiction. There were all kinds of statutory developments of these proceedings, and then resort to equity became common, with the bill quia timet and the bill of peace.

Then we had the injunction against the wrongful acts of administrative authority on a theory of a tort involving irreparable injury, and then we got a statutory appeal, which, of course, is the real way out.

And Dean Pound concludes:

There is a chaotic state in respect of those three modes of review of administrative action. It is hard to tell which method to choose or which is available. The proceedings in some of them are far from satisfactory from the standpoint of results.

The third phase of the Logan-Walter bill, therefore, is expected to accomplish three purposes in clearing up the injustice, hardship, and expense entailed in the present confusion. Those purposes are:

First. To establish a uniform procedure of judicial review for all decisions and orders of the various boards;

Second. To establish a uniform rule as to the scope of judicial review, and thereby insure that administrative decisions shall come within the bounds of the United States Constitution and statutes, and shall be reached only after the requirements of procedural due process of law have been met; and Third. To fix responsibility for incompetent, biased, and illegal action so clearly on the administrative officers and employees concerned that the Chief Executive, the Congress, and the public may know exactly the persons involved.

The bill provides that within 30 days after notice of final order or decision of an agency any party to the proceeding may file a written petition for review with the (1) circuit court of appeals for the jurisdiction where he resides or has his principal place of business; or (2) the circuit court of appeals where the controversy arose; or (3) the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; or (4) the Court of Claims, if the eause of action is otherwise within the jurisdiction of that court.

Before filing such a petition for review, the party may, at his election, file a motion in writing for a rehearing before the agency, presenting a statement of any further showing to be made on such rehearing; and the time for appealing to the above courts shall run from the date of the final disposition of the motion for rehearing.

The petition for review by the courts shall state the alleged errors, and a copy thereof shall be served upon the Attorney General, who shall appear within 30 days and defend the administrative decision before the court. The agency, within the same 30 days, shall file with the clerk of the court the entire record of the case. The courts may constitute special sessions of three judges to determine such cases in order to avoid undue delay.

The court may affirm the order or decision; nullify the order or decision; or remand the case for further evidence before the agency or direct the agency to modify its decision.

The bill, in addition, specifically lists the causes for which an order or decision may be set aside by the courts, and herein lies the essence of a uniform, simplified system of judicial review. Any decision or order of the administrative agency shall be set aside if—

The findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; the decision is not supported by the findings of fact; the decision was issued without due notice or reasonable opportunity for a fair hearing; the decision was beyond the jurisdiction of the agency; the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States.

The decision of the court shall be final, except for review by the Supreme Court of the United States on certiorari or certification. And as a final element of uniformity, if one court finds itself in disagreement with a previously rendered opinion of another court, it shall certify the matter to the Supreme Court of the United States for final determination.

A careful study of the scope of judicial review thus outlined indicates that a delicate balance has been achieved between those who contend for administrative absolutism and those who would cling to an arbitrary, theoretical, unworkable doctrine of the separation of powers. The scope of review answers the tests called for by Dean Pound when he so clearly presented the problem:

The things we have to look for are these:

In the first place, we want an effective check on administrative action and want the legal limitations on the powers of the administrative agency to comport with the requirements of due process of law and comport with the elementary requirements of fairness and impartiality.

Then, second, we want to be careful that the mode of review does not interfere with the effectiveness of administrative action. There we have a different balance. * * *

Then, third, we have to be careful that in providing for a review of administrative action we do not substitute the judicial for the administrative determination, where the administrative determination is required. The purpose of judicial review is not to substitute the court for the administration, but to insure that the administration is kept within the limit prescribed by the law with respect to power, and that its proceedings are in accordance with the processes of law.

The broad charge has been made that the Logan-Walter bill would turn over the running of the executive and administrative departments and agencies to the courts of the United States and that it would make the courts all important. Nothing, of course, could be farther from the truth. In fact, many of those who attack the bill upon other grounds admit that the scope of judicial review afforded by the bill is precisely the same as that exercised in the court review of decisions of the important regulatory commissions which now are subject to review. For instance, in reviewing orders of the National Labor Relations Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, and many others, courts today will set aside an order if any one of the five grounds listed in the Logan bill is present. There is nothing new, unusual, or startling in the provisions for judicial review. As Mr. Louis Caldwell, one of the bill's critics, states:

In my opinion, even in the form in which it passed the House, the entire seven grounds added together amounted to nothing more than the traditional basis on which constitutional courts review the decisions of Federal administrative agencies, namely, on questions of law, with the agencies' findings of fact binding on the courts unless not supported by substantial evidence. * * * The fact now is that, with reference to those agencies where a statutory appeal is already provided, the bill adds precisely nothing to the scope of review, although in some instances it would work a radical change in the courts to which the appeal is taken.

As the bill was originally drafted and as it passed the House recently, it provided that an order might be set aside if the findings of fact were clearly erroneous. This language was criticized on the ground that it would permit courts to review the evidence and substitute their own independent views of the facts for the findings reached by the bureau. To meet this criticism the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate has stricken the quoted words from the bill, for those sponsoring this legislation recognize that the administrative agencies are the primary fact-finding bodies. That is their purpose, and the committee was anxious to remove any provision from the bill which might create some doubt as to whether the courts would be authorized to interfere with the proper functions of the administrative process. As has been stated, the proponents of the bill have been desirous of attaining that delicate balance indicated by Dean Pound, referred to above; and for that reason the judicial review provided in the bill merely unifies the procedure and extends the review to agencies and commissions whose acts are now free from judicial review. But it does not enlarge the scope of that review or permit the courts in any way to usurp the proper functions of administrative bodies.

So much for the provisions of the bill with respect to the three stages in the administrative process. It may be well, now, to scan briefly the need of the bill's enactment. And this, of necessity, requires that emphasis be placed upon the difference—the underlying difference—between the Government of this Republic and other governments.

Those who framed this Government faced that strange anomaly of government versus civil liberty. Although government had always been destructive of individual rights, it is essential to their very existence. As James Madison, the father of the Constitution, expressed it:

> In framing a government which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: You must first enable the Government to control the governed; and in the next place oblige it to control itself (the Federalist, book I, p. 354).

This Government was created upon the theory that the surest way to control the Government was to separate the powers of government and to establish a strong, independent judiciary as a guard against arbitrary and unfair action, either by legislative or executive officials. The problem that has arisen with the growth of so-called administrative law centers in the peculiar nature of the duties performed by administrative bodies. These agencies do not fit definitely into any branch of our Government. They are neither legislative, executive, or judicial; but they exercise duties of all three branches. And with their expansion has arisen the philosophy—alien to the precepts of this democracy—that they are beyond the scope of judicial review. Since they do not fit easily into the time-honored pattern of our Government of separated powers, the claim is made that they do not come within the checks and balances which were set up to protect individual liberties in this country.

This growth of administrative absolutism is a danger which must be faced and checked if individual liberty is to survive in the United States. It is alien to our philosophy of government. The Constitution of the United States was founded upon the theory that elected representatives of the people would enact the laws, and that those enactments, together with the action of the executive officials in administering them, would be subject to a judicial scrutiny in order to protect the people from arbitrary encroachment upon their rights, either in the enacting or administering of the laws. It was thought that no matter how responsible or well qualified the elected representatives or the executive officers were, the preservation of individual rights demanded that they be subject to checks and balances. As Jefferson so aptly stated:

> In questions of power, then, let no more be heard of confidence in man, but bind him down from mischief by the chains of the Constitution.

Yet today administrative officers and their subordinates issue rules and regulations having the force and effect of law. This legislation is enacted not by representatives of the people but by appointive officials answerable to no one, in many instances, and never to an electorate. These same officials also administer their legislation, deciding important controversies between the Government and the citizen involving personal liberty and property. This quasi-judicial work is not being carried on by justices with independent tenure of office and with legal qualifications, but by supposed experts of administration, in many instances not even equipped with the legal training and background essential to the make-up of the justice.

These appointed legislators and so-called judges now oppose the Logan bill, which simply requires that they shall hold hearings and listen to those who will be affected by their legislation, a practice followed by the elected representatives in Congress for 150 years; and that they shall grant a hearing and listen to a citizen's evidence before a decision is rendered depriving him of his rights—a method of procedure which the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly declared is required not only by the due-process clause of the Constitution but by any definition of fair dealing and impartiality of decision.

In this government of limited powers, of checks and balances, there has developed an administrative system which many contend is, or should be, subject to no checks itself. This method of government, despite any supposed and theoretical advantages, flies in the face of all our Government experience, and is basically at odds with the underlying concepts of law and government in the United States. The bureaucratic tendency in this country, as well as in other countries, is to require that, in disputes between citizens and their government, recourse shall not be had to the regular courts, but to commissions, boards, and agencies and bureaus, for a final determination of such matters. Do those who support such a method of settling disputes between the Government and the citizen forget that governing power has, since the beginning of time, been the destroying agent of individual rights and liberties?

We have seen individual liberties destroyed in other lands during the past few years, under the same philosophy which is jeopardizing them in America, just as they have been trampled underfoot by governing power in every land and in every age. We have seen the rights of minorities ignored. We cannot escape the growing tendency in this country to scoff at the blessings of liberty and at those reactionaries who would fight for the priceless heritage of freedom that has been handed down to us through bloodshed. We are aware of the increasing arbitrariness of men in public office—so-called experts, exercising the functions of legislator, prosecutor, jury, judge, and executioner—grasping for more power, resentful of criticism, intolerant of all opposition, strongly believing that they are somehow endowed with the gift of running other people's lives better than those people themselves. We have seen these tendencies toward administrative absolutism, fed by the philosophies of the civil law and the socialistic doctrine of law by edict—philosophies alien to the Anglo-American theory of constitutional, limited governing power—tendencies which must result, if not checked, in a government of men rather than one of law.

The exercise of unfettered discretion and arbitrary power cannot destroy the values for which the American colonists fought. John Stuart Mill has defined liberty, and it is well to remember his words in a day rife with alien doctrines. He said:

> The aim therefore of patriots was to set limitations on the power which the ruler should be suffered to exercise over the community; and this limitation was what they meant by liberty. Liberty, therefore, is limitation on power.

There must be adequate checks upon administrative action, as upon all other types of action in a democracy, if liberty is to survive. The Logan-Walter bill is an attempt to bring administrative discretion within the bounds of constitutional government. It requires that due process of law shall be accorded individuals before the administrative tribunal; and it provides for an independent judicial review of that administrative action. The value of a uniform and adequate review by the duly constituted courts of the country cannot be too strongly stressed. Lord Chief Justice Hewart, in his book the New Despotism, pointed out the advantages:

> It is obvious that the critics of departmental despotism desire, not litigation, but that fairness of decision which, while it renders litigation in general unnecessary, is enormously encouraged and fostered by the prevailing knowledge that, in case of need, there is a law court in the background. It is not in the smallest degree desired that the departmental decisions, when they are given, should be of such kind as to call for review and correction by a court of law. On the contrary what is desired is the exact opposite. But the best way of securing that result is to provide that the decision which is taken may, if the party aggrieved be so minded, be brought before the courts in the ordinary way.

It is submitted that the requirements of the Logan bill will tend to insure that the administrative action will be fair and just, and that this will remove to a large extent the need of judicial review.

The need of an objective view and an intelligent approach to the handling of the administrative problem in this country was stressed in 1916 by Elihu Root in his address as president of the American Bar Association, in which, among other things, he declared:

> There will be no withdrawal from these experiments. We shall go on, and we shall expand them, whether we approve theoretically or not, because such agencies furnish protection to rights and obstacles to wrongdoing which, under our new social and industrial conditions, cannot be practically accomplished by the old simple procedure of legislatures and courts as in the last generation. Yet the powers that are committed to these regulating agencies, and which they must have to do their work, carry with them great and dangerous opportunities of oppression and wrong. If we are to continue a government of limited powers, these agencies of regulation must themselves be regulated. The limits of their power over the citizen must be fixed and determined. The rights of the citizen against them must be made plain. A system of administrative law must be developed, and that with us is still in its infancy, crude and imperfect.

And the growth of the administration of law has gone on during the intervening 24 years. We have gone on and expanded these agencies, as Mr. Root said we would. We have given to them great and dangerous opportunities of oppression and we have provided that they shall regulate the lives and activities of the people.

But, in so doing, we have neglected the very point that Mr. Root emphasized: We have failed to set up the necessary machinery for the regulation of the regulators; we have failed to oblige these agencies of government to control themselves, as James Madison would have us do.

We must, and soon, if we are to continue a government of limited powers, specify the rights of the citizen against these agencies, and limit the powers of them over the citizen. Now that a body of substantive administrative law has been forced out of the burning conflicts between man and government, we must develop a system of procedure of administrative law.

Stripped of all the confusion that has been created by vague and unfounded criticism, the whole purpose of the bill is to secure the essentials of fair dealing that are necessary to the continued faith of a citizen in a democracy. A totalitarian government can afford to be arbitrary, for its existence rests upon force; but a democracy, dependent upon the good will of the governed, must exercise that high degree of fairness and impartiality in its dealings with the governed which is necessary to maintain the continued allegiance of the citizen.

Mr. President, Congress has too long delayed legislation to correct abuses and evils in the administration of Federal laws; too long have the American people suffered under the arbitrary procedure of Federal agencies and bureaucratic organizations.

The passage of the Logan-Walter bill will meet with the approval of all citizens who believe in the maintenance of democratic institutions and constitutional government.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to thank the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] for his admirable presentation of the principle involved in this proposed legislation. I know of no one who is better qualified to argue the case for the Walter-Logan bill than is the distinguished Senator from Utah.

Because of the rapid growth of commerce and the complex economy of our country I think it was inevitable that there should develop a new method of administering justice, involving to some degree, the legislative functions, in the regulation of business which is transacted in the commerce with other nations and among the several States. This new method grew up to some degree through the judicial process and without the aid of statutes.

Then there came the period of special statutes regulating commerce among the several States by means of the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission and other such bureaus, from whose decisions writs of error or other forms of review could be had. As a rapidly growing Nation we did quite well with the development of our commercial law. That is a familiar story to Americans. That was the story of the common law. A great historian stated it this way:

> The legal consequences of the industrial revolution were effected partly through legislation, but more largely through the development of case law, and a little group of judges who were farsighted enough to divine the direction in which events were moving, were able quietly and without commotion to perform the great work of taking over the existing mercantile law and custom and incorporating it into the law of the land.

That is the end of the quotation from Mr. Plucknett.

We Americans followed that practice, but during the past 7 years we have seen a new era, really a revolution in the administration of this commercial law. There is on the one hand that group which is well represented by the distinguished Attorney General of the United States. I realize that in undertaking to say what he said I may err, and I make my statement not as a direct quotation, although I think it is very nearly that. I think that he epitomized the thought of that group of people in this country by saying substantially this, that the interest of the public in private enterprise cannot be adequately protected excepting by day to day management and control.

That, I believe, is very nearly an exact quotation of what he said. In any event during this era there were created a great many bureaus with almost autocratic power, and they have in actual practice exercised not merely regulatory interference with industry, with private enterprise, but, through their rulings they have in fact undertaken that which the Attorney General speaks of as day-to-day management and control of private enterprise. The Congress in creating these bureaus has delegated to them this peculiar anomalous status of being complainant, judge, and officer of the law. Thus we have reversed the whole theory of American free institutions in the setting up of such boards. They have come under the scrutiny of the courts, not because there was in the statutes which created them any right of appeal given, such as the Walter-Logan bill now undertakes to give, but because their acts were so outrageous, in effect were so destructive of constitutionalism in this country, that they could be taken into court on that basis and without an appeal.

I think the case of National Labor Relations Board against Sterling Electric Motors, Inc., a recent case decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit on May 7, 1940, is a very good case to describe the defects in the system which we are trying to remedy by the Walter-Logan bill, for this is a decision which cannot be said to be antilabor. It is a decision in behalf of labor. It undertakes to say that one of these Boards, the National Labor Relations Board, had deprived a labor union of the civil liberty which it possesses under the Constitution, of being entitled to notice and to a fair hearing, and a judgment in its presence or in the presence of someone representing it, rather than an arbitrary fiat destroying its life and disintegrating the union without hearing, without notice, and in absentia. That is the kind of cruelty which the Walter-Logan bill is aimed to prevent. The case to which I refer is one of the illustrations. The court, in speaking of the absolute power which Congress has undertaken to give to administrative boards, says this:

The case loses none of its importance, because recently the Board, for the time being at least—

The "Board" means the National Labor Relations Board—divested itself of the power it claims Congress gave it to deny to a union its civil liberty of notice and an opportunity to be heard. This was done by the Board's promulgation of a rule granting that right.

Think of the absurdity of it. The citizen does not enjoy that civil liberty as a right under the Constitution. He gets it only if it is most graciously given to him by one of the arbitrary boards. This the Board did.

The right now exists, the Board claims, solely by virtue of its grant. The Board makes strong and now repeated insistence, first, that Congress can create in the administrative process such absolutism of control over human relations, and, second, that it intended to create it in the Labor Board. It is apparent that the Board may annul its rule, attempt to abrogate the right, and reassume the absolute power it claims. Significant is the absence at the hearing of any request by the Board for a return of the proceeding for service on the employees' association to give it an opportunity to be heard on the charge of employer dominance.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following what I have just said, certain extracts from the opinion to which I have referred, which in like manner characterize the absolutism and the abuse of the power which the Walter-Logan bill seeks to prevent. The excerpts are as follows:

On page 4, the two paragraphs which are marked.

On page 5, the paragraphs in which certain lines are underscored.

On page 6, the first paragraph and the last paragraph.

On page 7, the last paragraph, concluding at the top of page 8.

On page 9, the last paragraph in the opinion.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In one of the earliest decisions after National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. (304 U. S. 1), this court, in Edwards v. United States (91 F. (2d) 767, 780), construed that decision as extending the congressional power even to the planting in California of orange trees whose product is "to be transported" in interstate commerce. It was on this construction of the act that we upheld the Secretary of Agriculture regulating the flow of the product of orange trees into interstate commerce. True, that statement of the law was by two of the three judges sitting, but it now stands for this circuit as a declaration of the broad area of congressional administrative power under the commerce clause. In that and a succession of cases this court has recognized the congressional intent in a widely expanding creation of administrative agencies. Nor has any court gone further in recognizing the congressional intent to free the Labor Board's administrative process from the technicalities of court procedure (National Labor Relations Board v. Biles-Coleman Lumber Co., 98 F. (2d) 16, 17).

The many cases now decided show that, under penalizing restraints or offer of reward, the fruit grower now must consider a Washington bureau's decision before he may safely add orange or walnut trees to the few acres of his orchard, and a small farmer must do the same before he determines his plowing for next season's crop. The shut-down of the single lumber plant supporting a mill town by the heavy penalties we impose for infractions of the Labor Relations Act well may mean the disruption of the family life of the employees, whose children must shift to the schools of a distant plant's neighborhood; the foreclosures of homes with the loss of part payments; and, worse than this, the mental agony of parents and children that the supporting father may be marked with the stigma of the jobless and indigent.

These disturbing and often tragic results may be deemed to have been considered by Congress as necessary for the ultimate good of the creative life of Americans. However, because that good is to be obtained by powerful bureaus radiating out, through a major and minor officialdom from a distant Washington, the danger to our democracy is always present of the denial of those civil liberties upon which its existence depends. If the Anglo-American civil right to be made a party and to have notice and hearing must be observed in the orderly procedure of a court of law before a decision, as here, can immediately and directly destroy a citizen's property or his liberty to contract to form a labor association, a fortiori must it be recognized in the looser proceedings we have recognized before subordinate and superior bureau officers, whose administrative decisions are finally made far from the homes of the regulated persons.

It has been said that the Board is accuser, prosecutor, judge, and executioner. This is obvious as to the first three functions. In our democracy their exercise requires the greatest of wisdom and detachment when, as here, the accuser and prosecutor sits as judge. The orders it made in this case are not final against the employer, who is a party in the Board proceeding and has the right to appear here and defend against a petition for our decree of enforcement. With regard to the destruction of the absent union the situation is entirely different.

* * * * * * *

This is the kind of administrative absolutism denounced in democratic assemblies in America as characteristic of the totalitarianism of the Central European Powers. In the consideration of congressional intent the polemics of deeply moved public men, whose apprehensions are now realized in the conquest of two of the Scandinavian democracies, are not to be ignored. We do not believe that Congress, in the National Labor Relations Act, intended to make a long start on the road where our civil liberties are to be regarded as the "pale phantoms of objective law," which no longer control our deliberations, as the German chief justice on the first session of the newly constituted court in conquered Poland is reported to have told his colleagues.

* * * * * * *

The Board correctly claims that its advocacy in other cases has succeeded in destroying other absent unions. It also claims it has established the denial of such civil liberty as a part of our administrative law.

* * * * * * *

The National Licorice opinion (85 L. Ed. at 541) holds, in the language of section 1 of the act, the function of the Board to be that of "protecting the exercise by workers of full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of negotiating the terms and conditions of their employment." Our attention has not been directed to any statute in which Congress has declared its intent to afford such "protecting" which consciously has been held to afford it by condemning the protected party in absentia and ordering its execution. Hence, we cannot believe that the Supreme Court in the Licorice opinion holds that Congress, while intending such "protecting," made it mere mockery by conferring on the Board the power to destroy by disestablishment a union so self-organized or to frustrate it in the performance of the very functions which the act requires the Board to protect without making it a party or giving it an opportunity to be heard.

* * * * * * *

The Board's petition for enforcement of its order that the respondent employer shall not bargain collectively with the association and that respondent shall disestablish that union is denied. Decision on the petition for enforcement of other orders of the Board is reserved.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to make it clear that the review provided for in the bill before us is not a strange review. It is not a novelty. It is not a departure from American principles and the American system of administration of justice. It is not even a departure from the American way of administering commercial law or statutes which undertake to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

The issue in the circuit court of appeals is an issue of law. On the full record which is provided for, the questions are as follows, and I say that they are questions of law:

First. That the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence.

Second. That the decision is not supported by the findings of fact.

Third. That the decision was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing.

Fourth. That the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be.

Fifth. That the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States.

Mr. President, no legislator in the Congress of the United States ought to object to a review by a court of law of an issue or controversy on a question of law in one of these bureaus instead of submitting the citizen of the United States in his controversy with his Government to an arbitrary and final decision by one of the bureaus on questions of law.

I think I have stated enough to indicate that I regard the issue as fundamental. It is an issue on which the division will come between those who believe in the American system of administration of justice and those who do not believe in it. It will come between those who believe in that amount of regulation of private enterprise which is consistent with the maximum degree of competition and the minimum degree of interference and those, on the other hand, who believe, as stated by the Attorney General, that the only way the interest of the public in private enterprise can be regulated is by day-to-day management and control of private enterprise. That is where the division in thought will come. Men who do not understand the issue may be lined up on one side or the other; but if they do understand the issue, that is what it means. We go forward on the road to the left or we stop at the turning of the ways, so far as the bill goes, and say, "We will not go this way any farther." We have already made it necessary for the Supreme Court to comment upon our system in the manner stated in the recent decision which I have just quoted. Let us not go any further. Let us not encourage warfare between labor unions which may result in the dissolution of an opposing union by fiat of a board created by the Congress of the United States, in absentia, without notice, and without hearing. Let us not go any farther on the road which leads to the treatment of the planting and cultivation of an orange tree as an act of interstate commerce subject to regulation by some bureau merely because the orange which grows on the tree is intended to go into interstate commerce.

I say, let us stop at every point where we can block the movement into the European channel, which is so dangerous to the world today, and which probably represents a revolution against which America will have to build up a counter-revolution if it is to be blocked.

I believe I have said enough to show that I am in favor of the Logan-Walter bill. I think that every Member of the minority—certainly every Member with whom I have talked—is in favor of the bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I am in agreement with the very able addresses delivered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I believe they have covered very thoroughly the subject of the so-called Walter-Logan bill. I believe that the bill is necessary to check the administrative law which has grown up in Washington in connection with the bureaucracy which has been established by this administration.

The Chicago Daily Tribune published on yesterday, November 18, an editorial entitled, "The Citizen and His Day in Court," which very clearly analyzes this legislation. I should like to have the editorial incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CITIZEN AND HIS DAY IN COURT

Senator BARKLEY consented sometime ago to call up the Walter-Logan bill in this week of November. The House has passed it by a vote of 282 to 97 and, what's more, the Senate itself passed it last year unanimously. The trouble there was that BARKLEY and MINTON asked for a reconsideration of the vote, and the bill was dead for that session.

The Walter-Logan bill corrects the administrative law which has become so powerful under the new bureaucracy by giving the citizen his day in court. If he thinks a rule of administrative procedure is injurious and without legal authority, he can ask for a judicial review. He will still have the courts between him and administrators who have been and likely will be arbitrary.

That's an old principle of our Government and there never has been much honest argument against it. It was supposed to be a distinguishing feature of a government described as one of laws and not of men. It was thought to be an inalienable right of the citizen in a dispute with administrative government to appeal to the courts.

The powerful new bureaucracy doesn't like it and it asserts a doctrine that is natural to dictatorship, which is that you can't get things done if you are forever in litigation. A headstrong bureaucracy, whether it is right or wrong, is in a hurry and it can't listen to the arguments of citizens about their legal rights when it issues its orders. We have never before been in such a hurry that we couldn't give a citizen the right to take his appeal to a court of justice.

One of the reasons for the Walter-Logan bill was found in the administration of the Wagner Labor Act, for which amendments are pending in Congress. The appointment of Dr. Harry A. Millis to succeed J. Warren Madden as chairman of that board has been followed by the resignations of the secretary, Nathan Witt; Thomas I. Emerson, associate general counsel; and Alexander B. Hawes, the chief administrative examiner. These men were regarded as largely responsible for the arbitrary conduct in the administration of the law, and there is some expectation that there will be an improvement, but here, again, without the amendment of the law itself and without the Walter-Logan bill, the question is one of men and not of law. If the law protects the citizen, men may change but the guaranty of justice does not.

The opposition to the Walter-Logan bill is evidence that the administrative government wants a free, loose hand to do as it pleases, and that is a surrender of the principles upon which this country was founded. Both Houses of Congress at one time or another have passed the bill and the previous votes really represent the convictions of most of the Members. If the bill fails in the Senate this time, it is because of pressure exerted by the executives.

AMERICAN AID TO GREECE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 15th instant I addressed the Senate concerning the unprovoked aggression upon Greece by Mussolini. I called attention to the former friendship between Greece and Italy when Greece associated herself with the Allies in the World War. Italy then was glad to have the assistance of the valiant and intrepid Greeks. They rendered important aid in the World War. We all know that Italy is the beneficiary of classical Greece. Her literature and in part her laws, her civilization, stemmed largely from Greece. There can be no justification for the assault which Italy is now making upon Greece.

It has been suggested that Mussolini and Hitler and Stalin have agreed upon the division not only of Europe but of other parts of the world; and perhaps to Italy has been allocated the task of destroying Greece. I can only say that she will have an impossible task, notwithstanding the boast of Mussolini that he will destroy Greece and annihilate Great Britain. This boast of Mussolini's is not creditable to him; indeed, it reveals a mentality reminiscent of the Dark Ages, when nations and peoples received "stabs in the back."

In my address I quoted from a dispatch by Mr. Aldridge, a representative of the New York Times, in which he described the battle then raging between the Greek and Italian forces. I am happy to learn that the Greek resistance against the invader continues most favorably.

Another point that has afforded satisfaction to the friends of Greece and of democracy is found in the fact that the Albanian people, who were subjugated by Italy, are not responding as Mussolini would desire, to his demands, and that Albanians are organizing themselves to throw off the Italian yoke. The New York Times reports from Istanbul, under the date line of November 16, that the consul general of Albania in that city has called on all Albanians resident in Turkey to report in order that they may organize themselves into a fighting unit on the side of the Greeks and against the Italians.

In the mountain fastnesses of Albania and Greece the conflict between the Italian and Greek forces is continuing; and the heroism and courage and successes of Greece have won the admiration of all democratic nations. The conduct of the Greek forces is reminiscent of the bravery and courage of the Greeks at Thermopylae and Salamis. But we are advised of the fact that the Greeks are lacking in military equipment and are in need of medical supplies, food, and clothing. We are cognizant of the fact that Greece depends on the outside world for 60 percent of her food supplies and many of her necessities. It is therefore imperative that the friends of Greece should take cognizance of her need and exert themselves to meet her urgent requirements.

I note an appeal made by Elias Krimbas, Minister of Public Welfare for Greece, addressed to the United States, imploring the immediate dispatch of a list of necessities. Here is a partial list:

Powdered milk, cocoa, various meat extracts, flannel and woolen goods for adults and children, clothing of any kind, raincoats, and tents. In the field of medicine, cod-liver oil, iodine, iodoform and antitetanus, antimeningitis, antigangrene, antistreptococcus, antidysentery, antidiphtheria serums, and antiseptic gauze, bandages, surgical instruments, and installations. In addition to that, due to the destruction by Italian aviators of agricultural products stored in warehouses, the following foods are needed: Rice, tea, coffee, sugar, canned goods, dry beans and peas.

In order that immediate relief may be provided, a committee composed of some of our public-spirited citizens, together with members of the Order of Ahepa, a fraternal organization of Americans of Greek ancestry, to whose ranks a great number of citizens of non-Hellenic ancestry belong, have organized a relief association which will conduct a systematic campaign which will bring to the American people the needs of Greece, and effect such organizations as may be necessary to obtain the desired relief. Harold S. Vanderbilt, Richard Mellon and Winthrop Aldrich—to name only a few—have already enlisted their services in this worthy cause.

I may add that I should consider it a privilege to aid the organization in its worthy efforts, and I have no doubt that others in the legislative and other branches of the Government will do likewise.

It has been suggested by some who are well acquainted with the former Minister of Greece, Mr. Demetrios Sicilianos, that he be assigned an important part in organizing and extending relief throughout Greece. While Minister of Greece in the United States, he was universally respected; and American citizens who are desirous of aiding Greece will be glad if he is actively associated with the relief organization formed in the United States.

It is known that in many of the universities and other educational institutions there are Greek-letter fraternities and sororities; and it is believed that they will be responsive to the needs of Greece in this hour, and will associate themselves with local or other organizations engaged in obtaining funds and supplies greatly needed by Greece at this time.

In this dark hour for the democratic nations, Great Britain and Greece are valorously and heroically combatting the forces of evil and tyranny. The people of America cannot be otherwise than deeply concerned in the contest, and I feel sure they will extend not only their sympathy but their aid to Greece and to Great Britain, who, as I have indicated, are upholding the cause of freedom, and who almost alone are fighting against assaults by nations which seek to impose despotic rule upon the world.

The dictators' challenge to democracy is world-wide, and the struggle is indivisible. It is believed by many that the security of the American people will be affected by the results of the great conflict now raging, and by the ability of the Greeks and the Britons to thwart the plans of the world's dictators.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECLAMATION PROJECTS IN NEVADA

Mr. HATCH. From the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation I report favorably House bill 10543 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the clerk.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10543) to make the excess land provisions of the Federal reclamation laws inapplicable to the lands of the Washoe County Water Conservation District, Truckee storage project, Nevada, and the Pershing County Water Conservation District, Nevada.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask what the bill proposes. Its purpose is not clear from its title.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this particular bill relates to only two districts in the State of Nevada. It was prepared by Representative SCRUGHAM, of Nevada, and passed the House unanimously on yesterday. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] has requested that this action be taken.

The parts of the Reclamation Act which the bill relieves provide that no person shall own more than 160 acres of land under a reclamation project. The two projects which are involved in this bill are situated in a place in Nevada where 160 acres are not enough. A person must have more land than 160 acres in order to farm successfully and carry on livestock-feeding operations. The Department of the Interior has reported favorably on the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10543) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the action of the House on the resolution for final adjournment, the Senate will not be called upon at this time to vote on it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BRIDGES. May I ask what was the action?

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator know what the action was?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I am asking for information.

Mr. BARKLEY. The House defeated the resolution, but I think the Senator already knew that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator.

RECESS TO FRIDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that Thursday will be Thanksgiving Day, and we shall not be in session on that day, it has occurred to me that we might take a recess until Friday. I do not wish to have a vote on the pending motion today, because there is to be some further discussion of it, and at this late hour it would not be convenient. Inasmuch as we apparently shall be here at least for some time, I think we might recess until Friday. We shall not be in session on Thursday anyway.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I assume that the sponsors of the pending legislation wish to make progress with it. So far as I am concerned, I should like to have the Senate meet and act on the pending motion, or else act on it tonight.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is impossible to act on it tonight for the reason that all the discussion so far has been on one side, and there is to be some further discussion in connection with the bill before it is voted on. I do not think that is an unreasonable request. Personally, I have not any objection to meeting tomorrow; but some Senators wanted to know whether we were to recess for the Thanksgiving holiday; and, in view of the situation, it occurred to me that no time would be lost by doing so.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not object.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRIDGES. When is Thanksgiving?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not regard that as a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Thanksgiving, of course, may be every day to any man who has anything to be thankful for and is willing to express his thanks. I am not surprised at the Senator's lack of familiarity on that subject, because perhaps he does not qualify so as to be thankful.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock on Friday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire an executive session?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. In view of the fact that we shall be here, there is no hurry about the pending appointments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Friday, November 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, O Lord, do we lift up our hearts; hear Thou us from Thy dwelling place, and when Thou hearest, forgive. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men. Heavenly Father, Thou who art infinite truth, wisdom, and light for our dark day, consider and hear us. The stars and the mountains, fields and forests, vales and flowering meadows speak of Thy glory and call for Thy praise. Do Thou bless family groups and the aged waiting for the morning. We pray Thee to guard our youth as they feel the challenge of an earnest call to serve their day and generation. Oh, everywhere throughout our broad domain, turn blight into bloom and gloom into light and let every fireside sing unto the Lord and show forth His salvation from day to day. Almighty God, banish bitterness of spirit and resentment of thought from the breasts of all our citizens and unite them in the common weal of all classes. Give Thy richest benedictions to all ministers and teachers of the Word of God. Oh, do Thou temper the wind and the wave for our absent and separated loved ones and bless us all with the mercy of grateful hearts. Graciously regard and abide with our President, our Speaker, the Members, officers, and employees of the Congress. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF RECORD

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday in the RECORD at page 13644 I was interrogated on the question of a provision in the Selective Service Act, and in error I stated that osteopaths had been included in the legislation. I wish to correct that statement and to say that I had reference to the deferment of osteopaths, along with other students.

Mr. TENEROWICZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on alien registration and the Pole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. TENEROWICZ. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] being unavoidably detained so that he is unable to attend today's session, I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein the remarks of R. M. Evans, Administrator, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, on the development of the farmers' wheat program in the United States, which he believes is a very explicit explanation of the work done by that Administration over the past 2 years.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to refer to the election, but I have to do it. One of the strong points I emphasized in the campaign was that we needed Wendell Willkie for the particular reason that he only would end the national emergency when it should be ended. The armistice ended it in the other war, but we are not at war yet. Yesterday we had tangible evidence of this on the floor here by a bill creating the position of Under Secretary of War, and an agreement was finally reached that the national emergency on the continuance of that office would not be ended before the 20th of January in 1945 unless the President acted. I said in the campaign that the national emergency would never end as long as Franklin Roosevelt was President, even if hostilities should cease around the world, and now we have put it down in black and white that it will not end, for sure, during the third term.

ONE EMERGENCY ENDED—THE THREAT OF WENDELL L. WILLKIE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we all sympathize with the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] in wanting what he calls the national emergency to end. But there is one national emergency that is ended now, and that national emergency is Wendell L. Willkie. [Laughter and applause.]

That ought to be very gratifying to the real Republicans in this House as it is to the real Democrats.

I know you real Republicans never want to see another political mugwump take over your party and try to run it. [Applause.]

I know that it will be gratifying to the millions of people in this country who are overcharged every month for their electric lights and power and to the farmers who are begging for rural electrification.

I know it will be gratifying to the Members of Congress on the Republican side who have to run for reelection 2 years from now.

I know it will be gratifying to those millions of disgusted Republicans throughout the country who listened in on Mr. Willkie's speeches and suffered in the spirit during this campaign when the real issues for which they were supposed to stand were ignored or forgotten.

It ought to be gratifying to all the American people to know that this ends that one political emergency, the threat of Wendell L. Willkie and his Power Trust fascisti. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I am gratified that on this, my first day in the House, I should listen to the dulcet tones and the great oratory of the gentleman from Mississippi. I feel myself back in that beautiful place in Wyeville, of which I told you once before, where he was making a funeral oration over a dead man and advocating that he be——

Mr. RANKIN. I did not say Mr. Willkie was physically dead; I said he was dead politically.

Mr. BOLLES. Oh, I do not know about that. I am grateful to be here and to be a reelected Member of Congress, and I notice that my vote in my district was larger than the entire vote of all the gentlemen from Mississippi, including the gentleman from Tupelo. [Laughter and applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the legislative business of today and before adjournment, I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on jobs or pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a statement by Mr. David Lawrence in connection with a bill which I have introduced and now pending in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith certain correspondence on the subject of the advisability of superhighways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix on two subject matters.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, we just heard a statement on the floor that the emergency should have expired and that it had expired. If that is the case, there is no reason why we should not vote to adjourn sine die when that resolution comes up, and I, for one, think we ought to, and every Democrat ought to vote for it for this reason: Every day that this House remains in session is a vote of lack of confidence in our party leadership and an insult to the President of the United States and to the majority of the American people, who have just expressed their confidence in him and his leadership. It is about time that the majority party quit letting the minority dictate the policies of the House. I shall vote to adjourn sine die.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an article by Richard Neuberger.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

W. P. A. IN POLITICS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a letter from the W. P. A., Zanesville, Ohio, office, dated September 28, 1940, saying, among other things:

W. P. A. regulations require that each applicant must have on file a statement of political policy before he can be given full consideration or appointment in a supervisory capacity. We are enclosing Form ADM–743, Statement of Political Activity.

It is apparent that the Hatch Act meant nothing in the last election to the W. P. A., and that its violation throughout the country was a regular practice rather than an irregular practice. It is apparent that their irregularities have increased rather than diminished, and that the attention of Congress should be given to that disgrace. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement: It was expected that the conference report on the so-called Mexican claims bill would be taken up first this morning. That will not be called up.

There is only one other legislative matter to be passed on during the day, if we reach it, and that is the conference report on the Ramspeck bill. The Senate must act first. Just when the Senate will act the Chair has not been advised. It is hoped that the Senate will act early in the afternoon. Consent has already been granted the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] to call up this report when he desires.

Therefore, after conferring with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], of course, a recess would be in order, subject to the call of the Chair, or for a definite period; but the Chair thinks that if Members want to proceed to make speeches at this time, they may be recognized until the message from the Senate is received or until a recess is taken.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if I might address an inquiry to the Chair, I would like to have it understood that the question of adjourning sine die, which may be presented this afternoon, will not come until after the conference report on the Ramspeck bill. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. If the conference report on the Ramspeck bill comes at a reasonable time. The Chair will keep the gentleman informed as far as he can; but it is the intention, if the conference report comes here, say, by 3 or 4 o'clock, that will be taken up. There will be nothing else.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is the Chair in a position to inform the House, if the Ramspeck bill does not come in within a reasonable time, there will be a vote on the sine die adjournment question in any event?

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

THE RAMSPECK BILL

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time so that I might advise the Members of the House, if they did not already know, of the action taken by the conferees on the so-called Ramspeck civil-service bill.

The Members will recall that when this bill was taken up for consideration on the conference report, the House, by an overwhelming vote, instructed the conferees to return to their conference and insist on the so-called Nichols amendment, which was an amendment compelling the observation of the quota system as it applied to the Ramspeck bill. The conferees have absolutely, 100 percent, disregarded the instruction of the House.

Not only did they not insist on the Nichols amendment, but they agreed to a so-called compromise. I read you the compromise:

The appointment of any person occupying any position covered into the apportioned civil service in the District of Columbia—

Now listen—in the District of Columbia only—under the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be charged to the apportionment of his State.

This simply is existing law and nothing else. It merely adds to the evil we were attempting to correct by the Nichols amendment, because under this amendment they would only be charged to the quotas of the States, and those States which were already overquota would just get further above their quota than they were before, and there is absolutely no protection to the underquota States in this compromise amendment. I hope when the conference report comes back to the House for action this afternoon the membership will disagree to the conference report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman is prepared to advise the membership as to how the conferees of the House divided on this proposal to violate the instructions of the House?

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not know what the division of the vote was. I presume some member of the conference committee could advise us.

Mr. COX. I understand it was a divided vote.

Mr. NICHOLS. It was a divided vote, yes; it was not a unanimous vote. I certainly think the Members of the House ought to insist that the House conferees pay some attention at least to the instructions of the overwhelming majority of this body. The only way we can insist on that in this instance is, when this conference report comes in today for consideration, to vote the conference report down.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute to answer the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. If I understood the gentleman from Oklahoma correctly he made the statement that the conference committee agreed to this report unanimously. That is not correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. If I made that statement I was, of course, in error.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The majority favored it, but it was not unanimous on the part of the entire group.

Mr. NICHOLS. If I said it was unanimous, what I intended to say was that the proposed amendment 100 percent violated the instructions of the House.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is exactly correct.

DEATH OF HON. CHARLES F. X. O'BRIEN

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with much regret I announce the death on November 13 of my predecessor in office who served in the House of Representatives during the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses, the Honorable Charles F. X. O'Brien.

Mr. O'Brien was a very great Democrat. He has continuously since leaving the House served in various offices of our party and up to the day of his death gave most effective and sincere service to the Democratic Party. Mr. O'Brien was an able lawyer greatly respected and beloved by the people of Jersey City. His passing is a source of genuine sorrow not only to his family, relatives, and friends but to the city he served so well. My deepest sympathy is with his wife and family, whose happiness has always been the most important consideration of his very busy and unselfish life. May his soul rest in peace.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

SMEAR CAMPAIGN TACTICS UNDERMINE REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have a very disagreeable duty to perform here this afternoon, and I hope the Members of the House will bear with me. It has nothing whatever to do with partisan politics, but has to do with the membership of this House and with every man or woman in public life.

Certain scurrilous, false, and, I believe, libelous charges have been made against me in my Representative capacity and were circulated against me during the campaign. Some of these false charges were placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Instead of rising to a question of personal privilege and getting an hour to answer these charges in detail, I have taken this time—15 minutes—merely to present the facts; and when I do so, I believe I will be speaking in behalf of every Member of Congress, Republican and Democrat alike, of every single public official in the United States, and also to protect the American people from being victims of dastardly and false campaign and smear propaganda.

In the first place, I should like to discuss certain statements that were inserted in the RECORD, I believe by extension of remarks, on October 22, 1940. I will just read excerpts from that statement:

"The Fish mansion is at 55 East Seventy-seventh Street, New York, and, according to State Department records, is the home of Johannes Borchers, consul general of Germany, who has lived there 5 years.

"The house was left to HAM FISH by his father, whose will was probated in 1893. New York City records show no change in ownership since that time. FISH is reported to have been renting the house to Germans about 1931, shortly before Hitler. The lease expired 2 years later, about the time Hitler came into power, and he renewed, reportedly with an increased rent. Two years ago, 1938, he is reported to have renewed the lease once again, this time with a substantial increase from the Nazis."

Mr. Maloney, because of this, points out that there are implications in the transaction which makes it the Nation's business, inasmuch as Mr. FISH is the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the House, and therefore the matter should receive the most careful investigation of the House itself.

Mr. Maloney believes that Congressman FISH owes it to himself that this question is correctly answered.

Mr. Speaker, what are the facts? In the first place, this article is a reprint from a statement issued by Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen. They published this statement in their syndicated column throughout the United States, indicating that I had literally been bribed by the Nazis.

The facts are that my father back in 1931 rented his house in New York to the German Consul General long before the advent of Hitler in Germany. The house was rented for the sum of $4,800 annually. When I read this article of Pearson and Allen I did not know but what there might have been some increase in rent, because I have nothing to do with the rental of the house. I therefore got in touch with my brother-in-law, who is in the real-estate business and who looks after my father's real estate, and found that in 1931 it was rented at $4,800 a year to the German consul general and that ensuing consuls general took over the lease; but instead of there being increases in rent as stated by the Pearson-Allen article which was incorporated in the RECORD, I found there were no increases in rent whatsoever but instead there was an actual reduction of $800 on October 1, 1933, so that the rent was reduced from $4,800 to $4,000, an amount which hardly pays the taxes, upkeep, repairs, and so forth, on the property.

This libelous article was published broadcast and inserted in the RECORD for only one purpose: To make out that I was pro-Nazi and was in the pay of the Nazis, that I was being subsidized by them. I own only a one-fifth interest in the house and having nothing to do with it. I have never met the consul general who lives in this house. But I do know that a few years ago he refused to attend and boycotted a German-day meeting held in Madison Square Garden, New York, where I was one of the speakers, because I had denounced the persecution of the Jews in Germany and Hitler's acts of aggression. The Pearson-Allen statement is damnably false, and the Congress should enact legislation to protect both the public and public officials from such political ghouls and character assassins. This is not a personal issue, but if permitted to continue it may undermine the confidence of the American people in the integrity of our public officials and destroy our free institutions and democratic Government which is now under attack throughout the world.

Yet this scurrilous article was put in the RECORD, and it is my disagreeable duty to answer it. I do not know what action can be taken except to sue for libel or to horsewhip the authors who syndicated those articles throughout the United States. These monstrous charges are absolutely false and without one iota of truth. Not only were there no increases but, on the contrary, there was one reduction. I am going to read to the House a letter I have received from a friend of mine by the name of T. A. Ryan, of Cleveland, Ohio, who was an officer in my regiment during the war and is now a colonel in the Reserves. I have received numerous letters from people not alone from my district but also from outside New York State. This letter was addressed to Drew Pearson and Robert Allen, Washington, D. C., and starts "Gentlemen" with a number of question marks.

T. A. RYAN, ENGINEERS BUILDING,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DREW PEARSON AND ROBERT ALLEN,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN???: The Cleveland News of October 21, 1940, carried an article by you relative to the rental of a house in New York to the German consul, I believe this article to be libelous.

I had the honor of serving in the same regiment as HAMILTON FISH in the last war and know him to be a courageous officer, an honorable gentleman, and a patriotic American. Apparently, according to your lights, one must sing God Save the King to be a good American. I see nothing wrong about renting a house to a German consul. We are not at war with Germany.

If I were Congressman FISH, I believe I would horsewhip you, although, judging by your sewer journalism, the odor would overpower him if he got close enough to do it. I know him well enough to know he needs no assistance for such a task but if he did, I would enjoy putting on a gas mask and coming to his aid.

Very truly yours,

T. A. RYAN.

The item referred to above was one of the most scurrilous things I ever heard.

T. A. RYAN.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Does not the gentleman think he is making a serious mistake by answering such a ridiculous statement? Does he not think he is just dignifying it?

Mr. FISH. No; I do not. I must admit I discussed this with a good many people and this morning I appeared before Senator GILLETTE'S committee investigating smear propaganda and presented this false smear charge as well as some others which I will discuss in a few minutes. If this had not been broadcast throughout the country and if it had not been sent out in innumerable pamphlets, at least 100,000 were circulated in my district, and probably an equal number in New York City, I would agree with the gentleman. It has been so widely circulated that I think it is my duty to present the facts to the House of Representatives.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. May I state an observation. I assure the gentleman I sympathize with him in this slanderous attack on him. May I say at this time if there is to be a horsewhipping bee I will furnish the mule lash, and I will be there to help him.

Mr. FISH. I do not think the gentleman is the only one who would join in that act, but I assure the gentleman I need no assistance if I decide to take that course, although I appreciate his support and cooperation.

Mr. DINGELL. There is no other way of dealing with some of these contemptible people.

Mr. FISH. The only way I know of is through libel action or horsewhipping or the old gun method. It is too bad that has gone out. That used to be resorted to in the old days of Benton and Clay. They would have taken a gun and gone after them. They would have either horsewhipped them or shot them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman intend to offer a resolution requesting or ordering that this matter be expunged from the RECORD?

Mr. FISH. I think that should be done. I would like to have the gentleman offer it.

Mr. Speaker, I appeared before the Gillette committee this morning, not as a partisan but to seek remedial legislation. I was elected and carried all three counties in my district, four out of five cities, and had a majority of 9,000; so what I have to say has nothing to do with partisanship; it affects neither party one way or the other but does affect every Member of the House and every public official.

The circular which I hold in my hand was distributed throughout my district. There were 100,000 sent out in my district and probably another 100,000 in the city of New York. Here are two pictures of Fritz Kuhn. Here is a picture of Fritz Kuhn, and here is another bona fide picture of Fritz Kuhn and myself.

Under the first picture of Fritz Kuhn it is stated, "Fritz Kuhn, as he testified before the House Committee on Un-American Activities, who is now in jail and with whom Fish is associated."

That was sent out by mail. Then there is another picture of Frtiz Kuhn and myself, and it is a bona fide picture.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the facts? The facts are that 3 years ago I was a member of the State constitutional convention in New York State, which held a summer session at Albany. I was appointed chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. As a delegate to that convention I introduced a resolution or what they call a proposal to amend the Constitution, which would prohibit the arming, the drilling, disciplining, parading, and the uniforming of Nazis, Communists, and other un-American groups. A hearing was arranged and was held in the assembly chamber. The assembly was packed on the day of the hearing. Fritz Kuhn came there to oppose my resolution, as did Communist spokesmen. The photographers took a picture of Fritz Kuhn and myself at that hearing. Now, remember, Fritz Kuhn had come there to oppose the very thing I was trying to do—that was to put him and his organization out of business. Yet this picture was taken and circulated extensively in my district by mail and otherwise, indicating that I was associated with Fritz Kuhn.

My complaint to Senator GILLETTE'S "smear" committee was that this scurrilous type of propaganda undermines the faith of the American people in their elective representatives. As a matter of fact, it undermines the faith of the American people in all Members of Congress. If this be true of one Member of Congress it may be true of all Members of Congress. It also undermines their faith in our free institutions and representative form of government.

Every Member of Congress knows that for many years I have been opposing and exposing the activities and propaganda of the Communists, bundists, and all Un-American groups and will continue to do so as long as I am in public life. Ten years ago I was the chairman of a House committee to investigate the activities of the Communists in the United States that was the forerunner of the Dies committee. I believe the report and recommendations of our committee has been the cornerstone around and upon which all other investigations of un-American propaganda and activities have been built. I have religiously supported and voted for the continuance of the Dies committee which has resulted in sending to jail both Earl Browder, head of the Communist Party, and Fritz Kuhn, the head of the bund. It is right that the Dies committee should investigate all foreign propaganda in the United States. When I appeared before the Senate committee today, all I said, after presenting the facts, was that this vicious and false pamphlet that was sent through the mail and otherwise circulated was signed only by a "Non-Partisan Committee to Defeat Hamilton Fish, Hotel Washington, Newburgh." The pamphlet also indicated that if you went there you could find the evidence to substantiate the charge and numerous others along the same line.

I was out West campaigning. This scurrilous and libelous pamphlet was issued at the eleventh hour, so I could not get my replies into the rural papers, which are issued on Thursdays and Fridays. When I got home I went to Newburgh and went around to this hotel with my lawyer and found there was no representative of that committee there, and naturally no evidence to be produced. The pamphlet was signed merely by a nonpartisan committee but no names were included. There was no one that I could sue for libel.

My suggestions to the Gillette committee were that if similar smear pamphlets and false propaganda are ever issued in the future, they should be signed by some individuals so that those individuals can be sued; that the name of the printer be placed upon the pamphlets; and that those who finance such false and scurrilous documents have their names likewise placed upon them so that they can be held responsible. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I read an editorial recently in a Detroit paper which stated that carrying out that sort of suggestion might interfere with the freedom of the press. Will the gentleman tell me what he thinks of a statement of that kind in a bona fide newspaper?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows, and I believe the Members of the House know, that I belong to the liberal wing of my party. I believe in the freedom of the press and in freedom of speech. But anyone who states that freedom of speech is interfered with by exposing or prohibiting by law false and scurrilous statements does not know what he is talking about. This vicious practice constitute a direct attack on all free institutions, including freedom of speech. [Applause.]

I have taken this opportunity to speak and to appeal to both Democrats and Republicans, as there is nothing partisan in my proposal, so that, when the Senate committee investigating smear propaganda acts and sends proper legislation over here, we will expedite the passage of such legislation in our own interest and for the protection of the American people. Of course, I lost votes when this picture of Fritz Kuhn and me was circulated throughout my district. Of course, I lost votes when it implied that the Nazis had increased the rent on my father's house, in spite of the fact that it was an utterly false statement, as the rent had been actually decreased. I am not afraid in a campaign to meet any issues, particularly the greatest of all issues, Keeping America Out of War, which was probably the reason for this contemptible attack. The reason I am answering these charges now is that they were issued at the eleventh hour, and I could not answer them adequately before election. I feel that it is my duty as a Member of the House of Representatives to present these facts to you. I hope that in the next Congress you will vote to protect all Members of Congress from such scurrilous and false smear propaganda, by the proper kind of legislation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. This resolution is offered merely for the protection of the House and to keep the RECORD straight. I ask that the Clerk read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 634

Resolved, That so much of the extension in the RECORD referred to by the Member from New York and which refers to the Member from New York [Mr. FISH] be and is hereby ordered expunged.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire recognition on the resolution?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not care to discuss the resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE CHARLES O'CONNOR

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad privilege to announce the death of my predecessor in Congress, Hon. Charles O'Connor, who served in the Seventy-first Congress, having been elected in 1928. He died at Denver last week.

Mr. O'Connor and I had a heated general election contest in my district in 1930, and afterward he filed a contest in this House over the seat. Notwithstanding this fact, we remained close friends. Mr. O'Connor was a fine, high-class gentleman. During his incumbency here in the Congress he was known as a keen debater and as one of the wits of the House. He was an educated, cultured, and splendid gentleman in every respect. He had thousands of friends in my district, who deplore his passing.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, except for the fact that we are marking time waiting for the conference report on the Ramspeck bill, I would not take even 2 minutes to sing a swan song, but as long as we have the opportunity I do want to take advantage of this minute or two to say that I have enjoyed as I have never enjoyed anything else the 2 years I have served in this House. [Applause.] One hundred and eight thousand good friends and neighbors seemed to want me to come back to Connecticut, and on the first of the year I will be back with them, I hope, to enjoy some of the prosperity that I think was a factor in the election.

I believe anybody can always look back to even a short period of service in the House. If I can leave at the end of 2 years feeling as I do that I have more friends now than I had when I came here the time I have been here has been very well spent. [Applause.]

CIVIL-SERVICE BILL

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma, who had the floor a few minutes ago, seemed to imply, although I do not believe he intended to, that the conference report that will be presented soon on the bill H. R. 960 is a unanimous report of the committee. It is not a unanimous report, but the majority members of the committee were for it.

The report has the two controversial provisions somewhat changed. One of them takes out the so-called Nichols amendment and provides what is now, I believe, the present law on the question. The other gets rid of that controversial feature of requiring photographs. A letter is presented from the Civil Service Commission stating that they have decided not to require photographs from now on, of those who apply for positions in the civil service. It is rather interesting that on the last night, or at the eleventh hour, or whatever it is, the Commission decided after all these years not to require these photographs.

I am particularly opposed to this bill because it does not provide for competitive examinations in the civil service. It simply permits the persons who now have these jobs to take noncompetitive examinations, compete against yourself and if you get 70 percent then you can hold your job as long as you live. I thought, in view of the fact that we will have only a short time to discuss this measure that these matters ought to be presented to you at this particular time. [Applause].

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will now stand in recess. The bells will be rung at 1:30 and the House will resume its session at 1:45 p. m.

(Thereupon, at 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess until 1:45 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired at 1:45 p. m., the House was called to order by the Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Clair, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. EXTENSION OF CLASSIFIED EXECUTIVE CIVIL SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RAMSPECK submitted the following conference report on the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 960) extending the classified civil service of the United States, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommend in the accompanying conference report:

(1) Senate amendment No. 1 excluded the offices or positions in the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the House conferees have agreed to this.

(2) As the bill passed the House it excluded "any positions in or connected with the Work Projects Administration". The Senate struck out the words "or connected with". The reason for this was that considerable doubt has arisen about employees working in other agencies of the Government paid from relief funds. It was feared that such employees might be excluded from the provisions of the Act, and that was not intended.

(3) The Senate adopted an amendment excluding positions filled by appointment by the President and confirmed by the Senate, positions of Assistant United States District Attorney, Deputy United States Marshal, and Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. The House conferees have receded so far as the Presidential appointments and assistant district attorneys are concerned, but Deputy Marshals and Deputy Collectors of Internal Revenue will come under the provisions of the bill as agreed to.

(4) Senate amendment No. 4 sought to make the bill apply to people who have been furloughed. The Senate conferees receded from this.

(5) Senate amendment No. 5 provided that only one noncompetitive examination should be given to persons classified under this Act. The House conferees receded from this.

(6) The House receded from this amendment. This is merely a correction in the text.

(7) The Senate receded from this amendment. It was known as the photograph amendment. The Civil Service Commission advised that this matter could be handled by Executive Order, and recommended against including it in this bill.

(8) Senate amendment No. 8 defined the term "incumbent" to include persons on furlough. This was not necessary if amendment No. 4 went out, and the Senate receded.

(9) Senate amendment No. 9 struck out what was referred to in the House as the Keller-Nichols quota amendment. The Senate conferees have agreed to recede from their amendment and to insert a substitute therefor, to which your conferees have agreed. The substitute amendment provides that persons brought into the apportioned classified civil service in the District of Columbia by this Act shall be charged to their State quotas. By charging these positions to the quotas, hereafter the States which have or are over their quotas will have to stand aside until the under-quota States fill their quotas. This seems to your conferees to be as fair solution of this problem as can be worked out. It is to be understood that the quota system applies only to what is known as the departmental service in the City of Washington, and the language used as the bill passed the House would have prevented the classification of anyone in field positions outside of Washington in those States which have or are over their quotas. It is not believed that the sponsors of this amendment in the House intended it to operate other than in the City of Washington.

(10) Senate amendment No. 10 is the provision relating to employees of the House and Senate. The House has receded, but the section was rewritten. It provides that secretaries and clerks to Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, clerks and assistant clerks to standing committees, and clerical employees of the House and Senate, who have served 4 years and are involuntarily separated without prejudice, may acquire a status for transfer to a civil-service position upon passing a suitable examination prescribed by the Civil Service Commission. This provision would apply to such employees for one year from the date of their separations.

(11) Senate amendment No. 11 proposed to give anyone who had served fifteen years or longer a civil service status. The Senate receded from this.

(12) Senate amendment No. 12 proposed to give a classified status to the temporary employees of the Bureau of the Census. We were informed that more than half of the 8,000 temporary Census employees came from over-quota States and the District of Columbia. They definitely understood this employment would be temporary. Their names were drawn from civil-service registers, and in many cases without regard to their standing on such registers, because people from distant places would not come to Washington to take temporary employment. Their names still remain on the registers for consideration for permanent appointment, and many of these employees have gotten regular probational appointments.

(13) Senate amendments 13 through 22, are corrections of the text and have no effect on the bill.

(23) Senate amendment No. 23 provided that in putting the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923 into effect under this bill, there should be no discrimination on account of race, creed, or color. The House receded from this, because the Constitution of the United States provides that there shall be no such discrimination.

(24) Senate amendment No. 24 provided that there should be no discrimination against any person under this Act on account of the place of his or her residence. Since the House receded on the Keller-Nichols amendment, this was no longer necessary, and the Senate receded.

(25) Senate amendment No. 25 struck out the language adopted by the House which would have prevented the lowering of salaries of people whose grades were lowered under the provisions of this Act. The House conferees receded from this.

(26) The House bill provided that Boards of Review should be set up for employees dissatisfied with efficiency ratings, composed of three or more members, the Chairman to be designated by the Civil Service Commission, and the other members to be designated by the head of the department concerned. Senate amendments Numbers 26, 27, and 28 changed this to limit such Boards to three members, the Chairman to be appointed by the Civil Service Commission, one member to be designated by the head of the department concerned, and the third member to be designated by the employees of the department concerned. The House conferees receded from these amendments.

(29) Senate amendment No. 29 provided that at hearings by these Boards of Review the complaining employee, his representative, and representatives of the department concerned, should be afforded an opportunity to submit orally or in writing any information deemed pertinent by the Board, and the parties to the proceeding should have the right to examine and reply to such information. The House conferees receded from this amendment, because it is no more than is usually allowed in connection with all such hearings.

(30) Senate amendment No. 30 provided that in appointing or fixing requirements for appointment to any governmental position, there should be no discrimination on account of persons being graduated from a particular school, or from schools accredited or rated by any association, organization, or group, or on account of membership or nonmembership of any professional, technical, or other society or association. The Senate receded from this amendment, because the Senate has already passed a bill with the same purport, and such bill has been favorably reported to the House and a rule granted for its consideration. The conferees felt that the legislation should be taken up separately and considered on its merits and not injected into this bill.

(31) Senate amendment No. 31 provided that the compensation of the Civil Service Commissioners should be $10,000.00 per year, and the compensation of the Executive Director and Chief Examiner of the Civil Service Commission should be $9,500.00 per year. The House receded from this amendment, because it appears that the Commissioners now receive a salary of $8,500.00 per year, and this amendment will bring them in line with other officials of the government in comparable positions.

(32) Senate amendment No. 32 made the effective date of this Act, April 15, 1941. The Senate conferees receded from this.

ROBERT RAMSPECK,
JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
FRANK W. FRIES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we had this matter up before the House some weeks ago, and the conference report, as you know, was rejected largely, I think, because of amendments No. 7 and No. 9, and those are the only amendments that have been changed in this conference report. Amendment No. 7 dealt with the question of whether or not the Civil Service Commission should require photographs. It was a Senate amendment and the Senate has receded on that question, and the matter will be left up to the Civil Service Commission as it is now. So the question of photographs or fingerprints is not involved in this conference report. That Senate amendment is eliminated.

I would now like to discuss this quota question if I may have the attention of the House, and I will appreciate it very much if the membership will listen to the explanation of this question. It is a complicated matter and one that is very greatly misunderstood.

As the bill passed the House with the Nichols amendment in it, employees holding non-civil-service positions from overquota States could not have attained a civil-service status, but they would have retained their positions. The Senate struck out that amendment which meant that under the Senate version of the bill, employees from overquota States could have attained a civil-service status but would not have been charged against the quota of the State from which they come. Under the conference agreement the Nichols amendment goes out, but in its place we put a provision requiring that all persons appointed in the District of Columbia as a result of this bill shall come under the quota system and shall be charged to the State from which they come.

Under the Nichols amendment the underquota States would not have gotten a chance at any of these positions, because it simply froze the present employees from overquota States in the jobs. Under the compromise reached by your conferees, if the experience of the Commission is the same in this case as it has been in others where the noncompetitive examination has been used to bring groups under civil service, from 20 to 25 percent of the positions will be vacated either through the failure of the employee to pass the mental test or failure to pass the physical test, and all of those 20 to 25 percent of positions thus vacated will be filled by appointments from States now under quota.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. As I understand it, at the present time each State has a quota.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; each State is entitled to its proportionate share of the positions in the District of Columbia on the basis its population bears to the total population of the country.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I understand that. Why the necessity for overquota States? If each State has a quota, then why do they not regard that quota?

Mr. RAMSPECK. For the simple reason that during the World War the Civil Service Commission had to take employees wherever they could be secured, and therefore the quota got out of balance, and since the World War there has been a gradual reduction in the number of positions held by the overquota States and an increase in those held by the underquota States.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Is that same condition again in the making now?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; it is not. Under the present situation they are rapidly filling up the quota of the underquota States, because they have been able to get employees from those States.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I think the gentleman knows what I am concerned about, and that is that in the rural areas of this country they do not have the facilities for getting information about the examinations and it is very seldom that they know about them. The result is that the big cities gather in the civil-service jobs and the rural areas and small towns, especially where the post offices do not even post the notices, have quite a bad break.

Now, if they are going to disregard the quota system and not stick to the quota system, then we are going to run into the same situation as though we did not have any quota.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman probably has not studied this thing as much as I have. As a matter of fact, I do not know of any rule that can be laid down as to why some States are underquota and why others have plenty of applicants for these jobs, because there are rural States that are overquota. For instance, the State of Iowa is overquota, the State of Idaho is overquota, the State of Utah is overquota, the State of Kansas is overquota. So are North and South Dakota, all of which are primarily rural States.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. The gentleman would not tell me that the overquota situation has been existing ever since the World War?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Primarily it has; yes. As to Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, it is true that that situation arose during the World War.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. The point I am making is that if we are going to have a quota system, let us stick to the quota system.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, we are sticking to the quota. If the gentleman wants the figures, I can give them to him.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Now, just wait a minute. Let me answer the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield myself 5 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker.

There are today 21 States and the District of Columbia that are overquota. A few years ago nothing was overquota except Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia. So that the quota system is working and the States that are under quota are gradually coming up to their quotas.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Did I understand the gentleman to say there were 21 States over quota?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. And did I understand the gentleman to say that a few years ago only Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia were overquota?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Then the overquota trouble did not arise in the last war?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I told the gentleman that primarily Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia were the ones affected by the World War. These other States have been brought up to their quotas and they exceed their quotas by a few positions. You cannot keep it absolutely in balance because there is fluctuation from day to day in the number of positions in the Government service and in the appointments made. You cannot keep it absolutely in balance. But what I am trying to explain to the House is that the Civil Service Commission is bringing these States up to their quota. As soon as they reach the quota then no longer will eligibles be certified from those States before they are certified from underquota States.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. With reference to the gentleman's statement that the Civil Service Commission is attempting to bring up these underquota States, I hold in my hand a compilation of the number of appointments under the Ramspeck bill that will go to the different States. They are figured absolutely on the basis of population. I will ask the gentleman if the Civil Service Commission is trying to bring the quotas equal, or even them up, why did not the Civil Service Commission take into consideration the over and under quota States when they made up this compilation for these positions?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not know anything about the gentleman's compilation. I do not know where he got it or what it shows.

Mr. NICHOLS. It came from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman will have some time of his own and he can discuss that chart in his own time. I never saw it and do not know anything about it. But I do know that under this compromise, from 20 to 25 percent of the jobs in the District of Columbia that will be brought under civil service by this bill, will be opened up to the underquota States, and under the Nichols amendment none of them would be opened up. Therefore the underquota States would not benefit under the Nichols amendment.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Under the provisions of this conference report, would employees from the States which are over their quota now be blanketed into the Civil Service?

Mr. RAMSPECK. They would be permitted to take a noncompetitive examination. If they make a passing grade and pass the physical examination, they will become civil-service employees, but if they fail the vacancy thereby created will go to the underquota States.

Mr. MOSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. MOSER. May I ask if the gentleman from Georgia does have the ratio of overquota for the States of Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia at the end of the World War?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; I do not have that information with me.

Mr. MOSER. I ask that because of the balance that was submitted by the Commission before our committee.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. COX. May I inquire of the gentleman if in his opinion the report of the conferees violates the instructions of the House?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No. In my opinion, it does not. The instructions of the House were not to agree to Senate amendment No. 9. We have not agreed to the amendment as it passed the Senate. We have made a compromise.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he will explain the basis upon which he computes the fact that 25 percent of these applicants will fail.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I said that such was the experience of the Civil Service Commission in similar cases where groups of employees were brought into the civil service through noncompetitive examinations.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The conference report is not printed, is not available. I could not understand its reading by the Clerk. Will the gentleman from Georgia be kind enough to read from the conference report the language which is substituted for the Nichols amendment?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I shall be pleased to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. This is the language that has been substituted for amendment No. 9:

> Any person occupying any position covered into the apportioned civil service of the District of Columbia under the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be charged to the apportionment of his State. As used in this section "State" includes a Territory and the District of Columbia.

This means that their quota will be charged with all the appointments and then vacancies will go to the underquota States under the operation of the law.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Is there any reference in this portion of the conference report to persons in the District of Columbia but who have retained their voting rights in the State from which they came?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That has nothing to do with it. There is nothing in the civil-service law that affects their rights to retain their voting privileges in the States. That is a matter of State law.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to take the gentleman's time needlessly, but I understood from the gentleman's reading that if a person, for instance, came from Texas 25 or 30 years ago and had had no contact with the State since, that they would still be charged to Texas.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Only if they can establish legal residence in Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the minority members on the conference committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] and I voted against this conference report. We felt clearly that it was a violation of the instructions of the House. We felt that if we accepted the compromise amendment to the Nichols amendment we were just doubling the evil that the Nichols amendment sought to obviate.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, a chart which was compiled as a result of answers to letters I wrote to the heads of the different departments that employ these people who would be blanketed into the civil service under the so-called Ramspeck bill. This chart, compiled by persons, by States, by departments, sums up to a total of 57,804 people to be blanketed in under the Ramspeck bill. Mr. Speaker, it seems very strange that the Civil Service Commission has never been able to tell us exactly how many people might be blanketed in, although the departments which employ these people can tell us. The Civil Service Commission told us, first, that upward of 270,000 persons might be blanketed in, then 200,000, then 125,000. I was told by one of the officials of the Civil Service Commission that he did not know how the Civil Service Commission arrived at the number of persons to be taken in under this act.

If the Civil Service Commission is so overworked that it cannot find time to get the simple facts, as I was able to obtain them through letters to the heads of the various departments, the Commission should be investigated or reorganized, so that we may have the facts when legislation of this nature is to be considered. Following is a table showing the figures I received as a result of my inquiry to each agency:

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we start all over again and have a real merit bill, a real civil-service bill, so we shall know exactly what we are doing. According to Civil Service Commission statements 30 percent of the persons now employed will lose their positions, but the 70 percent that are taken in will go ahead of 1,000,000 people now on the civil-service registers awaiting appointment. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that this conference report should be defeated; that we should bring in a real bill. I will go along 100 percent for a bill requiring open competitive examinations for these positions. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Gladly.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Did I understand the gentlewoman to say that there are now over 1,000,000 employees under civil service?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There are now 1,000,000 people on the civil-service registers eligible to be employed, waiting to be employed, who have not been appointed. If this bill is passed, these people will be put behind. In other words, the people now to be blanketed in will have precedence in the matter of reemployment over the eligibles now on the civil-service register.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And that notwithstanding the fact that these 1,000,000 people have taken open competitive examinations?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Notwithstanding the fact that they have taken open competitive examinations and that many of them have passed with ratings of 98 and 99 percent. These people to be taken in under this bill have to make only a passing grade, and 70 percent of them will be placed ahead of the others in the matter of reemployment. Clearly, it seems to me, this is a great injustice. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is it more difficult for the Democrats to pass a noncompetitive examination?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I leave that to the gentleman's judgment and to the judgment of the House. They know very well, I think.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is not this a perfect acknowledgment that it is difficult for them to pass an open competitive examination?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; it surely is.

Mr. GIFFORD. In order for them to be placed it has to be by way of a noncompetitive examination.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. In order for them to be placed it would have to be done noncompetitively, and 30 percent will fail, even so.

Mr. GIFFORD. We understand what they are trying to do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. For a very brief question. My time is extremely short.

Mr. TREADWAY. I wanted to ask the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] whether she considered that the adoption of this bill is a drawback to the civil service as we know it to be for the benefit of the employees of the Federal Government.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think so. That is my opinion.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a political question at all. It is a most important piece of legislation, and I regret very deeply that not more consideration is being given to this problem. Let me say that the substitute for the Nichols amendment just nullifies the Nichols amendment whether you agree with that amendment or not. In my opinion the committee has violated the instructions given to it by the House. Of course, that is only my own personal opinion.

The committee had some difficulty about the question of photographs. The Civil Service Commission on the 9th of October, just 2 days after this legislation was before us a month ago, addressed a letter to a member of the Senate conference committee wherein it said in substance that "from now on, after all these years, we have decided not to require photographs of applicants for positions." Why it did that at just that particular moment I do not know, or why the Commission took a hand in the matter at that particular time I do not know. It has not been explained to me up to this moment. The civil service is supposed to be nonpolitical, and the Commission should, I think, keep its hands off of anything political.

Mr. COX. That is a rather violent supposition, is it not?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman has his own views on that, but they might be worthy of your consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of open competitive civil-service examinations, and have been all the way along the line because that is the democratic way of doing things. It goes without saying that if you agree to the conference report this afternoon you are going to permit the blanketing in of somewhere between two and three hundred thousand politically appointed employees. They will get their jobs without taking any examination except the provision that they make 70 percent by competing against themselves, in which event they can hold those jobs. It is admitted that probably 25 percent will fail in those examinations. It was admitted in the hearings that probably 50 percent would fail if they took competitive examinations. It seems to me it is manifestly unfair to some 800,000 persons who are now on the registers and who have taken examinations to say to them, "You stand by; you have no chance and no right to these particular jobs so long as these folks want to hold them." I think that is not the democratic way of doing things.

Furthermore, we have been told time and time again that there are about 4,000,000 persons who have graduated from high schools and colleges who do not have permanent jobs. In this legislation you say to those persons, "You do not have a chance to compete for these jobs just so long as these persons want to hold them, provided they can pass this noncompetitive examination with a rating of not less than 70 percent." You are not only doing that but you are giving these people all the rights and benefits of those persons who obtained their jobs by competitive civil service examinations. This legislation is unfair to those who are now holding positions as a result of competitive examinations. I am not saying that those folks who have these jobs now are not competent. Maybe they are. But they should be willing to compete with those who also have a right to compete on a fair competitive basis. In this legislation you are putting the stamp of approval on them and saying to them, "Because you happened to get your job by political influence, you can keep it as long as you want to."

Of course, the mistake was made when these jobs were created. Congress deliberately at that time left them out of the civil service, which was a mistake. We are admitting that now, and are endeavoring to correct that mistake by freezing them into those jobs by this method.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in all fairness this bill should go back to the committee. We should bring in a competitive civil service measure. Our committee had that kind of a bill before it at one time, H. R. 2700, but this bill was never voted on by the committee. We held hearings on it but that is all. Then out of a clear sky came this H. R. 960 for the consideration of our committee.

Let me say again this is not a political matter. I appeal to your fair common sense. Let us turn this thing down and send it back to the committee, giving that committee a chance to bring out a competitive examination bill.

A number of organizations, prominent and influential ones, are named as being in favor of this bill. These same groups, you will find if you examine the hearings, were also in favor of competitive examinations. They went on record in favor of H. R. 2700, a bill by the distinguished chairman. I assume that they endorse this measure on the ground that we may not be able to get anything better. I believe we can. I believe we can work out a real civil-service competitive-merit system if we have a mind to do it. We can if we will.

In view of the ever-increasing number of employees on the pay rolls of this country, and the increased expense attached thereto, the people are entitled to the most efficient service. The competitive-merit system is the way to do it. This is not the Democratic way of doing things. Let us not freeze these 300,000 persons into these jobs. Let us not be partial. Why not give others who have also qualified themselves a chance to compete for these positions. It is the fair way to do it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, in the first place I want to complain a little about getting the very generous allotment of 5 minutes from my distinguished friend from Georgia to discuss this important matter.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think that is more than necessary? Does not the gentleman think he will not need that much?

Mr. NICHOLS. I hardly think so.

Mr. COX. Has not the gentleman confidence that this House will repeat what it did sometime ago? That is, assume to instruct its conferees?

Mr. NICHOLS. I think this House will stand on the proposition that when it instructs conferees and they then pay no attention to the instructions, it will instruct them again.

Did the conferees receive instructions from this House? The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] said he believes the conferees did not violate the instructions of this House because all we instructed them to do was not to agree to amendment No. 9. Do you know what amendment No. 9 was? Amendment No. 9 struck out the Nichols amendment. The House said to the conferees, "Do not agree to striking out the Nichols amendment." Now, Bob comes in and says, "I do not believe we violated the instructions of the House." Of course, the only instruction of the House was to compel agreement to the Nichols amendment.

I have in my hand a chart. This chart was compiled after individual letters, copies of which I hold here, had been directed to the various departments of the Government which would transfer employees under the provisions of the Ramspeck bill into the civil service. If the Civil Service Commission were to play fair on the quota system, they would have taken into account in making these transfers those States which were already overquotaed, but they did not do it. They went right straight across the board finally on the basis of population. That is what they should have been doing under law all the time, but now they wait until 21 States in the United States are overquotaed and then they go back to population.

In this column they set out the population of the State. Then they figure, based on the population, the number of employees in the Government who should be under civil service. Then down here comes the total. The District of Columbia is already 4,000 percent over its quota, but under this transfer the District of Columbia gets 1,743 additional over its quota. The State of New York, which is already over its quota, gets 4,199 in addition to what it has now over its quota.

How in the name of common sense Members of this House who are from the 26 States in the United States that are underquotaed can face their constituency unless we vote down this conference report is more than I can understand. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this conference report provides that all those in certain agencies who have come into the Government service without a civil service examination shall be blanketed into the civil service with a noncompetitive examination, not a competitive examination. This means that by attaining the level of 70 percent they are regular employees under the civil service of the United States and hold their positions regardless of whether or not someone else has passed a civil service examination with a grade of 100 percent. This operation means that we lower the level of the civil service of the United States and place in it men and women who are not as competent as those who take and pass the regular competitive civil-service examination.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And we are saying to about 800,000 persons who have already passed such examinations that they have no chance to take these examinations, although their names are on the register and they have grades all the way from 70 to 100 percent.

Mr. TABER. We are saying that any of them who have high grades have no chance as against those already in who are able to pass with a grade of 70 percent. I do not like this kind of proposition. I believe it is the duty and the responsibility of the Congress to try to build up the caliber of the civil service of the United States rather than tear it down. I hope this conference report will be rejected. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER].

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, living in a democracy, as we do, and having so recently returned from the mandate of the people in a general election, we still have done nothing with respect to dealing with the bureaucracy that acts as an autocracy under our form of democratic government.

I say this because on Saturday evening at 5:30, and again at 6:30, Walter Compton was on the air broadcasting that Congress was ready to adjourn; that the Walter-Logan bill was to be defeated and allowed to go by the boards; that the President was quoted as being opposed to legislation of this type and would veto it; and that the only thing remaining for Congress to do was to pass the Ramspeck civil-service bill. There we have the example of brazen effrontery and unmitigated impudence that the bureaucrats of Washington do not want the Walter-Logan bill which, having so overwhelmingly passed this House, now rests in another body unacted upon because it gives to people who are aggrieved by the regulations set up by bureaucrats the right to go before their courts of justice for redress of their grievances. They, who have no mandate of the people of this Nation, but in smug complacency of Federal employment, are banded together and undertake to say that the Walter-Logan bill shall not be passed; undertaking to appal Congress with the threat of Executive veto. Pretty sure of their ground, it would appear. We, as Members of Congress, are all cognizant that our acts are subject to court review and appeal, but in complacency to bureaucracy, by their threat on one hand and sycophancy in other directions, would obstruct legislation subjecting their rules and regulations to the same court review and appeal.

In the smugness of their conceit they would have us pass the bill H. R. 960, frequently classified as the Ramspeck bill, for the classified civil-service protection in the perpetuation and extension of this bureaucracy it recognizes, despite its illicit creation, and establishing and extends under the guise of the misnomer of "extending the merit system," but adjourn and return home without enacting the Walter-Logan bill into law because it obstructs and retards their unwarranted arrogation of authority.

On the other hand, to operate the system of bureaucracy that has sprung up under our Government and against which I have continuously inveighed, we would, by the enactment of this legislation, bar hundreds of thousands of people known to Members of this body who have qualified under the Civil Service Act of 1883, by competitive examinations and are on the eligible registers awaiting appointment with various grades of qualification up to perfect, because someone by devious methods has got the Government into a position by which we are about to freeze them in their positions if we accept this legislation.

I have been an advocate of an open, competitive civil-service examination from the time I first qualified in my earliest examinations in my youth, and I still stick to that principle of civil service and would support it overwhelmingly, but let me remind you that to the District of Columbia have come people from the four corners of the earth, including people who have come from foreign countries, and it remains under the provisions of this conference report as it has been read to you as a substitution for the Nichols amendment, a declaration of those people as to what State they may say they come from, regardless of how long since they have forsaken it or how long since they have turned their backs upon it. Why, I know there is a man in one of the departments from Baltimore who had lost his rights in Baltimore and was subpenaed to appear before a court with records in West Virginia and there took records from a department of the Government and stayed at that point for several days and established a voting residence in West Virginia, and you have recent intelligence that the voting population in certain sections of West Virginia exceeds the census figures. There has been an inquiry on the part of the Senate Campaign Investigation Committee into this matter, but that is the way these nearby States and communities have been imposed upon by the people who are in the District and are illegally charged to States when they established their quota ratio.

I asked the distinguished chairman of our committee whether he had any evidence as to how far out of proportion the Apportionment Act had gone during the World War period that the Civil Service Commission uses as an excuse for not having enforced the apportionment provision since that war, and he has not that information. But when the bill was before our committee the statistics that were furnished to the Committee on the Civil Service showed that the District of Columbia was 47 times more than their quota. Now, all those people—and there are some from my State—are going to claim residence in Pennsylvania or in some other State, and I have evidence they have no legal status simply because at some particular time they sojourned there.

If the philosophy of this substitute for the Nichols amendment is accepted I sincerely hope that in the interest of a competitive system of civil service, in the interest of determining merit by open competition, which is the fair and the democratic way and the thing that was advocated from the time of Grover Cleveland up until this terrible mess was created—I say that in the interest of determining merit by open competition, we should stick to the law that is the law today and not lend ourselves or our support to a circumvention of existing law by the enactment of this bill, by approval of this conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I am very sure that this afternoon Members of this body, be they Democrats or Republicans or members of any other party, have the opportunity now, not later, to do what both major political parties have advocated not only in their platforms of the recent campaign, but in past years, and that is to extend and broaden the civil service of the United States Government.

I want to say also that we as Members of Congress know that the extension of civil service has come about through noncompetitive examinations, and I think that it is not in the best order for members of the opposition to stand here today and indicate that the procedure which we are following in connection with the extension of civil service is different from that which has taken place under the administrations of the Republican Party. Let us put politics out of our thoughts on this subject, and I hope and believe many Republicans will vote for this conference report.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman does not contend that at any other time in our history we attempted to blanket into the civil service some 200,000 employees under this method?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I contend that the extension of the civil service has been done by noncompetitive examinations. The gentleman knows it is not practical to have competitive tests for this group of tried and capable Government workers.

Mr. REES of Kansas. But not in great numbers like in this instance?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It so happens, of course, that because of certain conditions in the country in 1932 we were faced with the responsibility of setting up certain agencies under this administration to deal with acute domestic problems and to alleviate certain suffering and unsatisfactory conditions which were not conducive to the national health and the welfare of our people. So to say that the number of persons involved changes the situation, as the gentleman from Kansas states, I believe is beside the point.

Members of the House, I feel that anyone who has served here 4, 6, or 8 years has come to the considered conclusion that he or she would be much better off and able to give much better attention to the legislative affairs of his or her district if they were not continually—and I use that word advisedly—continually harassed with problems of patronage. I believe the people very generally share that opinion throughout all sections of the country. A trained and loyal personnel is highly desirable in Government positions. I say that to the Members on the opposition side of the aisle, as well as to the Members of my own party. I believe the Members will be doing themselves a favor and they will be doing the people of the Nation a favor if here and now we continue, as both parties have asked that it be continued, the extension and broadening of the civil service of the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman has twice referred to the extension and broadening of the civil service. That is what you are endeavoring to accomplish by passing this bill, is it not?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is true.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will that extension and broadening of the civil service raise the standard of Government employment?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think that those men and women who have had experience in the positions would naturally be well qualified and capable of carrying on the work which they will be called upon to do.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask whether there would be any difference in that if they had not qualified originally as well as those who are not now filling the positions? Why not give those who can qualify better than those who are occupying the positions an opportunity to take those places?

Mr. RANDOLPH. We do not believe that they can better qualify. This compromise bill is certainly a step forward in our continuing fight for the merit system.

Mr. TREADWAY. They have under the civil-service rules.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Now, in conclusion, I desire to say that this bill passed the House and passed the Senate and then went to conference. The conference report was adopted by the Senate and then failed in the House. The bill then went to conference again. Today it has passed the Senate of the United States with not an opposing vote. Republicans as well as Democrats in that body joined in unanimous approval. I trust that in just a few minutes, regardless of party, the Members of this House will realize their obligation to a better civil-service system for the United States. Let us remove also the burden which does not properly belong to the men or women who are to legislate in this forum.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman does not contend that because the other body passed this bill we should pass it, does he?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have just stated the facts. Let us go forward with this merit program. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 18½ minutes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not expect to use the entire time, but I do want to answer some of the criticisms that have been made about this conference report.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It is the purpose of this legislation to improve the civil service of the United States, is it not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; that is the purpose.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Admitted that there are some present employees who may be poorly or inadequately trained, would a noncompetitive examination in your judgment reach them and eliminate them, according to this bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am quite sure it will and the experience of the Commission is that some 20 percent are eliminated in that way.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In regard to the alternative proposal of competitive examinations, of which the opponents of the bill have spoken, would that plan be an impossibility or would it be a very heavy undertaking now to put such a program into effect?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The cost of it would be from six to eight million dollars. It would disrupt the services of the various agencies covered, because many people just out of college would be able to pass a better examination than those people, but at the same time they would lack the experience that those people have acquired in actually performing the job. Still they could probably make a higher grade and therefore they would get the jobs and these people would lose out on a competitive examination.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The argument given by the gentleman from Georgia appears to me to be sound.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I thank the gentleman.

Now, I want to talk to my friends on the Republican side of the House. I know there are some of you over there who believe in civil service, and I know that most of you realize that in matters of legislation we have to make compromises. Before November 5 I can understand why a great many of you would vote against this bill, because you had aroused in your hearts the hope that you might take over these agencies and fill the positions through a Republican administration. But for 4 years now these jobs, if the conference report is rejected, are safe to Democrats. Are you not willing, and is it not in the interest of good government, to bring those people under civil service now in the face of this new administration, and is it not an answer to your proposal, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] and the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], that we are discriminating against people on the eligible list? You know and I know and every Member of Congress knows that if you defeat this conference report, not a single one of the jobs that are affected by this bill will be opened up to competitive examination, and therefore nobody on the eligible lists that you have been shedding crocodile tears about will get a chance to get one of these jobs. But if you pass this conference report, 20 percent of the jobs will be opened up to the people in the underquota States who are now on the eligible lists; and, therefore, you will have a chance to do something for your Republican friends who are on those lists.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman said if this bill passed that for 4 years all these jobs would go to Democrats.

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; I did not make that statement.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Yes; the gentleman did make that statement.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I said that if it did not pass they would certainly be held by Democrats for 4 years.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. But the gentleman said that all these jobs for 4 years would be held by Democrats. Now, does the gentleman mean that if this bill is passed as a pretended civil-service measure it is going to be so manipulated that nobody but Democrats are going to get on?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Certainly not, and the gentleman from Ohio knows I did not mean any such thing as that.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. But the gentleman just made that statement.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am trying to bring out the facts. The gentleman is playing politics with the question.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I think the inference was, or at least we were given to understand, that the persons who had these jobs would keep them whether we passed this bill or not.

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; I did not leave any such inference. I said if you did not pass it, of course they would keep the jobs.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Another thing. I think the gentleman from Georgia wants to be fair about this thing.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Certainly.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I assume he does. I do not think we ought to pass this bill on that basis at all. I think the Members of the House, as suggested on this side of the aisle, believe in the civil service, but they want a fair, competitive, honest merit system. That is what we are asking for.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further to the gentleman from Kansas. He has had his time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts if she has a question, but not to make an observation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I believe the gentleman asked me a question, and I should like to answer it. I think the gentleman knows very well I have always favored open competitive examinations.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I understand the gentlewoman's position exactly, and I have answered her question.

You cannot get open competitive examinations at this time. All you can get is this conference report. It will give 20 percent of these jobs to open competition. Now, why can you not vote for 20 percent? As a distinguished Senator from Missouri once said in the Senate, "I would rather have a part of something than all of nothing." We have a compromise here that is fair. We have a compromise here that goes further than the Republicans ever went when they were in power. They did not require any examination, much less a competitive examination; they just wrote an order and blanketed them in without any examination whatever.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Oklahoma talks about the photograph amendment. I have never tried to conceal from this House that the Commission was going to handle that question. Whenever a man has talked to me I have said that the Commission was going to handle it. It is out of the bill, it is not in the bill as it comes from the conference committee.

He talks to you about people getting jobs under the bill. The jobs are already filled. The only chance for anybody else to get any of them is when the present incumbents fail in a noncompetitive examination, and the statistics of the Civil Service Commission show that 20 percent of them probably will fail. Then the underquota States are going to get them. But if you were to adopt the Nichols amendment, not a job would be taken from an overquota State, for it would freeze them in, and therefore the underquota States would suffer.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. What guarantee do we have that even if 20 percent of them failed the jobs would be filled from the underquota States? What is the guarantee of that?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The guarantee of it is written into the law, I will say to the gentleman. If the gentleman knew anything about the civil service, he would understand it; but he does not know and he does not care. The gentleman told me the last time this bill was up that he would not vote for it even if I would let him write it; and I think he will admit that. Is not that true?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is not that true? I yield to the gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. NICHOLS. Do I have to answer it the way the gentleman wants me to answer it before he will yield to me?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman must answer, "Yes" or "No." Did not the gentleman tell me that he would not vote for the bill even if I were to let him write it?

Mr. NICHOLS. And the gentleman wants me to answer, "Yes" before he yields?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No, I will yield if the gentleman answers "No."

Mr. NICHOLS. Then I answer "No." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield for a brief question, then I must conclude.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. I wish the gentleman would make a positive statement in the RECORD that could be taken as a direction to some of the folks in the Civil Service Commission who apparently do not listen very much to the attitude of the Members, that in dealing with these underquota States they not increase their underquota status but that they call a halt on the States that are overquota until they fill the discrepancy of the States that are underquota.

Mr. RAMSPECK. All right, I understand the gentleman's proposal; that is exactly what they are doing.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. But if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield further to the gentleman; I have to conclude. I understand what the gentleman is talking about. The Civil Service Commission is certifying people every day from underquota States. The underquota States are gaining in positions day by day.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. The gentleman will admit that North Carolina is going further behind day by day and has lost nearly a hundred in the last year.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It may be that in the last 6 months North Carolina has been entitled to a number of positions which have not been filled, but it has more jobs today than it had 6 months ago. I say that to the gentleman.

Mr. BARDEN of North Carolina. Of course, we have, and so has every other State.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further to the gentleman, because I cannot discuss the quota system all day long.

This bill has been before the Congress since January 3, 1939. It is a part of the President's reorganization program. The President wants this bill passed. It has the endorsement of the National League of Women Voters; the National Civil Service Reform League; the National Federation of Federal Employees; the American Federation of Government Employees; the National Council of Business and Professional Women; the National Council of Business Mail Users; the United Government Employees, Inc.; the National Junior Chamber of Commerce; the American Federation of Labor; the Congress of Industrial Organizations; the United Federal Workers; all postal employees' organizations; and every organization of Federal employees that I know anything about in this country. I think it is a wise step to take. We have these people in the Federal service. They are denied any retirement, they cannot get social security, and they cannot get under the civil-service retirement law unless this bill is passed. This is probably the last day of the present session of Congress, and if this conference report is rejected now we will have no legislation. We will have to start all over again. I appeal to my friends on the Democratic side. We cannot get everything we would like to get in this bill. It is not exactly like I would have it, but I think it is a fair bill. It is an improvement over the Nichols amendment. It is an improvement over the bill as it passed the Senate. It will help the underquota States and it will give civil-service status to 150,000 employees, appointed largely during this administration, who ought to be provided with some security of employment and some security in their old age. I appeal to my Democratic friends to go down the line for this conference report. Your committee has done the best it could. We have brought you the best bill we could secure. We had to compromise on some things. I hope the conference report will be accepted and the matter settled.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire exactly the status of this conference report and how it is before the House. I mean, what would the vote be to support the conference report and what would it be to reject the conference report?

The SPEAKER. A vote of "yea" is to adopt the conference report, and a vote of "nay" would be a vote to reject the conference report.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 206, nays 139, not voting 85, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and only Saviour, Oh love that passeth knowledge, on Thee we wait at the altar of prayer. Let us all feel the deeper currents of our natures and understand their meaning and aspirations, longing for Thy refreshing grace. Shed upon our path the glow of a day of promise, the softened light that beacons and cheers, quickening our devotion in the service of our country, looking unto Him who lived, walked, worked, and talked as a holy man. Heavenly Father, may we be all one in our democracy, taller in spirit and broader in mind, never forfeiting the finest ideals of life, even though rocks were melted into jewels, flowing like a golden river into our lives. We beseech Thee, O God, to free our land of the poison being injected into the arteries of our Republic. Let Christian brotherhood go deep into the throbbing centers of our city—centers where cross the crowded ways of life and Thine shall be the glory through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10543. An act to make the excess land provisions of the Federal reclamation laws inapplicable to the lands of the Washoe County Water Conservation District, Truckee storage project, Nevada, and the Pershing County Water Conservation District, Nevada.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 658) entitled "An act for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little."

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 332

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Hon. WILLIAM H. KING, a Senator from the State of Utah, as President of the Senate pro tempore.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House No. 1 to the bill (S. 4370) entitled "An act authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties"; and that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House No. 2 to said bill with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said House amendment insert the following: "The compensation of the Assistant Secretary of War shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this is for the purpose of observing Thanksgiving Day tomorrow——

Mr. McCORMACK. I am going to follow this up with another unanimous consent request which may tend to negative the gentleman's observations.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, but I wish to ask the majority leader if we cannot enter into some kind of agreement to have 3-day recesses as we had before.

Mr. McCORMACK. If this unanimous-consent request is granted, I intend to follow it with another unanimous-consent request that when the House adjourns on Friday next, it adjourn to meet the following Monday.

Mr. PATMAN. And then what does the gentleman contemplate on the following Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. Beyond that I am unable to advise the gentleman at this time.

Mr. PATMAN. I wonder what the minority leader would say about 3-day recesses.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman from Texas had better leave that in abeyance at the present time.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to adjourning over Thursday for the President's Thanksgiving Day but I take this occasion to call the attention of the House to the fact that a year ago I introduced H. R. 7556 for the purpose of settling the Thanksgiving Day controversy and making the last Thursday in November of each year the public, legal holiday for Thanksgiving in the District of Columbia and places within the jurisdiction of the United States. There are 16 States—Nevada, South Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Florida—that this year will observe the traditional last Thursday in November as Thanksgiving Day. A great many of these States are in the South and a great many of them are States which went Democratic in the recent election, so it is not a partisan question. It is a question which concerns the people of the country generally. Calendar makers have to make two sets of calendars according to the States in which they are to be used. College terms are upset. Family homecomings are uncertain. Federal workers observe one day—their neighbors observe another. A woman on the train the other day said in my hearing that Thanksgiving Day had lost its meaning and joy in her home because some members were free one day and some the other. Turkey growers write me that the earlier date costs them from 10 cents to a dollar a bird in less weight and uncertain marketing. The question should be faced and settled. Certainly there are other matters of importance, too, but in the absence of a settled program during the continuation of this session this resolution could be profitably considered and the question settled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday next it adjourn to meet the following Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include the program of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War adopted at its twenty-first national convention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by Hon. David E. Lilienthal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct an impression that might be created by several statements that were made on the floor of the House yesterday. One was made by my distinguished colleague and neighbor and friend the gentleman from Mississippi, in which he said:

> I know you real Republicans never want to see another political mugwump take over your party and try to run it.

After this statement the word "applause" is registered. Let it be recorded that the applause came from the new dealers and not from the Republicans. We Republicans are very proud of the fine candidate we had for President and the excellent campaign he made.

I also want to call attention to a statement of another distinguished new dealer—in fact, the assistant whip of the House on the majority side, who said:

> Every day this House remains in session is a vote of lack of confidence in our party leadership and an insult to the President of the United States.

I do not share that view, but I say that if the President of the United States cannot be more than a few hours away from Washington at times like these, we who are equally the people's representatives must remain on the job.

There is no logical argument that can possibly be raised in favor of an adjournment of Congress at this time. The desperate circumstances in which half of the world now finds itself must be uppermost in the minds of every American citizen. Whether we believe in a policy of isolation or intervention, there can be no doubt that Congress should be speedily available for any possible emergency. To adjourn in the midst of crises which are the most serious in the history of our generation is a statement that Congress is not necessary at times of the deepest international concern. I, for one, believe that the Congress of the United States should remain in continuous session not only now but throughout the entire existence of the European war. We must prove that we are ready to act swiftly and effectively at every moment. We cannot do this if we must be recalled at the whim of the Nation's Chief Executive from distant points. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein certain editorial comment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for the 10 minutes which I did not get yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert a few reports from newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INAUGURAL CELEBRATION

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I observe from the morning newspapers that they have released an important official from the State Department in order to handle the inaugural jubilee. I hope they will not forget the war or forget the national emergency or sacrifice any of our foreign policy or procedure in this matter. A lot of people are asking about the cost of the inauguration of the third-term President. I do not know what it is going to be, but I am wondering whether it would not be a fine thing for Chief Justice Hughes to come over to the Capitol and swear in the President and give that $100,000 or more that it will cost to the Red Cross and cut out the ballyhoo and glamour. [Applause.]

MUGWUMP

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, in his speech yesterday the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] took occasion to refer to a candidate whom he called a mugwump. I would like to have the gentleman tell us what a mugwump is.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the voters have already told us that. There are so many definitions that are applicable that I would not want to burden the RECORD with them. At the same time I refer the gentleman from Missouri to an answer that came from Alabama sometime ago. If he will look at the RECORD, he will find a mugwump described as a bird that sits on a political fence with the "mug" on one side and the "wump" on the other. [Laughter and applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter by my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] to the President, and a letter from the President to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] on the subject of the St. Lawrence seaway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein certain excerpts and statistics on the farm program in Texas and the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a short letter from one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein some excerpts from an editorial appearing in the Detroit News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a statement made by my colleague the Honorable DANIEL A. REED, of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 10 minutes following the address by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VULTEE AIRCRAFT FACTORY STRIKE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I am sure all of us here, as well as the people of America generally, have been grieved in recent days to read of the strike at the Vultee Aircraft Factory in California. For almost a week airplane building, on a defense order, has been at a standstill there. We would not set ourselves up as arbiters of the right in the controversy which exists between that company and its employees, but we as elected Representatives of this Republic, as well as men and women throughout the land, are surely of the considered opinion that when a factory or a plant is engaged in the production of implements to go into the United States armament or rearmament program the differences between that company and its employees should be settled in conference and the necessary and vital production work should proceed. We need these planes—and labor, which has made great gains in the last few years has a responsibility to perform. I believe the discussions should go forward amicably of the points at issue without disruption of the plant operation itself.

I think this Congress, and those of us here who have been working for the best interests of organized and unorganized labor, should let those who precipitate such unwarranted procedure know that we look with strong disfavor on what is happening, not only at the Vultee plant but in several other factories throughout the United States. We must take steps to see it does not occur in other factories of the country. If these strikes do continue, we should take proper steps to see that such conditions are remedied by law if necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am sorry, but my time has expired.

THE VOTE ON ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, just reviewing the vote on yesterday we saw that so many of our adjourners had already adjourned that it defeated adjournment. Now you Republican gentlemen and those of the Democrats who felt that we were safe in outvoting you, have my entire sympathy, but if you had just recorraled your forces and voted like you felt we should have been on our way home by now. Since we have decided to stay—I did not feel like sympathizing with you on yesterday, but after a night of good, sound sleep, and in the light of expressions of disappointment that have been made personally by so many of the antivoting adjourners who felt they would be safely outvoted, I say that since we are to stay here as a result of your action I am sure you have in mind a fine program, and since you have found work that is to be done we can now turn over many chips and do lots of stuff between now and real adjournment. Of course, we do not know what it is but we are only too glad to join in the labor. [Applause.]

INVESTMENT BANKERS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have been informed that the investment bankers at their recent convention considered various matters pertaining to the subject of increasing their business and profits. No objection to that.

But since that time I have been receiving an ever-increasing number of letters from investment bankers and brokers urging the weakening of the Securities and Exchange Act under the pretense that it would permit small investors a greater opportunity to invest. The underlying purpose, I presume, is to give themselves and other stock manipulators the same leeway to rob the small investors that they enjoyed in 1927, 1928, and 1929. So the propaganda is on.

During the years mentioned, as the smaller investors still remember to their sorrow, the presses of the country were kept busy printing stock certificates that were not worth the cost of the paper upon which they were printed. These were shamelessly unloaded on the small investors who lost more than $20,000,000,000 of their life savings.

We all recall that for the purpose of bringing about discord among the Democrats the Republican press and the Republican publicists for the past several years—in fact ever since Franklin D. Roosevelt entered the White House—filled the newspapers of the country with charges that the Democratic Members of this body were mere "rubber-stamp" Congressmen, all the time knowing in their heart of hearts that these statements were wholly untrue.

But if there ever were "rubber-stamp Congressmen," we now have them on the Republican side. Yet we do not see a word in the newspapers about the Willkie "rubber stamps" who have been fighting almost as a unit on legislation before the Congress, and who, only yesterday, voted as one against adjournment. I presume Mr. Willkie, their late Power Trust candidate on the Republican ticket, desired to prevent adjournment in the hope of forcing through Congress legislation that will weaken or emasculate the Securities Exchange Act. Either that, or, even though the election is over, he is still playing cheap politics.

I was amazed at the vote yesterday on adjournment, when about 40 Democrats unthinkingly played into the hands of these conniving Republicans at the expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government. I wonder whether some Members realize there was an election recently at which the American people again expressed their complete confidence, and properly so, in the President by giving him a popular majority of over 4,000,000 votes, this despite the expenditure of millions of dollars by Wall Street and the Power Trust to elect their mouthpiece, Mr. Willkie, to the Presidency.

If the American people had known, as I did, of his 15-year record as servant for the utility and power companies, and of his atrocious lobbying activities in Washington to defeat the purposes of the Holding Company Act, as well as other beneficial legislation, President Roosevelt's majority would have been doubled.

Mr. Willkie a few days ago had the audacity to state he would continue to fight for his policies. What, may I ask him, are his policies? Is one of them to hamstring the Securities and Exchange Act to enable him and his coterie to mulct the small American investor of the savings made possible by the Democratic administration, and thus to repeat the drubbing they gave them in 1929?

It is to be regretted that these bankers, brokers, and industrial czars fail to realize the great benefits that accrued to them by reason of the New Deal, and that they continue to bite the hand that has and is continuing to feed them. Why do not they look back and contemplate what their lot was in 1931, 1932, and 1933?

But, thanks to the common sense and good judgment of the American people, the uncountable misrepresentations and lies that have been uttered and printed in the past 5 or 6 years, and especially during the last campaign—such, for instance, as the alleged violation of the Constitution, dictatorship, and other false issues, all launched for the purpose of arousing fear and discord—have availed the Republicans absolutely nothing. And they will not, no matter how many times repeated, avail you on the other side, because never before in the history of our country are conditions as favorable and promising as today. A boom that will smash all records lies ahead for American industry. Increased production, increased business, increased net earnings, increased employment, increased wages, and increased social security for the underprivileged is the true story of the accomplishments of the 7-year Roosevelt administration. But you will never see it emphasized in the editorial columns of the Republican press.

We are gradually but surely increasing the national income, and I am satisfied that it will reach the ninety billion mark in 1941 under this administration. Under the last year of the Hoover maladministration the national income was but forty billion. And we are daily bringing about reemployment as never before.

Instead of reading in the financial sections of the Republican press, as in 1932, of bankruptcies, foreclosures, and failures, I note in this morning's Washington (D. C.) Post:

That even Tom Girdler, of the Republic Steel, the severest critic of the President and the New Deal, sees a real boom for 1941. The Republic Steel financial report for the first 6 months of 1940 shows a $6,000,000 greater profit than for the corresponding period of 1938.

That a $67,000,000 Federal home-loan bank issue is far oversold at a record interest rate of one-fifth of 1 percent.

That Johns-Manville voted an increase in dividend; also, that the "Pennsy" nets $22,718,397 in the first 9 months of this year, an increase of $7,947,854 over last year.

That the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. declared a dividend of $1 on its common stock.

That the Kennecott Copper Co. declared a special dividend.

That the directors of the International Business Machines Corporation declared a 5-percent capital-stock dividend and, in addition, a cash dividend of $1.50.

In today's New York Times—November 20—I see such headlines as these; and were it not that it would be an abuse of your time, I could cite you hundreds of similar ones—all, mind you, from today's papers:

Building in 1941 to hit 10-year peak.
Electrical goods volume up 15.8 to 51.4 percent.
Cotton moves up to season's peak.
Thirteen grocery chains report increases.

And here is a quick break-down of the net profits of some of America's leading businesses for the first 6 months of 1933—Hoover "old deal"—with the first 6 months of 1940—Roosevelt New Deal—which tell their own uncontradictable story:

	Net profits for first 6 months, 1933	Net profits for first 6 months, 1940	Percent increase
General Electric	$5,953,605	$25,871,572	334

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, instead of trying to harass and embarrass the administration and instilling fear in the minds of the people, would it not be more patriotic and statesmanlike for all frankly to point out the great progress that is being made in this country under President Roosevelt and the Democratic administration?

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the Members who voted against adjournment yesterday. They tell us there is no legislation before Congress. I deny that statement.

There is pending before the Senate the bill (H. R. 9000), on which we in the Veterans' Committee worked for months to take care of the disabled dependents of World War veterans, many of whom died as a result of disabilities incurred in the World War. There are other reasons why we should not adjourn, but this one is sufficient; and I do not propose to vote to adjourn this Congress until that bill is brought out of the Senate committee and the Senate votes it up or votes it down. [Applause.]

We are drafting the youth of this land today. If we should be plunged into a war, are we going to say when the war is over and these young men come home to die, many of them without knowing their rights, without having an opportunity to make provision for their widows and orphans, that these widows and orphans shall be driven to the bread lines because the Congress of the United States refused to pass the necessary legislation? If we can put all these people on relief we can take care of the widows and orphans of those men who bared their breasts in the World War 23 years ago.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman think that those who voted for adjournment yesterday would vote for his bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; certainly, they did do it.

Mr. SABATH. Why did not the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. RANKIN. I did vote for it; the measure passed the House unanimously—there was not a dissenting vote. Of course, I voted for it; I am the author of it and am chairman of the committee that reported it, and I do not propose to vote for a final adjournment of this Congress until it is disposed of one way or the other.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], is recognized for 10 minutes.

RACKETEERING WITHOUT ADMINISTRATION DISAPPROVAL

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, this morning's press carries the information that yesterday the President, asked to comment upon the adjournment of Congress, stated in substance that he had no further legislative program to submit to us.

From this statement we may draw the conclusion that the President is now satisfied that there is nothing more that the Congress can do to aid in national defense, to assist in solving our domestic problems, or in meeting the emergency which he declared to exist because of the World War.

The election is over. For 2 years at least we may lay aside purely partisan political discussion. We may now, without being subjected to the charge that our motives are partisan, our aims political, venture to point out where in the administration's program is incomplete, offers no safeguard against a prophesied and anticipated danger, and to suggest corrective measures.

We voted yesterday against sine die adjournment. Notwithstanding the statement of the President that he knows of no further legislation which needs our consideration at this time, notwithstanding the statement of the House leadership that it has no program of legislation to offer, there is corrective legislation which should be adopted.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. Permit me to call the attention of the House and of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that the President last May said there was no occasion for Congress to remain in session, yet we found ourselves woefully lacking in defense machinery and since then voted about $14,000,000,000 for defense purposes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is not the first nor the only time the President has found himself in need of appropriations from Congress. After all, Congress has at times been a convenience to the President, a sort of, at times, useful appendage, to be used when money was needed.

Permit me to call the attention of the House—which has refused to adjourn and which intends to remain here, I understand, until the beginning of the year—to the fact that there is plenty for us to do. There is much unfinished and necessary business confronting us. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] just stated, there is veterans' legislation pending before another body that has not been disposed of. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] has referred to a situation which we should not permit to pass unnoticed, and to which it is my purpose to direct my remarks. There is no reason why we should continue to permit this unlawful procedure to exist. I wish that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], a member of the Labor Committee, would bring the situation before that committee, because, after all, the Democratic Party is responsible now for the things that are being done. It is responsible for the failure to provide the remedy. It is up to the Democrats, the party in control, to bring out proper legislation, because they throw all our proposed legislation into the wastebasket.

Laying aside domestic problems, let us consider the immediate situation which confronts us. The country and this Congress have been told by this administration that our institutions, our Government, our very existence, were being threatened by foreign invasion.

Whipped to hysteria by the spokesmen of the administration, the country demanded, and the Congress appropriated, billions of dollars for national defense. The Congress passed and the President signed in peacetime a conscription bill which will place at his disposal an army of more than a million men.

The President having given us to understand that he had nothing more for the Congress to do, we, as Representatives of the people, should now once more assume the duties which the Constitution lays upon us, perform the service for which our constituents elect and pay us.

Notwithstanding the grants of unlimited power and the appropriation of billions of dollars for national defense, the sad fact remains that boring from within are forces which will utterly destroy the effectiveness of all of our efforts unless this Congress takes action.

The President and the Democratic Party at the election on November 5 were charged with the protection of our country during the next 4 years. Upon the shoulders of this administration, upon the Democratic Party, rests the grave responsibility of seeing to it not only that we are protected from all foreign danger but that the money of the taxpayers is wisely and economically spent; that the liberties guaranteed us by our Constitution are not, under the guise of preparedness, taken from our people.

On the floor of this House on the 24th day of September last—and I notice that the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] is here today, as he was here on that occasion—I charged this administration with the failure to protect American citizens in the exercise of their constitutional rights. More specifically, I charged that this administration denied to patriotic American citizens the right to work on the national-defense program without paying tribute to racketeers.

On the same occasion it was charged by me that this administration permitted racketeers, openly and without authority of law, to levy tribute upon law abiding, patriotic American citizens.

On the same occasion the majority party was challenged to dispute the evidence which I adduced in support of that charge. By the end of this week 60 days will have passed since that challenge was issued and so far no man has arisen to answer that challenge.

Today I repeat the charge that this administration is deliberately following a course permitting abuses, which outrageously increases the cost of the national-defense program, which wastes the taxpayer's money. I deliberately make the charge, based upon the facts referred to on the floor on September 24 and upon other evidence which is available, that this administration, conniving with racketeers, is permitting the collection, through extortion, of thousands of dollars from the American workingmen.

I charged on that occasion, and I charge again here today, that the Democratic Party, although it professes to be the friend of the man who toils, is permitting that man to be exploited; is permitting money to be taken from him unlawfully, illegally, and I ask the Democratic floor leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] to refute the charges I made on the 24th of September and that I am making now. Those charges are contained in the RECORD and I have again restated them.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman is the greatest Member of the House for indicting innocent people and innocent administrations than anybody I ever met in my lifetime.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There you have the gentleman's answer—words, but no proof. A counter charge against me, but no answer to the charges which I make.

The charges which are made by me are a charge against this administration and against the majority party, and it is no answer to say that those charges are indictments of innocent people.

It may be true that the pot should not call the kettle black, but to reply that the pot is black is no proof that the kettle is white.

I put in the RECORD letters and statements showing that at Fort Custer, under this administration, men who wanted to work on the national-defense program were denied that constitutional right until they came across and paid tribute to a labor union.

Your answer is that I am making charges that have not been substantiated. I submitted the proof. A part of it is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of September 24. Other evidence has been offered from the floor of the House by Members of the House. Much other evidence is available.

In today's issue of the Evening Star is a story by Robert Bruskin, reporter for the Star, who states in substance that he went to Fort Meade, Md., and, although he had no experience as a carpenter, obtained a job at $75 a week as a carpenter; that to obtain the job he made an agreement to pay $57.50 to a union.

The story is an interesting one and should be read by every Member of the House, for it shows from an unbiased source a little of what is happening throughout the country.

I challenge the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], as the majority leader, to pass House Resolution 612, which I offered on the 24th day of September, and which calls for the appointment of a nonpartisan committee to investigate the charges which I made, to make a report to the House, and to suggest such legislation as will remedy the situation. Such an investigation, if honestly conducted, will determine whether I have indicted innocent people or whether the majority party and this administration is sheltering, aiding, abetting extortionists, labor racketeers, who are preying upon the man who works.

This administration claims that it is the friend of the laboring man. I charge that it permits the laboring man to be exploited by and for the benefit of political labor organizers and racketeers.

I charge that it has forgotten the rank and file of labor; that it has supported, and that it now gives its support to, those who exploit labor and who levy tribute upon the laboring man.

Upon the doorstep of the Democratic Party I here and now lay the charge that into its political bed have crawled the slimy, politically minded labor racketeers, who not only are wasting the taxpayers' money, delaying and hindering adequate national defense, but levying tribute upon the workingman himself; and this administration not only gives them protection, permits them to practice their unlawful extortion, but apparently welcomes them.

This administration, notwithstanding its profession of concern for the interests of the man who toils, is by its conduct giving active aid to those who are forging the shackles of slavery upon the arms of the man who must work for his livelihood.

I again, as I did on September 24, challenge the Democratic Party to deny the charge that it is permitting the exploitation of American workingmen; that it is permitting the national-defense program to be hindered and delayed; that it is permitting the American taxpayer to be robbed through excessive cost.

How do you justify that kind of illegal, unlawful extortion, the levying of tribute upon American workers? How do you justify it? You dare not go before the Labor Committee over there and introduce legislation to prevent it and as long as you refuse to do that how can you hold up your heads and say that you favor the American worker? The thing you as a party condone, is a system whereby these organizers, political men in labor organizations, advance their own interest by the collecting of tribute from the man who toils and at the same time hold up the defense program.

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. I take it for granted, according to the gentleman's statement now, that he is a great friend of labor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am a friend of the man who works.

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. The gentleman has been protesting all along against labor trying to get higher wages.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman does not understand. That statement is not correct. I am for the man who works, not for the man who collects from the workingmen, not for the labor racketeers. I am against the men, such as Scalise and Bioff, that Westbrook Pegler has been writing about. I am for the man who actually does the work and I challenge the majority party to bring out legislation to protect that man against those who are levying tribute upon him now when he asks the privilege and the right of going to Fort Custer and working there.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan has made mention of comment that I made earlier in the afternoon relative to the strike at Vultee Aircraft Factory. I want to simply follow up his statement by saying that I believe the American people are properly incensed at the attitude of certain strike methods which are going on, not only in the Vultee factory but in many other factories of this country engaged in production of defense materials.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All over the country.

Mr. RANDOLPH. As one member of the Labor Committee, I believe that our committee itself should discuss the situation and perhaps through some legislative proposal attempt to solve a very serious problem.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield? We might bring out something very good.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat for the benefit of the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] who is a representative of labor, that there is no question about the charges which I made, and which I today renew. They have been made on the floor of the House. They have been made publicly. Proof has been offered. If untrue, my conduct is reprehensible; if true, a speedy and drastic remedy should be afforded. The duty to present that remedy or to give the minority an opportunity to present it rests upon the administration, even though the President says he has no legislative program to submit, even though the House leadership says it has no legislative program. The administration, the Democratic Party, cannot shirk its responsibility for this most vicious situation, which endangers our national defense, by replying that the maker of the charge indicts innocent people.

If they are not true, why do you not appoint a committee, let it investigate the situation and give us the evidence on the situation and disprove the charges and the evidence I offered on the 24th of September? Let us have facts instead of words. I will put in one side and you put in the other.

I challenge the Democratic Party to adopt House Resolution 612, calling for the appointment of a special committee to determine whether or not American citizens are being denied employment; whether they are being charged unlawfully for the right to work on our defense program; in short, whether American citizens, patriotic and law-abiding, are being denied their rights under the Constitution.

I challenge the Democratic Party, which has an overwhelming majority in House and Senate, to remain here in Washington on the job, to force the attendance of a quorum each day, to take up and dispose of the Smith amendments to the Wagner law, consideration of the Walter-Logan bill, the appointment of committees to collect and give to the people from official sources information in answer to the charges which I have today made.

That there may be no doubt as to what those charges are, let me here repeat them. This administration is charged:

First. With wasting the taxpayers' money on the defense program.

Second. With permitting activities which hinder and delay that program.

Third. With permitting the exploitation of, and extortion from, the American laboring man. [Applause.]

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present. Let us have some business or else adjourn, and I serve notice now that we are going to have a quorum call every time I am on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. DINGELL moved a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no misunderstanding—and I am expressing my own views—the President has never said that there was no legislation for Congress to pass upon, but he did say that he had no further recommendations to make. That is the statement made by the President, and there should not be any misunderstanding about it.

As far as I am aware—and I believe this statement should be made for the benefit of the Members—I know of no legislative program at the present time. There is certainly none for Friday and I know of none for Monday. As far as I am concerned, and I know this is the attitude of the leadership on both sides, in view of the situation that confronts us we have to view it practically, and certainly, if there is no legislation to come up, every effort will be made by the leadership to cooperate with the Members in meeting their own individual problems. I know now of no legislation that is coming up. There is none coming up Friday and there is none coming up Monday. I know of none in the future. I will bring nothing up—controversial on Friday or Monday without the assent of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The President has said that he has no further recommendation to make at this time. That is an entirely different proposition than saying that there is no further legislation for Congress to pass upon. I think the record should be clear.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just to explain the difference between his two statements?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not believe there is any necessity for my explaining the difference. Every Member but the gentleman from Michigan himself sees a distinction. I am making this statement not for controversy but to try to help the Members on both sides. If any legislation does come up the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], or in his absence anyone representing the minority party, will be advised and, as far as I am concerned, the Democratic Members will be advised. I know of no legislation now that is coming up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not want the gentleman to think there is any likelihood of my being absent.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no; of course, the gentleman is aware of the fact that if he were absent I would consult whoever is the acting leader of the minority party.

I make this statement on my own initiative so that Members may govern themselves accordingly. I believe I speak the view of the Speaker, but the statement is made on my own initiative.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING CONSTRUCTION

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think I should first announce myself so that there may be no misunderstanding. In English parlance, I am a member of "His Majesty's loyal opposition." I trust I shall be more loyal in that opposition than ever before, and I am convinced after yesterday that I shall be supplemented by many of the Democratic Party of this House.

The little girl went to the grocer and said, "Mother would like a quart of good-natured alcohol." What I say will be good-natured, although it will perhaps appear a little strong, and some may not like it. Unity is demanded. Unity for what? We had a remarkable instance of unity in the solid South lately, where the old slogan seems yet to prevail "that any Democrat is better than any Republican." But on the vote yesterday anything but unity was shown. Distrust was shown. It was a remarkable exhibition of distrust; I cannot see where unity is coming from. If we hold together on this side as a minority, do not blame us. In other nations the majority would have resigned on yesterday after that vote.

I understood the gentleman from Michigan was to talk today about something that I ought to follow up. I want the leader of the Democratic Party from Boston to sympathize and listen to me. I live within 7 miles of a camp where 12,000 people are at work. Referring to this picture in my hand appearing in the press this morning, this boy declared that he could get a job at Camp Meade without any experience if he would pay the union dues. I have had to watch thousands of my neighbors and others pay $75, or promise to pay it, to get a job on national defense which was supposed to last only 75 days. I have a great number of calls at my home office from men looking for jobs or to be reinstated, and many complaints of other sorts, and now the newspapers are clamoring and demanding of me that I ask for investigations.

Investigations of what? The firm employed there to carry out this work is doing the best it can. It is a very reliable firm and they are acting under Government instructions on a cost-plus basis. They must get it done in 75 days. It was estimated to cost $7,500,000, but this week it is said it will cost $15,000,000. But that is, of course, to be expected.

Shall I investigate the unions that have the complete and full backing of your Government? A little union is getting thousands of new members at $75. What a remarkable treasury created overnight! What will they do with it? The contractor is not to blame. He must recognize unions, and the largest unit. So everybody had to join and I was forced to advise them to join in order to get a job. It was promised that the nearby people would have preference. They have apparently tried to show this preference, but it is most difficult in its working out.

Now, what shall we investigate? The cost, the contractor, the union, which you do not dare to investigate and which you would not investigate, of course. They are probably within their legal rights, but I want to say to you that this is a splendid example of waste and extravagance and the rousing of our people to a war hysteria in order to carry an election. I hope it will now die down. Shall we inquire why the New England hurricane lumber was not used on these jobs?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask how many men are employed, so far as he knows, at the construction camp at Falmouth, in the gentleman's district?

Mr. GIFFORD. The maximum was about 12,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Are they all obliged to put up that fee?

Mr. GIFFORD. Absolutely, laborers as well as mechanics. must join a union. They cannot go to work unless they buy their union card.

Mr. TREADWAY. How expensive are those cards?

Mr. GIFFORD. Seventy-five dollars for carpenters. It is only $45 at Fort Meade or $57.50, I think, at Fort Custer, but ours is $75. They take it out of their wages every week.

Mr. TREADWAY. And at the same time those men who are paying the $75 are actually being employed to construct buildings for the Federal Government?

Mr. GIFFORD. Absolutely, and on a national-defense job. How wonderful? Now, the newspapers are demanding of me that I make investigations. Investigations of what? They say there is a lot of job selling going on. I do not know anything about that. They must prove this to me before I can take it up. But where can I speak except here?

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman further whether evidence from a constituent of mine that he has been held up for $75 would be of any value to him?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no; because they are all held up. I was there, surrounded by some 500 men, angry men, and I had to simply tell them, "You must join, or you will not get a job," and I felt humiliated in the extreme, because it was my Government on a national-defense job.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I notice the gentleman has there an article from today's Star. What experience did that man have to get a job?

Mr. GIFFORD. He did not have any, and he did not need any, he says, and my men did not need any, and they were kept at work for some weeks, and much of the union fees were paid.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman tell us what is the hourly wage that is being paid?

Mr. GIFFORD. One dollar and seventeen cents; although 80 cents seems to have been the local rate. Why pay $1.17? Why all this hurry? The buildings in which to make the guns are not yet erected. Why this haste?

I believe in national defense as much as any of you, of course, and we voted the money, but we want orderly processes and no wasteful extravagances. Why did they create this hysteria? There was a sound truck for days before the election going over that area booming, perhaps not in the exact words but to the effect, "You owe this job to Roosevelt; you know for whom you ought to vote." What comment have you on that?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that this cantonment under construction is in his district, whether he has called this situation to the attention of the commanding officer at that point?

Mr. GIFFORD. The commanding officer has nothing to do with construction, but I have talked with the contractor many times over these conditions. At the moment I have no complaint against this contractor. He is the right man to get a job done in a hurry. But why such hurry? The Government practically says, "We want you to do the job quickly, and expense is quite secondary."

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Who has the authority to supervise these workmen?

Mr. GIFFORD. I sent a message hurriedly to Washington to investigate that union matter, and they later made acknowledgment and said they had looked into it, but nothing came of it. This administration will not do a thing about these unions. You Democratic majority do not dare to do a thing about them.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The complaint comes to me from some of my constituents who have worked on the job about the incompetency of the supervisory board because they do not demand and require a fair day's work.

Mr. GIFFORD. Why should they?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Well, of course, that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Who tells the contractor that he shall not employ anybody unless he shows a union card?

Mr. GIFFORD. Why, that is the law, practically. I was told by the contractor that the union men would be exhausted in a very short time, and he said, "I will then put all other men to work." But the union saw to it that they supplied the men as fast as needed. Men appeared from great distances with cards or willingly bought cards. They apparently would not let a man work if he had not joined some union. The contractor himself did not understand that the thing would work out that way. Again I say I do not blame the contractor. I blame this hasty action, this hysteria that they intended to inculcate for purposes you well know.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I want to understand thoroughly about this, because I know the people of my district are interested in understanding it. As I understand the gentleman's proposition, where the going wage is 85 cents, these unskilled workmen, without experience, are offered $1.17, provided they can show a union card.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. Why did they do it? The union said, "You are getting such a raise above your ordinary 80 cents an hour that you can afford to join the union and pay it to us." But after these carpenters had paid their union dues, in many cases they were called in and fired from the union because they were not really carpenters; but the union had the money.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Are these contracts being secured from the Government on a cost-plus basis?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. So that in effect the unions are now in a position to say that Uncle Sam will pay the bill by paying this extra higher rate so that these men can pay for their union cards?

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the way it worked out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. There are many larger issues facing us which I desired to discuss. I have here a letter from one of the largest reporting agencies in this country; one of the most reliable and probably as large and as important as Babson, and which letter is sent out to their customers over the entire country. The quotations are simply frightening. The writer closed by saying, "My face is not red; it is pale." In effect he said: "Old people have not been able to work their money lately to get any interest. I now recognize that they will lose their money." I may see fit, if I get permission from the author, to put this entire letter in the RECORD, because it is from one of the most persuasive reporting agencies that we know.

I may say I have tried to be a student of the public-debt effects for many years, and I would like to make three suggestions: One, to meet this huge defense expense, tax all you dare. Secondly, borrow of private people; and, lastly, use commercial banks just as little as you can. Every bond issued by a commercial bank doubles the deposits in the bank. We have $69,000,000,000 on deposit. We have $8,000,000,000 in circulation, and the seeds of inflation are firmly planted. It may be we can prevent it; but let us not create more of that kind of money. Let us sell those bonds to individuals like you did in the World War. Sell them for a longer period of time. If you do not, I join with this reporting agency and say something dreadful is to happen in this country. It is too awfully plain. Can you not see it?

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman feel that these bonds he recommends selling to the individual should be tax-exempt?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have always believed it. You Democrats talked in favor, but you voted against it. Even in 1922 you did that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Not me.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not know about the gentleman personally, but when the vote was finally taken in 1922, what a dreadful exposition it was. As long as your Government is in the market to borrow money for these defense bonds, you do not dare vote taxed bonds.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will dare.

Mr. GIFFORD. Well, the gentleman dared yesterday. He often displays courage. He is to have a lot of invitations from me again that he make investigations in his Committee on Expenditures, such as I have outlined this morning. I hope his courage will stick with him. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have inserted in the RECORD an Associated Press dispatch wherein it is asserted that the British Ambassador demanded American men to fight English battles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a few observations from newspapers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

THE CAPITOL ROOF

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I come to the Well of the House today to talk to the membership about the condition of the roof over this Chamber. I was the Member appointed by the Speaker on behalf of the House to act with Senator CONNALLY, of Texas, appointed by the Vice President on the part of the Senate, as a committee to make a study of the roofs over the House and Senate Chambers. The matter was brought to the attention of the legislative subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee by the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. David Lynn.

This roof has been inspected by consulting engineers. A very thorough report has been made by the widely known consulting engineer, Thomas W. Marshall, of Washington, D. C. William R. Osgood, materials engineer, National Bureau of Standards, has investigated the roof; so has A. E. Falconer, structural engineer of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department; so has C. G. Palmer, architectural engineer of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department; and P. A. Randall, architectural engineer of the Procurement Division. Then on top of all this investigation, all of the engineers telling us that the roof is in a very dangerous condition; the trusses being 86 years old, made of cast iron and wrought iron, and pin connected, which pins actually show bending, are deficient in strength, and no one can tell whether or not the pins are cracked, and further there is hanging from that roof construction the ceiling of this Chamber which weighs 120 tons. After further study the joint committee employed a special engineer to check the existing conditions and a special appropriation was granted for the purpose. He was the well-known Herman F. Doelman, consulting engineering of Baltimore, Md. He stated that the roof was in worse condition than any of the other engineers had testified previously. Then we called in F. H. Franklin, chief engineer of the American Institute of Steel Construction, Inc., of New York City. He corroborated everything that had been said by the foregoing engineers.

I think it is very necessary that something be done about this roof. It is going to be necessary to shore up this ceiling in here which is made of cast iron and is estimated to weigh 120 tons. This ceiling is not plaster, it is a cast iron ceiling that hangs suspended from the roof trusses. It was put up 86 years ago. Trusses must be installed under this cast iron ceiling supported by steel columns erected upon the masonry walls at the front of the galleries. This construction will support the cast iron ceiling until we can get to this roof after the end of the next session.

Something ought to be done by the membership of this House. If they have no respect for themselves about the condition, they at least ought to have some respect for their guests who sit in these galleries.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. How about using the caucus room in the House Office Building from now on?

Mr. RABAUT. I do not care where they move to, but it is not a very sensible idea to be coming into this room with this actually dangerous condition existing, dangerous as testified to by everybody who has been asked to tell us about it. From the Bureau of Yards and Docks and the National Bureau of Standards to special engineers, the testimony of each of them is that this roof is in a dangerous condition.

The subcommittee of deficiency on appropriations has seen fit, after this study and the plea of the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. David Lynn, to grant a suitable appropriation for this most necessary reconstruction. It certainly seems proper for this body to relieve the responsibility that has been placed upon a faithful public servant, the Honorable David Lynn, the Architect of the Capitol, and take the necessary action to vacate this room for the purpose of allowing the necessary repairs to be made for the safety of the Chamber that houses the Congress of the United States.

MRS. GEORGE C. HAMILTON ET AL.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4561) for the relief of Mrs. George C. Hamilton and Nanette Anderson, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4561) entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. George C. Hamilton and Nanette Anderson" having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,
PRENTISS M. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4561), for the relief of Mrs. George C. Hamilton and Nanette Anderson, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The House passed this bill to provide the sum of $250 to Mrs. George C. Hamilton, and the sum of $1,000 to Nanette Anderson. The Senate passed this bill with an amendment reducing the amount provided for Nanette Anderson to $500.

At the conference the Senate receded from its amendment.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. SATTERFIELD (at the request of Mr. BURCH), indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, if the statement of the gentleman from Michigan is correct regarding the condition of this roof, then certainly we are derelict in our duty in failing to take cognizance of his statement and the expert advice of engineers. We are reasonable men and women here and certainly we ought to consider ourselves, our families, and our guests and do something about moving this body into another meeting place until the roof is repaired. I cannot, for the life of me, see any sense in continuing here when expert advice indicates that the contrary is desirable. I hope the Members of the House will have the good sense to do the thing recommended by the gentleman from Michigan.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and any other business in order for the day I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the interest, the safety, and security of the Nation is lagging, therefore, I raise the point of no quorum.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Friday, November 22, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

2029. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to remove certain limitations on appropriations for the pay of midshipmen, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GAMBLE:

H. R. 10694. A bill for the relief of Gil Augusto Correai; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mrs. SMITH of Maine:

H. R. 10695. A bill for the relief of Marie Valida Antonia Michaud; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God most high, whose Spirit searcheth all things, whose love endureth all things: Draw us near to Thee in sincerity and truth, and save us from mere worship of the lips while our hearts are far from Thee. As we have grown unconscious of our need and accustomed to things remaining as they are, as we have lost our vision and have found ourselves unwilling to pay the price of better things, do Thou stand before us like the light and reveal to us the dawning sense of brotherhood.

Make us to love Thy will and sweep away our fears, our compromise with evil. As we realize our hunger after righteousness, teach us, as a Nation, that the way of prayer and penitence is the only way that is safe for us and sure to lead us unto Thee, where true and lasting peace alone is to be found. In our Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I send forward the credentials of Hon. C. WAYLAND BROOKS, Senator-elect from Illinois, and ask that they be read and placed on file.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The credentials of C. WAYLAND BROOKS, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Illinois a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy in the term ending January 3, 1943, caused by the death of the late Senator James Hamilton Lewis, were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator-elect is present and prepared to take the oath.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish simply to state that I have been informed informally that there may be some question raised with respect to this matter, in which event, of course, the Senate would not waive any of its rights with respect to the election by having Mr. BROOKS take the oath of office, as I understand. So, under the circumstances, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-elect will present himself at the desk, the oath will be administered.

Mr. BROOKS, escorted by Mr. VANDENBERG, advanced to the desk; and the oath of office having been administered to him by the President pro tempore, he took his seat in the Senate.

DEATH OF JAMES M. BAKER

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, with sorrow I announce to the Senate the death at Lowndesville, S. C., of James M. Baker, who was for more than 6 years Secretary of the United States Senate and for a number of years prior to that time the librarian of the Senate. Subsequent to his service as Secretary of this body, Mr. Baker served as Minister to Siam. He rendered distinguished service to his Nation as Secretary of this body and in the Foreign Service. I know that the personnel has changed greatly in the years which have passed, but still I believe that there are in the body many who will remember Mr. Baker and who will share the sorrow of his family and his friends.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the petition of the chief of police and sundry members of the police department of Whitefish Bay, Wis., praying that all members of police departments who are contributors to, participants in, or beneficiaries of existing retirement and annuity systems be excluded from the operation of the proposed extension of the Social Security Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from members of the North Alabama Conference of the Methodist Church in annual session at Tuscumbia, Ala., praying for the enactment of legislation completely to prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverages at all military camps, forts, cantonments, training centers, naval bases, and aviation establishments, and to prohibit such sales at any place to members of the military, naval, aviation, and other defense forces of the Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Dorothy Frooks, chairman of the Americanization Committee of the National Council of Women Lawyers and national commander of the Women World War Veterans, New York City, N. Y., praying that the Congress remain in session so as to pass the so-called Walter-Logan bill, providing a court review of the decisions of recently created Federal agencies, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BALL presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, praying for cancelation of the next due installment of the Finnish debt, and that such installment be given to the Republic of Finland as a Christmas gift, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. Marion Williamson for appointment as State director of selective service for the State of Georgia, under the provisions of law.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 4428. A bill to carry out flood-control measures recommended by Chief of Engineers for Jefferson, Tex., and vicinity; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KING:

S. 4429. A bill to enable the people of Hawaii to form a constitution and State government to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. TAFT:

S. 4430. A bill to create a War Resources Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LOUISE BLUNT

Mr. AUSTIN (for Mr. BARBOUR) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 333), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Louise Blunt, widow of Richard Blunt, late a skilled laborer in the document room of the Senate, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ROOF REPAIR—PLACE OF MEETING OF HOUSES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as has been stated time and again here on the floor and elsewhere, the roofs over the Senate Chamber and the House of Representatives have been declared to be unsafe. In view of the refusal of the other body to adjourn sine die, it has been thought advisable to seek to facilitate the immediate repair of the roofs over both the House and the Senate Chambers. I understand the other body is going to provide today for the meeting of its sessions in a large room in the House Office Building. It will take about 6 weeks to repair the roofs, and, unless we can arrange to hold the sessions of the Senate elsewhere between now and the 3d of January, it will be impossible for the Architect of the Capitol to begin the repair of the roof over the Senate Chamber. The money has already been appropriated for the purpose, plans have been made, the material, as I understand, ordered, and working force is waiting to go to work. Under these circumstances, it seems to me logical that the Senate meet elsewhere than in this Chamber during the remainder of this year.

The Architect of the Capitol has suggested that he can arrange the old Senate Chamber, more recently the Supreme Court chamber, in the Capitol Building so that the Senate may hold its sessions there while the work on the roof is being done. So I ask unanimous consent, subject to the ability of the Architect of the Capitol to prepare the old Supreme Court room for our sessions, that the Senate, after today, or as soon as practicable, hold its sessions in the old chamber which was originally the Senate Chamber and has more recently been the chamber of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on inquiry, I am advised that there is no rule of the Senate which requires the Senate to meet in any specified place. So far as I am concerned, I think it would be a distinction to sit in that Chamber where the Senate of the United States accomplished such great good in the building of the Republic, and where afterward the Supreme Court of the United States sat for so many years. I am rather pleased at the suggestion of the leader of the majority, and I concur in the request he has made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am informed by the Architect of the Capitol that he can have that Chamber ready for us on next Monday, and while it is not necessary, for, as the Senator from Vermont says, under the rule we are not required to meet here, yet this is the meeting place of the Senate, and it seems to me that it ought to require unanimous consent to meet elsewhere. I ask that my request be submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request which has been submitted by the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Kentucky whether when the Senate adjourns or recesses today it will be with the understanding that it will meet in this Chamber and then proceed to the place designated?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think it is necessary to meet here; so when we adjourn or recess today, it will be with the understanding that we will assemble at 12 o'clock noon on Monday in the old Chamber of the Supreme Court in the Capitol Building. I see no need of coming here and then going there, because, it may be, that work will have begun on the roof of the Chamber on that day.

ELECTION POLLS, ETC.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections certain letters and memoranda concerning Senate Resolution 329, submitted by me a few days ago, for the investigation of certain polls conducted previous to the election.

There being no objection, the letters and memoranda were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., November 16, 1940.

The Honorable KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senator from Tennessee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: I wish to take this opportunity to commend you for your proposal to conduct an investigation of the preelection polls.

I hope you will push this proposal with all urgency. I feel confident that the Gallup poll, especially, was deliberately colored to favor the Willkie candidacy. I do not mean that the figures were rigged—on that I have no information—although obviously they must have been rigged in some of the other polls, such as the Dunn survey, which predicted a victory for Willkie. But the editorial presentation of the Gallup poll was obviously colored in favor of Willkie, as an examination of the poll during the campaign will easily show.

All honor to you for your proposal.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES CURTIS MUNZ.

WEST INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL,
Jackson, Mich., November 19, 1940.

Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am very much interested in your proposed investigation of the Gallup poll. I have studied it closely since its beginning and would like to offer an observation or so, with intent to help you in a small way.

My own opinion is that there is nothing fundamentally wrong with the poll but that the fault lies with Mr. Gallup himself in his interpretations of it. For example, every time he released figures during the past campaign he tried to explain to the public that they were not to be taken at their face value, for although they showed a Roosevelt victory it was extremely probable that Willkie would win. Mr. Roger Babson noticed this and called it to the attention of his clients in a letter sent out over a month preceding the election, I am enclosing a quotation from this letter, which I am sure you will find interesting.

Mr. Gallup has repeatedly boasted, in the public prints since election, of the very closeness of his estimate of the popular vote. What he never mentions is that his considerable errors are all in the same direction. For example, he missed the popular vote in 1936 by 6 percent, Roosevelt getting 6 percent more than the poll had shown. This year, prior to election, Mr. Gallup pointed out that the trend in 1936 had been toward Roosevelt, thus accounting in part for the error. This year, Mr. Gallup said, the trend was toward Willkie. Yet the poll showed an error of 2.6 percent, and again it was an underestimate of the Roosevelt strength.

Now, it would appear to any unbiased observer that an allowance for "probable error" should mean that error might occur in either direction, taking the polls State by State. Yet taking the past two elections together, not one State showing a leaning toward Roosevelt has been found in the other column on election day. And each year a number of States leaning toward the Republican side have been found in the Roosevelt column when the votes were counted. This year alone there were 8 such States, with a total of 173 electoral votes. Now, I contend that any poll which misses the electoral vote by almost 30 percent cannot lay claim to any degree of accuracy.

I am sure everybody must have been amused by Mr. Gallup's strained efforts to avoid making any predictions this year. This showed such little faith in his poll on his own part that it certainly left no room for any on the part of others. Unless, and this is important, the public should discern, as did Roger Babson, that Mr. Gallup was trying to create in the public mind a feeling that the Republicans would win, while his poll showed otherwise. Then the public could adjust the figures to show that Mr. Roosevelt would win all the States in his column, plus all the very close States in the other. This would have been exactly true in both of the past two elections. In short, the public would have to understand that Mr. Gallup's "margin of error" really meant that Mr. Roosevelt would likely get from 2 to 4 percent more votes than the poll showed.

Please excuse the length of this letter; and I do hope you will get Mr. Gallup talking some other way than vague, which has been his style up to date.

Very sincerely,

O. E. EPPERSON.

QUOTATION FROM ROGER BABSON

In view of the attempt of each political party to organize a "poll" to suit its convenience, subscribers naturally are bewildered. Statisticians are being purchased to forecast elections as experts are employed by the lawyers on both sides of a legal fight. This, of course, is very wrong. Although this section does not mix up with politics, we do not advise subscribers to put the Gallup poll ahead of their own hopes or party affiliations. Mr. Gallup is leaning backward to give the Republicans the benefit of every doubt. Mr. Gallup's studies now show Mr. Roosevelt will be reelected. He admits that the final statistics may show otherwise. Our advice is that you base your business and investments upon what the Gallup poll shows and pay no attention to the propaganda of any party.

NEW YORK, November 19, 1940.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: We of New York City have read with great interest and satisfaction that you are preparing to ask a Senate investigation of polls conducted during the Presidential campaign. Speaking for myself and for many of my neighbors, I beg to extend to you our sincere congratulations in this connection and to express to you our ardent hope that your effort will be crowned with great success. To me these so-called public-opinion polls, and particularly the Gallup poll, can become, and may become, a most dangerous agency of propaganda. As you are aware, the Gallup poll in the recent past has presumed to give an accurate measurement of widespread public opinion in America on such grave questions as—

Whether or not the people favor conscription.

Whether or not the people favor the United States entering the present war on the side of Great Britain.

Whether or not the people of this country favor giving ships of our Navy and part of our airplanes to Great Britain.

Dr. Gallup's Institute of Public Opinion, through its very frequent surveys, assumes to give the public a more accurate measurement and diagnosis of public opinion than combined judgment and information possessed by all the Members of both Houses of Congress put together. If polls like the Gallup polls are to be relied on, the President of the United States should immediately subscribe for the service offered by Dr. Gallup's Institute of Public Opinion and the President should, by that token, cease to bother consulting with his Cabinet, or the congressional leaders, or with anybody but Dr. Gallup. The secrecy with which Dr. Gallup clothes his methods, however, and the fact that the surveys of his Institute of Public Opinion are for sale to anybody makes it imperative that the mechanics of these agencies be dragged out into the sunlight so that the public may not in the future be stampeded or misled by either the exaggerated or distorted results of so-called public-opinion polls.

In a book published by him within the last 6 or 8 months (which book was reviewed in the New York Times Sunday Book Review), Dr. Gallup stated that in the case of the polls of his Institute of Public Opinion he has never "sampled" more than 6,000 persons and never less than 2,500 persons. This would mean that, of the average, the Gallup poll has never obtained the views of more than 125 persons per State. I submit that any worth-while measurement of public opinion in this country cannot be obtained by interviewing a mere 125 persons in each State, and I insist that for any organization to assume to report public opinion on the basis of such a limited survey constitutes a fraud.

Some of the questions which I would like to have answered concerning the Gallup poll particularly are as follows:

1. In what States have Dr. Gallup's recent polls been taken, and in what cities or towns thereof? How many persons were contacted in each of such States, towns, and cities?

2. In what States, cities, or towns are the staff of Dr. Gallup's Institute of Public Opinion located?

3. Does the Institute of Public Opinion approach the same persons in each successive poll—in other words, is it possible that Dr. Gallup has a restricted number of selected white mice or guinea pigs from whom he obtains his reactions?

4. What perons throughout this country actually have been questioned in any of Dr. Gallup's alleged surveys? What are their names and addresses and how were they selected?

In line with my personal interest in the possibility of public-opinion polls as instruments of propaganda, I wrote a letter to the editor of the New York Times, under the date of August 19, 1940. Accordingly I transmit herewith for your information and possible use a copy of my said letter to the editor of the Times and photostats of the reply received by me.

Trusting that you may be successful in bringing about the much-needed investigation and exposure of public-opinion polls, I am, with great respect,

Yours sincerely,

JAMES A. HIGGINS.

EDITOR, NEW YORK TIMES,
Times Square, New York.

SIR: Is it not quite possible that the so-called "Dr." Gallup and his so-called American Institute of Public Opinion, aided and abetted by the New York Times, are foisting upon the public one of the most brazen frauds in the history of our country? These "polls" or "surveys" as reported with such prominence and frequency by the New York Times purport to be an actual fluoroscope of American public opinion on the very gravest questions of the present. Nevertheless, "Dr." Gallup is most careful never to give the actual number of persons voting for and against the given proposition in any one of his "polls." As an instance, in today's Times, upon the all-important question of the United States selling 50 destroyers to England, "Dr." Gallup avoids giving the actual number of people "sampled" by his so-called Institute of Public Opinion, and carefully chooses the following expressions: "Those expressing an opinion voted: Approved selling, 62 percent; disapproved, 38 percent."

Recently in the Sunday Book Review Section of the New York Times it was stated that never has "Dr." Gallup sounded out or sampled more than 6,000 persons in any "poll." This means that the Gallup "polls" represent at the most the reaction of only 125 persons per State. In my opinion, for any individual or newspaper to attempt to report Nation-wide public opinion upon the basis of interviews of 125 or fewer persons per State is either a brazen fraud or the most vicious form of propaganda, or both.

Moreover, the frequency with which these "polls" are taken and reported impels one to ask, "Does Gallup contact the same people in every poll?" Within the past week the New York Times has reported Gallup surveys on at least three separate questions of tremendous importance, viz:

The percentages of voters as regards their present choice for President.

The percentages of American people favoring or opposing conscription.

The percentages of the American people favoring or disapproving the sale of our destroyers to Great Britain.

How can any agency "poll" any sizable portion of American public opinion upon these three grave questions in 1 week, considering that it takes the well-organized staff of the Daily News the better part of a month each year to poll a mere fraction of the voters in New York City and New York State upon the simple question of their choice of a local candidate?

Under all the circumstances, I feel that the public is entitled to an answer to the following questions, either from the New York Times or from "Dr." Gallup:

1. Why does not "Dr." Gallup and his American Institute of Public Opinion state the number of persons "polled" or "sampled" in each State in each survey, and the split thereof, instead of giving lump percentages upon an alleged Nation-wide basis?

2. Has "Dr." Gallup a particular claque or selected list of human white mice or guinea pigs from whom he obtains his reactions in each successive poll? If not, how does he select the people to be quizzed?

3. Finally, and most important of all in my opinion, who finances or subsidizes "Dr." Gallup and the American Institute of Public Opinion? Obviously, "Dr." Gallup and his staff must eat. Who pays for these polls—the New York Times, or who else—and how much?

Answers to the above questions are eagerly awaited.

Very truly yours,

JAMES A. HIGGINS.

THE NEW YORK TIMES,
New York, August 26, 1940.

Mr. JAMES A. HIGGINS,
233 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge your letter of the 19th addressed to the editor.

The enclosed article, published in the New York Times on May 17, 1938, is a general answer to all three of your questions. A more specific answer to question number three is that the Times is one of a fairly large number of newspapers purchasing this service from Dr. Gallup. A list of the papers is also enclosed.

You will notice that in calling him Dr. Gallup I have omitted the quotation marks.

Very truly yours,

ARTHUR HAYS SULZBERGER.

GALLUP EXPLAINS "OPINION SAMPLING"—SURVEYS BY HIS INSTITUTE GET THE VIEWS OF WELL-CHOSEN CROSS SECTIONS OF PUBLIC—NUMBERS NOT IMPORTANT—BUT REPRESENTATIVES OF EVERY POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, AND AGE GROUP ARE QUESTIONED

(By Dr. George Gallup, Director, American Institute of Public Opinion)

With the increasing public interest in the surveys made by the American Institute of Public Opinion many persons have asked for information on the way the institute conducts its surveys, the accuracy of its findings, and the social value of its work. I should like to attempt to answer these questions.

The American Institute of Public Opinion is a fact-finding organization, the sole purpose of which is to measure public opinion on political and social issues of the day and to report the facts. Its role as an organization is one of strict impartiality. It has no political predilections and does not espouse any public or private cause, no matter how worthy. It is not concerned whether the views of the people, as shown by its surveys, are right or wrong, wise or unwise. It simply reports what those views are.

The institute's source of income is a group of daily newspapers, which have exclusive privilege to publish the results of the surveys. The newspapers subscribing to the institute are of all shades of political belief. Some are Democratic, some Independent, some Republican.

"SAMPLING REFERENDUM" USED

The chief tool used by the institute in its measurement of public opinion is the sampling referendum. The basic principle of the sampling referendum is simply that by sounding the opinions of a relatively small number of persons proportionate to each population group and in every section of the country the opinions of the whole population can be determined.

The secret of this new type of opinion sampling is not numbers. Statisticians have repeatedly demonstrated that a few thousand voters correctly selected will reflect faithfully the views of an electorate of millions of voters. The secret is in the cross section—the way voters for the sample are selected. To be a reliable indicator of public opinion the sample must include views of members of all political parties and of rich and poor, old and young, men and women, farmers and city dwellers, persons of all religious faiths—in short, voters of all types from every State in the land.

Moreover, it must include these types numerically in the sample in approximately the same proportion as they exist in the voting population. It must, in effect, select a miniature electorate that is representative of the views of the larger whole. When this sampling process is executed with statistical skill the voters in the miniature electorate will divide into opinion blocs in virtually the same way as all the voters would divide if their views were canvassed.

The process of conducting a survey starts with a conference of the institute's editorial and research executives. Here the news of the day is discussed, the issues to be investigated are selected and defined, and the questions framed. The wordings are then tested for clarity on a small group of voters selected at random. Upon completion of the test copies of the ballot are printed and the national survey is ready to begin.

SIX HUNDRED FIELD REPORTERS

The actual surveys are conducted with the aid of more than 600 field reporters, nearly all college graduates, strategically located in cities and rural areas throughout the Nation. They obtain answers to the ballot questions by interviewing voters in the home, on the street, in offices, and on farms.

Upon completion of the interviewing the reporters return the ballot forms to the institute's statistical office at Princeton, N. J., where the vote is tabulated by machine. Results are then sent to the editorial staff, which prepares news stories for publication.

Success in the field of opinion research, however, depends not so much upon how the voters are reached as upon (1) how many are reached (size of sample), (2) what types of voters are reached (character of the cross section), and (3) timing. Of these, the most important, it must be emphasized, is the character of the cross section. The least important normally is the number of persons included in the sample.

A belief persists in the lay mind that the most accurate survey must necessarily be the one which reaches the largest number of people. Those who cling to this theory received a rude shock, to be sure, when the Literary Digest's 2,000,000 ballot poll ran afoul in 1936. It is safe to say that no Nation-wide poll ever went wrong because too few persons were reached. A survey which predicts an election within 5 percent is generally regarded as amazingly accurate. Yet this degree of accuracy can be attained with from 600 to 900 ballots.

The statistical requirements for size of sample vary according to the issues involved, the detail of analysis desired, and the division of opinion. The size of national sample used by the institute runs from 3,000 cases to 50,000 cases or more, depending on the problems involved. A sample is adequate in size when an increase in number of cases fails to produce significant differences in results. Unless special analyses are required, it is wasted effort to go on piling up returns after stability has been reached.

SURVEY OF N. R. A. IN 1936

Consider, for example, the institute's study of opinion on the N. R. A. In 1936 a survey of 30,000 ballots was taken on the question, "Would you like to see the N. R. A. revived?" The first 500 cases showed a "no" vote of 54.9 percent. The complete sample of 30,000 cases returned a "no" vote of 55.5 percent. In other words, the addition of 29,500 cases to the first 500 cases in this instance made a difference of six-tenths of 1 percent in the national findings. Here are the figures:

Number of cases and percent voting against reviving the N. R. A.

First 500 ballots	54.9
First 1,000 ballots	53.9
First 5,000 ballots	55.4
First 10,000 ballots	55.4
All 30,000 ballots	55.5

Thus stability of returns can be reached with a relatively small number of cases. In any survey of opinion the prime determinant of accuracy is the character of the cross section. If the cross section is faulty, no piling up of cases in a national survey can eliminate the error.

The smallest unit used by the institute in making up a cross section is the State. No two States can be sampled in exactly the same way, but certain general principles can be illustrated. If one-third of the voters in a State live on farms, one-third of the ballots received from that State must come from farmers. If one-eighth of the voting population is on relief, one-eighth of the ballots must come from reliefers. And so on for the major population groups.

The institute uses six statistical keys to assure a representative cross section. The sample must contain the proper proportion of (1) voters from each State; (2) men and women; (3) farm voters and voters in towns of 2,500 population or less, 2,500 to 10,000, 10,000 to 100,000, 100,000 to 500,000, and 500,000 and over; (4) voters of all age groups; (5) voters of above average, average, and below average incomes, as well as persons on relief; and (6) Democrats, Republicans, and members of other political parties.

The actual number of persons in each of these six categories is found by consulting various statistical sources. The census, for example, gives population break-downs by sex, age, and urban and rural residence. Election returns show the number of Republicans, Democrats, and voters of other parties. Statistics relating to income are available from many Government and private sources.

In any survey which attempts to predict an election, timing is another factor of importance. Speeches and events during the last week of a campaign may sometimes cause shifts of sentiment. For that reason a survey should be continued up to within a few hours of the election, if possible.

NO CLAIM TO INFALLIBILITY

So far as accuracy is concerned, the institute does not believe that it can be right 100 percent of the time. Nevertheless its record has been impressive. The institute predicted President Roosevelt's victory in 1936 with an average State-by-State error of only 6 percentage points. Forty-two of the 48 States were correctly placed and only 3 (Maine, Vermont, and New Hampshire) listed as sure for Landon. More recently the institute forecast the reelection of Mayor LaGuardia in New York City within 4 points, and indicated the victory of Mayor Reading in Detroit within 2 points.

Opinion surveys have been critcized on the ground that they influence public opinion as well as measure it. Some people fear that if the voter knows what side is the popular side he will climb on the bandwagon. There is little support, however, for the bandwagon theory. As one example, the Literary Digest, which enjoyed a wide following throughout the country, forecast a victory for Landon, but the people voted for Roosevelt.

The question has been frequently asked: What will be the effect on representative government if public opinion on social and political issues can be known at all times? Will legislators become puppets in the hands of pressure groups and the true function of representation be lost? Under a system of frequent opinion measurement, the function of representation is not lost, for it is well understood that the people have not the time or the inclination or the competence to pass on all the problems that confront their leaders. Moreover, the democratic process requires leaders to initiate the means by which the values of the group are realized.

Before the advent of the sampling referendum legislators were not isolated from their constituencies. They read the local newspapers; they toured their precincts and talked with the common man; they received letters from the home folks; they entertained delegations claiming to speak for the majority or for large and important blocs of voters. The change that is brought about by sampling referenda is that legislators and leaders generally can get a truer measure of national public opinion than they have had in the past.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain quotations and excerpts.

Mr. HULL, Mr. LAMBERTSON, Mr. THILL, and Mr. PATRICK asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague and good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], was necessarily absent Tuesday, when the vote was had upon the conference report of H. R. 960, the so-called Ramspeck civil-service bill.

No Member of the House has been a more earnest or consistent advocate in support of this legislation than EWING THOMASON, and it was to him a source of deep regret that he could not be here to vote for the adoption of the conference report.

Prior to its coming up in the House, he had requested me to secure a pair for him in support of the conference report.

Unfortunately, I was unable to secure an active pair for him, and I make this statement in order that the RECORD may show that it was not his fault that he was not present or paired in support of the conference report.

UNITED STATES SENATORS FROM THE STATE OF MISSOURI

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein the names of those who have served as United States Senators from the State of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I placed in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 6630, a list of the names of Members of this House, including Delegates, who served while Missouri was a Territory, also Members of Congress at Large, and the names of all Members who were elected from the congressional district of which Jackson County was a constituent part.

As a companion presentation, I desire that there be published a list of Missouri Senators, commencing with Thomas H. Benton and David Barton, who were elected to the Seventeenth Congress in 1821, and ending with the recently reelected HARRY S. TRUMAN, of Jackson County.

Included in this list of United States Senators are many famous men.

I shall mention but a few.

John B. Henderson in 1861 was a Presidential Elector for Stephen A. Douglas, the Democratic nominee. He later became a Republican, due to the War between the States. He was one of those who voted not guilty at the trial of President Andrew Johnson after his impeachment.

Another Senator of note was David R. Atchison, who for 1 day was President of the United States.

Then, I wish to mention Waldo P. Johnson, who, according to Senate records, was expelled from the Senate in 1862. My information, however, is that he never qualified as Senator but went into the Confederacy instead. He was one of Missouri's greatest lawyers, as was his son, William Tell Johnson, and their law associate, John H. Lucas. In 1874 they established their law firm in Osceola, Mo., and in 1879 the young men moved to Kansas City, Mo., where they lived until their respective deaths. For 45 years I knew William Tell Johnson and his partner, John H. Lucas. The latter is buried at Osceola and the former at Kansas City. These two men were of striking personality and were devout churchmen.

John Lucas was superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School in Osceola. It is my understanding that he never missed his class, except on one or two occasions, notwithstanding that he had to travel a distance of 150 miles from Kansas City to Osceola for every class meeting. For 47 years he commuted there weekly, to attend his Sunday-school meetings.

Waldo P. Johnson's son, William Tell Johnson, lies buried in Forest Hills Cemetery at Kansas City, in the Confederate section. He was a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church. I presume that no layman of any religion was more saintly in his ways than William Tell Johnson. What a trinity that was—Waldo P. Johnson, William Tell Johnson, and John H. Lucas.

Among others who served for a short term was Gen. James Shields, a hero of two wars, the Mexican War and—as a brilliant Union officer—the War between the States. He was a native of Tyrone County, Ireland. General Shields was the only man ever to serve three States as United States Senator; namely, Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri.

There is also that noted statesman, soldier, and Democrat, Frank P. Blair. A Kentuckian by birth, he served as Lincoln's representative in many confidential capacities.

The peerless George Graham Vest, who served as Senator from Missouri from 1879 to 1903, also had been a member of the Confederate senate.

Amongst other renowned Missouri Senators were Thomas Hart Benton and William Joel Stone, both of whom would require a volume of fair size to briefly outline their splendid public careers.

Included also are four living ex-Senators from Missouri: Harry B. Hawes, James A. Reed, Judge George Williams, and Roscoe Patterson.

Every name associated with this high office is linked with an interest that should be known not only to all Missourians but to all who love our Republic. For, after all, history is a chronicle of what men have done.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short telegram.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by Robert E. Lambert, clerk of the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and following the legislative program of the day I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

STRIKES ON NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROJECTS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this Congress has made commitments for national defense and neutrality enforcement amounting to $17,692,227,930, which is in part imperiled by labor disputes. Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore said on the floor of the House that to strike against the Government or essential works of the Government in time of emergency is in fact treason, and should be so declared by law. Concerning strikes now pending against the Government and plants producing for the Government, I have been expecting—or at least hoping—that somebody high up in the Government would at least give some expression of disapproval. These racketeers should not be permitted to sabotage national defense. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

RESIGNATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following notice of resignation:

NOVEMBER 20, 1940.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I beg leave to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the Governor of Texas my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the Eighteenth District of Texas.

Cordially yours,

MARVIN JONES.

ELECTION AS CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 638

Resolved, That HAMPTON P. FULMER, of South Carolina, be, and he is hereby, elected chairman of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Agriculture.

The resolution was agreed to.

VULTEE AIRCRAFT STRIKE CONTINUES

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, day before yesterday I called attention to the unwarranted strike, as I see it, at the Vultee aircraft plant in California. I simply wish to add to those remarks and say that this plant has now been closed for a period of 1 week, and in this period we have seen a disruption of operations and the production of more than 25 basic training planes on order by the United States Government has been held up. In other words, we are just 25 planes behind in the schedule we hoped to follow in our national-defense program.

This strike, and others taking place in factories occupied with filling defense orders, must be settled by conferences while work goes on without interruption.

I said then, and I repeat, although I do not set this Congress or myself up as an arbiter in this fight between the employer and the employees, that it is time this Congress, if the administration cannot stop this situation, lets the country know that we are going to see that there is a stoppage of the disruption of the national-defense orders for this Government. [Applause.]

THE NEW HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 637) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 637

Resolved, That when this House adjourns on Friday, November 22, 1940, it will adjourn to meet in the caucus room in the New House Office Building on Monday, November 25, 1940, and it shall continue to meet there until otherwise ordered.

Resolved, That all rules relating to the Hall of the House shall be applicable to the caucus room.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the President of the United States and to the Senate of the United States.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter I have received from David Lynn, Architect of the Capitol, relating to the contents of the resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., November 20, 1940.

Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK,
Majority Leader, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MCCORMACK: Referring to your inquiry of today for advice as to the present condition of the roof construction over the House Chamber, the opinions of seven engineers, both Government and private, are unanimous that the roof construction is in a dangerous condition and should be replaced at the earliest practicable date.

It is particularly urgent that the temporary work, involving the installation of temporary steel trusses under the ceiling of the House Chamber to support the cast-iron ceilings, relieving the existing trusses of the dead-load weight of 120 tons of cast-iron ceilings which are hung on the bottom chord of the present trusses, be carried forward with the least possible delay.

After the installation of the temporary steel trusses, which will take about 6 weeks to install, the Chamber can be occupied by the membership of the House with safety.

In the meantime, preparation of plans and specifications for the permanent construction and the removal of the old, obsolete roof trusses of cast iron and wrought iron above the ceilings and their replacement with modern steel construction is in progress and will continue.

The Architect of the Capitol, in order to take every precaution within his power to protect the membership of the House, has had installed wood struts between the top chords of the present trusses to reinforce the chords and insure to the greatest possible degree against their failure.

However, the findings of the engineers are to the effect that the stresses in the top chord truss members over the House Chamber exceed those allowed in good practice today by 65 percent. Therefore, the factor of safety of four which is demanded in all standard specifications and codes is reduced to two and one-half in the House Chamber.

The consulting engineer originally employed by the Architect of the Capitol recommends that in view of the conditions now existing, the present roof construction should be removed and replaced by a new one of modern design and all fireproof construction.

The Government engineers in their reports state that, notwithstanding the fact that the roof trusses have withstood for nearly 85 years, undetectible damage, such as fatigue, may have occurred during this time. These engineers also recommend that the roof trusses be replaced.

The consulting engineer employed by the joint congressional committee composed of Senator TOM CONNALLY, of Texas, and Representative LOUIS C. RABAUT, of Michigan, in his report, among other comments, suggests the lack of proper bracing and the fact that the top chords of the trusses are not straight—in other words, those chords having moved under stress—make the condition of the chords dangerous.

The chief engineer of the American Institute of Steel Construction, in his report, finds that the most dangerous condition of overstress in the roof trusses is when heavy snow and ice loads are accompanied by heavy, gusty winds. In his opinion, under such conditions the use of the House Chamber should be discontinued until such winds have subsided and the snow and ice loads have been removed.

The consensus of opinion, therefore, as expressed by all of the consulting engineers, is that the entire roof construction over the House wing should be taken down and replaced by modern fireproof construction at the earliest practicable date.

Yours very truly,

DAVID LYNN,
Architect of the Capitol.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns next Monday it adjourn to meet the following Thursday.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to find out whether I am going to be in position to question the presence of a quorum before I agree to that unanimous-consent request. I want a record of how many are present here today. If we are going to adjourn immediately after this unanimous-consent request is granted, without a record of those present, I am going to have to object to the request.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

RESOLUTION AGAINST WAR OF THE WICHITA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Mr. John W. Meloy, executive secretary of the Wichita Council of Churches, Wichita, Kans., in which is incorporated a copy of resolutions adopted by a recent meeting of the members of the council, urging that there be a redoubling of efforts to keep America out of war and to further the cause of world peace. The council also urges that this Government limit to peacetime quantity or prohibit altogether the shipment of scrap iron or aviation gasoline or other war materials to any nation when there is reason to believe that such materials will be used in a military way against the democracies.

There being no objection, the letter embodying the resolutions was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WICHITA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES,
Wichita, Kans., November 19, 1940.

The Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: The following resolution was adopted at the regular monthly meeting of the Wichita Council of Churches Monday, November 18, 1940, without a dissenting vote. The meeting included 165 delegates from 38 leading Wichita churches:

"(1) The Wichita Council of Churches commends the Federal Government for all efforts which have been made to keep America out of war and to help the cause of international justice and goodwill. And we urge that these efforts be redoubled in the interest of world peace.

"(2) We believe that the embargo on scrap iron and aviation gasoline is a constructive step toward peace. And we specifically request our Government to limit to normal peacetime quantity, or prohibit altogether, the export of any material to any nation when there is reason to believe such materials may be used in a military way against the democracies.

"(3) We realize the extreme complexity of international relations and the tremendous difficulty of the specific application of the spirit of Christ in the international field in the present war situation. However, we urge positive action on the part of the Government which will manifest America's goodwill and friendliness to the common people of all nations, including Japan, Germany, Russia, and Italy, and which at the same time will emphasize our steadfast purpose to resist all tyranny."

The members of the council are watching with deep interest your policies, particularly in the international field. May God give you wisdom in making sound decisions.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. MELOY,
Executive Secretary.

RECIPROCITY IN PATENTS, TRADE-MARKS, AND COPYRIGHTS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing a joint resolution, formerly numbered Senate Joint Resolution 284, to define the principle of international reciprocity in the protection of American patents, trade-marks, secret formulae and processes, and copyrights by providing a method for assuring the payments of amounts due to persons in the United States from users thereof in countries restricting international payments from their territories. Originally I introduced this joint resolution June 22, 1940, and it was referred to the Senate Committee on Patents. The number of people interested in the legislation quickly increased, and, after an executive meeting of the Patents Committee, it was considered the wisest legislative procedure to refer the resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency in line with recommendations from the Departments of Commerce, State, and Treasury. Accordingly I am reintroducing the measure with certain changes which make clear that the disputed issues of international exchange shall not be left in doubt.

Americans have gradually awakened to the fact that our own national defense is being jeopardized in major ways through the control of patents by foreign corporations; through financial control, sometimes hidden, by foreign corporations many of which are owned lock, stock, and barrel by foreign governments; through interlocking patent royalty rights which have the effect of restricting American production of vital war materials.

Mr. President, the so-called white paper recently issued by the House committee investigating un-American propaganda has touched on this general subject. Of even greater importance in this field is the Senate investigation being conducted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] on the subject of obstructions of our national defense.

It is a fact, as these investigating committees have already learned, that by means of these patent royalty agreements foreign governments not only profit from our vast expenditures on national defense, but also have ready access to production plans and programs of our defense effort. While such licensing agreements exist with foreign corporations of many nations the facts show that our relation with corporations of certain central European nations have proved most detrimental to our interests. By way of illustration let me refer to the use of numerous German patents for which German firms receive a steady flow of royalty funds. This goes on even though American patent owners, whose patents are being used in Germany, have not been able to secure the funds due them for use of these patents. The excuse given is that in Germany there is a lack of available dollars, and, through the blocked-mark program now followed there, our manufacturers pay out funds to German patent holders but receive no funds in return.

Mr. President, this is an intolerable and unfair condition at any time. It is particularly so when we no longer permit payments in United States funds to numerous European countries now under the domination of Germany.

The joint resolution which I introduce proposes that a revolving fund be established which will segregate American funds due firms of foreign countries which have restricted payments to the United States so that sums due our American manufacturers can be paid from this fund. I believe, Mr. President, that such a measure will have the approval of the administration and will receive wide support from the many sectors of American labor and industry which now suffer this unfair treatment.

The Department of Justice has just concluded the case of the Bausch & Lomb Co. of the United States and the Carl Zeiss Co. of Germany in which they pleaded guilty to antitrust charges. This company is one of a number which not only control articles of production vital to national defense but also supply foreign countries with royalty statements which enable them to know just what defense preparations we are making. For instance, the Bausch & Lomb Co. sends a royalty statement to Germany that our Government has ordered five range finders. Immediately that country is informed that we have five new battleships on order.

The resolution I offer will help American interests in three vital ways. It will provide that American business will be paid the money rightfully due it under the revolving fund which will be set up under the Treasury Department. Royalty statements will not be sent to foreign powers which would be given information contrary to the best interests of our national defense. Funds will not be provided foreign powers through exchange which might be used in subversive activity against the United States.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 304) to define the principle of international reciprocity in the protection of American patents, trade-marks, secret formulas and processes, and copyrights by providing a method for assuring the payments of amounts due to persons in the United States from users thereof in countries restricting international payments from their territories was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9954) to amend section 7 of the act of May 14, 1930 (46 Stat. 326; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 753 f), relating to places of confinement and transfers of persons convicted of an offense against the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGULATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE—AMENDMENT

Mr. BURKE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PROPERTY IN THE UNITED STATES OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE OR NATIONALS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution. I shall move its proper reference in due order; but I now ask that it be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 334) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to property in the United States owned by the Government or any political subdivision or agency or instrumentality of, or by citizens, subjects, or nationals of, Great Britain, Northern Ireland, or any commonwealth, dominion, or possession constituting a part of the British Empire. For the purposes of such investigation the term "property" shall include credits, deposits, securities, choses in action, and any other form of property, the proceeds thereof, and any right, title, or interest therein. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask for the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be so referred.

Res. 63) entitled "A resolution to inquire into the interstate migration of destitute citizens to study, survey, and investigate the social and economic needs, and the movement of indigent persons across State lines."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

REGULATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Walter-Logan bill, House bill 6324.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make what I hope will be a brief statement on the pending motion.

I shall not discuss the merits of the Walter-Logan bill—certainly not in detail. I may want to refer, only more or less casually and incidentally, to the provisions of the bill itself.

I shall vote against the motion to take up the bill at this time for reasons which may not appear sound or cogent to other Members of the Senate, but which appear to me to be sound in the interest of good legislative procedure.

I do not know how many Members of the Senate have carefully studied the bill, or how many Senators understand the details of the effect its enactment will have on the departments of the Government. I have tried to study it carefully; and I have come to the conclusion that, although the terms of the bill appear simple, there has not been before the Senate in a long time a more technical piece of legislation—I mean technical because of the manner in which the bill attempts to deal in a uniform way with all the departments and agencies of the United States Government.

It is my contention that there is not now before the Senate enough information to enable the Senate to act wisely on legislation of this sort because individual Senators have not had the time—and I think I am within the bounds of reasonable truth when I say that the Senate as a whole has not had the time—to try to lay this bill down as a sort of blanket over the various departments of the Government and try to shape the administration of the departments which we ourselves have created by a uniform formula that would be applicable to all of the departments and agencies.

I shall not go into the history of the legislation. We all understand that this is a bill which was prepared by the American Bar Association through a committee on administrative law. The committee was made up of distinguished men, able lawyers; and during the annual sessions of the bar association the committee devoted some time to the subject. But the subject of administrative law is a new subject in the United States. It is one with which the bar as a whole is not familiar. Even now there are only six law schools in the United States which have courses upon the subject of administrative law; and only 8 or 10 years ago there was no law school in the United States which gave to its students a course in administrative law.

The bill was drawn by the subcommittee of the American Bar Association, was introduced in the House and Senate, and has been pending for a year or two. I believe that if the consideration of this whole subject could be postponed until the next session of Congress we should be able to write a wise bill dealing with the subject which would become law. I grant that legislation upon the subject is needed—not, however, legislation putting the courts in charge of departments. Two or three years ago we had a very bitter controversy here over a recommendation of the President in regard to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was opposed on the ground that the executive departments or even the President ought not to be given, by legislation or by any other method, control of our courts; and, regardless of the merits of the proposal and the sincerity of those who advocated it and those who opposed it, the measure did not become law.

It seems to me that this legislation, proposed here in the form in which it is proposed, is almost as objectionable as that measure was said to be, because it reverses the situation and the process by putting the courts in charge of the executive departments to such an extent that an executive department, as I read the bill, may not issue regulations for its own conduct without the approval of the courts. As I see the bill, under it, if it should become a law, it would be possible to hold up and postpone departmental procedure almost indefinitely; for it would not be until everything that happens in an executive department or agency could be thrashed out in the courts, and almost to the highest court, that there would be any assurance that a policy or an order or a regulation of the department involved could be settled and become effective.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I notice that the Senator emphasizes his contention that this bill proposes an interference by the judicial department with the executive department. I ask him if he does not realize that by many of the statutes which set up these various bureaus the legislative department delegated the authority to legislate. That is to say, it invested the bureaus with power to make rules that would have the validity and effect of law. Does the Senator recognize that that function was delegated?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do, of course. In the writing of the details of legislation Congress has either had to do that or it has had to undertake the writing of detailed regulations itself within the law and in the inevitable expansion of government as it has developed in this country; and it has had to develop as we have grown in complexity, as our problems have become more intertwined, there has been an inevitable development—certainly one that has been rapid—and it has been almost all inclusive. I realize that there are many sincere statesmen who disagree with the statement of the inevitability of that process, but it has been borne out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does it not logically follow that there should be in our courts the power to review the administration of such rules, in fact, to review the creation of such rules, principally those involving questions of constitutionality?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not believe there is any constitutional right involved in the processes of administration in the various departments which is now denied to any person who has a genuine complaint. In other words, I think any such person even now can go into the courts and thrash out many, if not all, these problems. That is the very difficulty; it is utterly impossible for any one Senator or for a committee to make the investigations of the rules, methods, and processes by which the administrative agencies are carried on so as to know which can and which cannot afford a remedy sufficient, not only on constitutional grounds but on grounds of justice. That is one of the difficulties which would be involved in taking up the bill at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Senator will yield for a further question, I will not interrupt him again.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is all right; I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator's observation applies principally, in an argumentative sense, to the administration of the rules after they are enacted; but the special committee which studied the proposed legislation thought it found a grave error in the procedure which permitted these bureaus, or at least some of them, arbitrarily to make these rules without notice, without hearing, and without the presence of the person whose property and whose civil rights were taken away. For example, I put into the RECORD a few days ago a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit referring to the deprivation of a labor union of its existence solely by virtue of a rule of the National Labor Relations Board affecting notice and hearing and the presence of the respondent and an opportunity to answer. That is perhaps an extreme case, but as a principle of government it is the object of the committee to secure to interested parties a hearing upon the creation of such a rule. That is one of the first objects of the bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Did not the Supreme Court in that very decision protect the fundamental right of the party under the Constitution, without the Walter-Logan bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that did occur.

Mr. MINTON. Has not the Supreme Court also held that it is not necessary to due process of law that hearing be held and notice given of the promulgation of rules by administrative bodies and bureaus?

Mr. BARKLEY. That was the ruling, of course, and that is why I stated a moment ago that I do not know of any constitutional right which Congress has not already safeguarded in the legislation dealing with each department separately. The decision of the Supreme Court, I think, at least in part confirmed that observation.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no doubt in my mind that if once one can get into the judicial department with the issue of constitutionality of legislation properly raised he will obtain a hearing there; but the oppressive fact is that in the case referred to a labor union had to go up through all the different courts and trials in order to preserve a right which is so ancient that it should be respected without regard to constitutions; that is, the right to have notice and to have a hearing and to be present when one's very existence is threatened with destruction. That is what we are fighting for.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, Congress could, at the time of the creation of any of these agencies, have provided for that, and it can do so now by amending the law under which the agency operates. But when we try to adopt an identical formula for the future administration of all the departments of the Government, regardless of their functions, it seems to me that Congress should have more information regarding the effect of such a law and such a universal formula than we have now.

Not only that, but under the bill, as I interpret it, it would be possible for a court to issue a declaratory judgment, not upon a given set of facts submitted to it in a controversy, but on a moot case which might affect the conduct of every department of the Government for an indefinite period, if not forever, at least until Congress took some different action.

I stated that I did not wish to go into the details of the proposed legislation. If the Senate votes to consider the bill, I intend to discuss it somewhat in detail before a vote is taken on the measure. But the thing which seems to me important is that, with the mind of the Senate not on this particular problem, and with the mind of the country not on this particular problem, it is unwise now, at this juncture, to begin consideration of the bill in its present form, when in January, according to my belief, we will be able to work out legislation which can be enacted and become law, and which will, I think, deal with the problem in as exhaustive a way as is necessary.

Nothing would be lost by postponing action. I stated a moment ago that the Senate as a whole had not given to this subject the study necessary to convince every Senator in his own mind as to the effect of the bill on the departments and governmental agencies. Those who have studied it unavoidably have found some confusion in the bill insofar as the effect it would have on the department is concerned.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I am wondering whether the majority leader has any idea as to when the committee which has been making a special study of this matter will report.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am just coming to that.

Mr. MALONEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that Senators raise their eyebrows when I refer to a committee which has been appointed by the Attorney General of the United States; and I am not worried about that. Early this year, or last year, I am not certain when, but at least several months ago, I think during last winter, possibly at the end of the last session or at the beginning of this session, the President of the United States asked the Attorney General to appoint a committee.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there in order that that matter may be straightened out?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I think it was in April or May 1939, more than a year and a half ago.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well. I accept the Senator's suggestion. No matter how long ago it was, this committee has been in existence. It has not been in existence as long as the American Bar Association has, through its subcommittee, been giving consideration to the subject, but in view of the importance of the question, in view of the President's desire that the matter should be studied, he asked the Attorney General to appoint a committee, which was done, we will say, in May of 1939.

The members of the committee do not draw any salary for the work they are doing. They are not on the pay roll. They are giving their services without compensation to the Department of Justice, to the Congress, and to the country, in studying the subject of administrative law and procedure in the various departments.

This committee is headed by Dean Acheson, one of the able lawyers of the United States. I do not think anyone could accuse Dean Acheson of being the sort of man who would be swept off his feet for or against proposed legislation of the kind we are now considering. The committee has been meeting every day for a month considering the whole subject, based upon information it has gathered from all the agencies; and, as I stated on a previous occasion, it has gone through the departments with a fine-tooth comb.

Of course, there were differences between members of the committee as to what should be done. They are undertaking to prepare a constructive document to submit to the Department of Justice and, through it, to the Congress of the United States. Their report will be made to the Attorney General on the 1st of December, I am informed. I thought several months ago it would be made during October, and certainly by the 18th of November, so that it would be available to the Senate on that date, but it turns out that there have been differences of opinion within the committee which they have had to iron out, and they are now in the process of ironing out their differences. They are proposing to recommend legislation to Congress on the subject. They are not dealing particularly with the Logan-Walter bill. I doubt whether they even comment on that bill, because they were not appointed to deal with any particular piece of legislation. But they are prepared to report to the Attorney General in an exhaustive document what they have found to be the conditions in the departments, as to what amendments are needed, what legislation should be considered, and, in their judgment, enacted by the Congress of the United States dealing with this subject. As I have stated, I am informed from the highest authority that the report will be available December 1.

Of course, it has to go before the Attorney General. That is the date when the committee proposes to submit it to him. I do not know how soon after that it will be forwarded to Congress for its consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. Perhaps 19 more months.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from North Carolina suggests 19 more months. I do not think there is any basis for that suggestion. The Senator, however, has the right to make it.

The Senate can ignore this situation, if it wants to—and I am satisfied there are Members of the Senate who will ignore it because they have been advocating the passage of the proposed legislation—and there is a sort of feeling in certain quarters in the country that it would be better to pass some legislation, even if it is not the best legislation that can be obtained, if by doing so some persons in the departments could be curbed—and that applies particularly to the National Labor Relations Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission, both of which have been named a good deal in discussion which has taken place outside the Senate.

I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I am satisfied the report will be available for our consideration at the next session of Congress in January. In all probability, we shall have to wait here on the House to pass a number of bills. We usually do so at the beginning of the session. We shall especially have to wait until the House sends us appropriation bills. We shall have to wait on the House for any legislation on the subject of taxation, and, in all probability, we may be doing what for lack of business we nearly always do at the beginning of the session for a month or more—adjourn every 3 days until measures of legislation come from the House. So I believe, in good faith, that we shall have ample opportunity to consider the subject in the light of the report of this committee. I think that even some Senators who advocate this proposed legislation feel that, in the interest of good legislation, in the interest of not passing a bill which I believe has been crudely drawn, and has not been much improved since it reached the Senate, it would be the part of wisdom and statesmanship not to take up the bill now.

I do not believe the Senate as a whole is in the mood for the consideration of legislation of this sort. We have a bare quorum, as has been developed here today. Certainly this bill ought not to pass, and no other bill of similar importance ought to pass, without a full attendance of the Senate.

That is the situation. Senators will act, of course, as their consciences dictate.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. Before the Senator from Kentucky takes his seat I wish to impose briefly on the Senator's time to make a statement for the RECORD. I was inclined to vote to bring up the Walter-Logan bill, and then, unless it was greatly changed to vote against the bill when given the opportunity. I am opposed to it in its present form. The majority leader has persuaded me that it would be best for the country that we delay consideration of the measure for the reasons which he has given. I have talked with Dean Atcheson about it. I have complete confidence in him and in his committee. I am anxious for my own sake to have the benefit of the study the committee makes, and I now rise for the purpose of associating myself with the splendid statement made by the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from Connecticut, and I wish to make a statement for the assurance of any Senators who may feel that if this matter goes over until January there would be an interminable delay. I have, in my present capacity in the Senate, never gotten so tired of one subject as I have of the Walter-Logan bill during the last year and one-half, and God forbid that I should have to spend another year and a half dealing with the matter. I want to get rid of it one way or another at a time when we can act wisely and in the light of all the facts.

I can assure the Senator from North Carolina and other Senators—that assurance may not be worth anything, but I give it anyway—that if we can wait until we shall have the benefit of these facts, and this meticulous and detailed investigation, which no other committee, and no other body has been able to give the subject, I will cooperate to the extent of my ability, if I am in any responsible position here after January, to have the subject taken up, and to have it disposed of by enactment of legislation.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Of course, the Senator realizes that if the course which he recommends is followed, the other body, the House of Representatives, would have to start all over again with the consideration of this measure, which, after full consideration, was reported to the House by almost unanimous vote of the Judiciary Committee, and after several days' debate on the floor of the House of Representatives, was passed by a vote of almost 3 to 1. The Senator recommends a course which would require the other body to consider the matter anew.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is not only true with respect to this bill, but other bills on the doorstep of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE. I am speaking particularly of this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is also true with respect to bills which we sent to the House which were not acted upon, and probably will not be acted upon in view of the existing situation. The result is that both Houses will have to start from scratch. But I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I believe, in all good faith, that the country would benefit by both Houses starting from scratch on this and some other subjects with respect to which there is considerable controversy, and I believe we can obtain wisely considered legislation by that means. I believe we can have consideration of the matter at the next session.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator from Kentucky elaborate on the statement which he made a moment ago that after studying the bill he considers it to be a crudely drawn measure? Will the Senator elaborate on that statement, particularly in the light of the fact, known to all of us, that it was his late distinguished colleague, Senator Logan, who spent several years in working out all the details of the bill, and that a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate spent a great deal of time, over a period of 3 or more years, in working the matter out and had before it such distinguished students of administrative law as Roscoe Pound and many others and gave the fullest consideration to all the details of the bill, and then that it followed in the House the procedure already outlined, having there the study of the Judiciary Committee and the study of the full membership of the House, after which the bill was passed? I should like to know upon what ground the Senator from Kentucky now says that he thinks this is a crudely drawn measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska and to other Senators that, of course, my statement was not intended to be a reflection upon my former colleague, Judge—later Senator—Logan. He was an able lawyer and an able jurist, but everyone knows that Senator Logan did not draw this bill. No member of the Committee on the Judiciary drew the bill. The bill was drawn by a subcommittee of the American Bar Association, and, as frequently happens, it was submitted to Senator Logan for introduction. It was introduced not in its present form. The form in which it was originally introduced was not changed by my late colleague, but it was changed later in some respects by a subcommittee of the American Bar Association, and it was reintroduced by him as the product of that subcommittee of the American Bar Association.

What I meant by saying that it was crudely drawn is this: I believe that, however carefully a Senator, a lawyer, or anyone else studies this bill, he cannot know what effect it will have upon the various departments of the Government of the United States, which is something we should be able to determine before we vote on a bill which would give a court the right, even without evidence, without a specific, existing state of facts before it, to issue a declaratory judgment upon a moot situation which might affect facts thereafter to be considered by officials in the administration of the departments which the court could not have had in mind when it issued its declaratory judgment.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I think it fair to say about our late colleague, Senator Logan, that, while a bill was drafted by a committee on administrative law of the American Bar Association and considered in the delegates assembly of that association at many meetings participated in by the ablest lawyers in the country, and that as the result of that a draft of a bill was submitted to Senator Logan, yet the measure in its present form is shot through with Senator Logan's ideas; it bears the impress of his work and thought upon the subject in a great many particulars and it also bears the impress of the work done on the bill by the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee and also by the committee in the House. While there is no dispute about the fact that the measure was initiated and presented in draft form by the committee of the American Bar Association, the bill became, by the thought and energy and effort of Senator Logan and of other Members of this and the other body of Congress, in a much larger measure than has been true in past years, a bill drawn by the legislative department rather than by some other department of the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator knows, and I am sure the Senate knows, that there is no man for whom I had a greater regard, both as to his integrity and sincerity, than I had for the late Senator Logan. For years he was interested in the subject of administrative law. He made a very able address on the subject before the Kentucky Bar Association, which I heard, and which I think was later put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Some hearings were held by the Judiciary Committee on the original Logan bill. There were no hearings held on the pending bill. There was a sort of hearing held in the House committee, most of it, though, or a good deal of it, made up of letters from heads of the departments, which were printed as a part of the hearing after the hearing was closed. But my contention is, as well as my belief, that, considering the far-reaching effects on the departments of our Government—and if I had the time or disposition on this motion I could, I think, cite numerous cases in which the action of the departments might be held up indefinitely under the terms of the bill—and considering that there were no hearings held, and that no opportunity was given to representatives of the departments to show what it would do to them, the bill should not be considered at this time. I think there were a number of hearings held on the previous bill, which was a different proposal, and proposed to set up a separate special court to deal with administrative matters.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Nebraska challenged the statement of the Senator from Kentucky as to the crudities of this measure. I wish to direct the Senator's attention to page 4, section 3, which confers jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia—

> To hear and determine whether any such rule issued or continued in force in accordance with section 2 of this act is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the statute under which issued.

Then after having conferred entire jurisdiction in two instances, it provides four grounds on which rules can be declared to be invalid. In other words, after defining the jurisdiction on two grounds, it provides that the rules can be declared invalid on four grounds.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that very procedure the court would not have before it a controversy between individuals, or between an individual and the Government. All the court may do is to consider the rule or regulation itself, and declare, without the existence of concrete facts, whether or not the rule or regulation is in violation of the Constitution or of the statute under which the agency is created.

Mr. MINTON. No one except the department is bound by the Court's decision.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. MINTON. The bill expressly reserves to the party other than the board or commission the right to challenge the validity of the rule or regulation in a case or controversy in the district court, and no one is bound by the ruling except the bureau which may be involved.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. President, that is about all I wish to say.

It has been repeated time and again in the Senate and in the newspapers that about a year and a half ago, when the bill slipped through the Senate under circumstances which we all understand, in order to have it reconsidered and put back on the calendar I obligated myself and bound myself to agree that the bill should be taken up and acted upon at this session. At that time I did say to my colleague and to others that I would make an effort to have the legislation considered early in the present session of Congress. Nobody could then foresee the present circumstances. I did not even then know that the President had requested the Attorney General to appoint a committee. I did not know that there was such a committee. I did not know that it was going into the whole subject in detail. I had no information and no intimation that when the early part of this session came, or when the latter part of the session came, we should be confronted with the situation which now exists with respect to this legislation.

I do not look upon the proposed legislation merely in the light of what happened a year and a half ago. I believe the Senate would act unwisely if it should consider the bill and act upon it at this time.

I believe we can act wisely in January or the early part of the coming session. In view of the circumstances which now exist in regard to this legislation, in view of the absence of half the Senate, and the inability of the Senate as a whole to give detailed study to the subject, we ought not to be bound—and nobody ought to ask us to be bound—irrevocably by some suggestion, made during the early part of the consideration of the legislation, that we should undertake to consider it at this session.

It is more important to pass a bill wisely than to pass it quickly. I believe that by delaying the matter until January we can pass a wise bill. I do not believe it is wise now to enter into the consideration of the bill under the circumstances which exist.

That is all I have to say. Of course, Senators will vote as their consciences dictate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President I do not rise to discuss the merits of the pending bill; but the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky necessarily prompt me to say a word or two in reply.

The argument which has been made here today has been made for a year and a half to the Senate and before committees of the Senate. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary began the study of the bill more than a year ago.

The legislative branch may be incompetent. It may not be able to legislate without advice and assistance from the executive branch of Government. Unfortunately, however, the Constitution places upon the legislative branch of Government the duty of legislating. Some of us think we were sent here for that purpose, and some of us have studied the bill. It may not be a wise bill. It may not be a good bill. Perhaps it ought to be defeated. However, there is one thing which I think the Senate ought to do, and that is to consider the bill and determine for itself whether it is a good bill or a bad bill. That is the only thing we have been asking.

For more than a year we have been met every calendar day with an objection to the consideration of the bill. When some of us sought to obtain recognition from the Chair to make a motion to take up the bill for consideration, unfortunately we were not able to obtain recognition by the Presiding Officer, and until this moment we have been denied the right to make the motion to consider the bill.

I have said on the floor of the Senate that I think this condition is of greater importance than the bill itself. Will the Senate consider a measure, or will it put it off from day to day, from month to month, and from year to year, and finally, at the conclusion of the session, say, "We have delayed so long now that there is no use in considering it any further. Let us start again next year?"

The Senate knows what that means. I know, as a member of the committee, that if action is not taken on this bill, and another bill is introduced next year, weeks and months will be spent in considering that bill. If it shall come to the Senate, perhaps again weeks and months will be spent in trying to obtain recognition, trying to be heard on the measure itself, and perhaps another session will pass and we shall be where we are today. The reason why I say that is that I am judging the future by the past. That is exactly what has happened.

We have tried to iron out some of the imperfections in the bill. We think we have done so. We think we have a good bill. We think Senators ought to consider it and ought to vote on the measure itself.

The Senator from Kentucky has pointed out some things which he thinks are defects in the bill. He speaks of a ruling by the court on a moot question. The only requirement in the provisions of the bill with respect to judicial review by the courts of rules and regulations is that a rule or regulation shall conform to the Constitution of the United States——

Mr. AUSTIN. Or the statute.

Mr. HATCH. I am coming to that. First, it must conform to the Constitution of the United States. Is it a violent thing to ask that a court be permitted to determine whether or not a rule or regulation of an administrative agency conforms to the Constitution?

The bill also provides that a rule or regulation of an administrative agency must conform to the statute creating the agency. Should the rule or regulation so conform? Is there any argument against such a provision? Does that question require detailed knowledge? Should not those simple provisions apply to every department of the Government, just as they apply to the legislative branch of the Government? The courts have power to ask us to pass laws in conformity with the Constitution; and they should have that power. Yet some persons think we are doing something strange.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator realizes that what the bill does is not merely to provide that the court may pass upon a rule or regulation of an agency to determine whether or not it complies with the Constitution or with the statute. Any man or woman in the United States who concludes that he or she has an interest in the action of a department may go into court and hold up the rule or regulation until the courts have finally passed upon it. It is not merely a question of passing academically on the constitutionality or legality of a rule. If it were necessary to do so, I think it should be pointed out to the Senator that under the provisions of the bill any injured party in any locality of the United States who might be affected by a housing project, for example, might go into court and attack it and hold it up indefinitely.

Mr. HATCH. I do not agree with the Senator's construction.

Mr. BARKLEY. In regard to the Senator's suggestion that we must wait until we receive the advice of some executive department, let me say that it is not my contention that we must do so. However, there is nothing wrong in doing so. We do so with regard to other legislation. The tax-raising committees of the Senate and of the House always ask the representatives of the Treasury, as well as of other departments, to come before them to submit information on taxes. The Appropriations Committee, of which the Senator is an able and outstanding member——

Mr. HATCH. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was under the impression that at one time the Senator was a member of the Appropriations Committee. If he is not a member, that is the loss of the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee, the Banking and Currency Committee, and other committees are continually asking for information from the executive departments.

It seems to me there can be no valid criticism of the suggestion that we wait until an executive department which has meticulously investigated this subject can submit to the Senate the result of its investigation. The Senate may throw the report out the window and entirely disregard it; but I think good legislation requires that we at least consider what the committee, which has been working for a year, has done. For the past month the committee has been sitting daily in Washington in order that its report may be filed at the very earliest possible date. We might gain something from the report. In my judgment we can lose nothing by taking advantage of the report.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, those of us who have been interested in the bill would have been glad to have the report of the committee. We have been ready to receive it and consider it at any time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there any assurance that when the report is made by the Attorney General the Attorney General will ever see fit to transmit it to Congress? Since I have been a Member of the Senate there have been a number of occasions when very important reports were made to Cabinet officers who never saw fit to transmit them to Congress. Unless Congress should pass a resolution calling on the Cabinet officer for information, it might never be sent to Congress.

Mr. HATCH. In reply to the Senator from Missouri, I will say that rumors have come to me within the past few days as to the work of the committee, to the effect that it is very doubtful whether the report will ever be made to the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection I may suggest that it is always easy to cast aspersions on somebody in an executive department by hinting that he is not going to do his duty.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me, I had no intention whatever of casting any aspersion upon any officer, but it has happened, as the Senator well knows, that a Cabinet officer when a report is made, for reasons of his own—because he does not approve or for other reasons—may not see fit to send it forward. When the Cabinet officer himself has created a committee and is under no obligation whatever to send it forward to Congress it is not a matter of duty for him to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the Senator from Missouri knows that the President asked the Attorney General to appoint this committee for the purpose of looking into the subject in order that Congress might consider it. It would certainly be a matter of extreme bad faith on the part of the Attorney General, and certainly even more so on the part of the President of the United States, if, after this report shall be made, it should be withheld from the Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was not that very same thing done in the Commerce Department 3 or 4 years ago when the Secretary of Commerce, at the direction of the President, set up a commission or a committee to make recommendations about the business situation in the United States, which recommendations were never sent forward? So far as I am concerned, the Secretary of Commerce may have been entirely correct in not sending them forward.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not familiar with that circumstance. I am quite certain that the President did not ask the Secretary of Commerce to appoint a committee or to look into a situation that required legislation, and then refuse to submit the report to the Congress for the purpose of legislation. I have no knowledge of any such incident having happened.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, I merely wish to observe that in what I said I cast no reflection or aspersion upon any member of a committee or any person in the executive branch of the Government; but things I have heard led me to believe that there is a very strong disagreement among the members of the committee, and we may not have any report at any time from them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I stated awhile ago publicly that there had been a disagreement, and certain of the recommendations which members of the committee had thought well of had to be reconsidered and revised in order that a report might be made from the full committee. There is nothing strange about that. I think that is an evidence of their desire to do the right thing, and to get at the facts and consider all the equations involved in this proposed legislation. The committees of the Senate and the House do that frequently. The Constitution itself was written under such circumstances that subcommittees worked for weeks on propositions and when they reported, in some instances, their recommendations were even changed by the full convention, and then sent back to the committees for revision. There is nothing, it seems to me, to the point that there is a difference of opinion among these men. They are all able, outstanding men; there is not one of them who does not enjoy almost a Nation-wide reputation for his ability as a lawyer and as a public servant when he has been a public servant.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question, but before doing that, may I make a comment upon the Attorney General's committee? I think it is a very able committee, and I have no doubt that some good will come from the careful examination the committee not itself is making but has had made by younger men whom they have sent into the various administrative agencies. I think there was a time for a period of many months when the committee, under the direction of Mr. Gelhorn, was not doing a very good job, because so able a man as Mr. Louis Caldwell, one of the outstanding lawyers of this city, who has himself expressed opposition to a number of the features of the Logan-Walter bill, has stated in a very carefully prepared document, after he had studied the report of the examiners sent by Mr. Gelhorn into the Federal Communications Commission, that, apparently, the examiners were sent with the preconceived idea of giving their stamp of approval to what was going on and with no other purpose than to try to create a situation that would result in the defeat of the Logan-Walter bill. I think since that time the committee has taken the matter more into its own hands, and I understand that the situation now is that, after they have gone into the matter themselves, either a very strong minority or possibly even a majority of the committee see a great deal of merit in the Logan-Walter bill.

But that was not the question I wanted to ask the Senator. A few moments ago the Senator from Kentucky referred to the possible evil effects from this legislation upon the Federal Housing Administration. Would the Senator from New Mexico be free to state, in his time, or may I state a conversation with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]—I do not know whether he is here this morning—the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, out of which the Federal Housing Act came? I may be wrong about that, but, in any event, he is very much interested in the Federal Housing Administration and in numerous other Government agencies, including the Securities and Exchange Commission and the National Labor Relations Board, and the senior Senator from New York told me—and I believe he told the Senator from New Mexico—on the floor of the Senate last week that after he had had a chance to study the bill in its present form as proposed by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, he felt that the objections which he had urged to the bill had been largely removed, and, if he were assured that the Senate conferees would hold fast to the changes made by the Senate committee in the bill, he would have no objection, as he saw it then, to the passage of the bill. That was the language of the senior Senator from New York to me on the floor of the Senate during the last week.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was that in debate or was it merely a private conversation? Not that it would make any difference as to the opinion of the Senator from New York, but I have conferred with the Senator from New York frequently about this proposed legislation, and I never understood that he entertained those views.

Mr. BURKE. That was the reason I was referring to the matter as a remarkable circumstance. No, it was not in debate; it was on the floor of the Senate while the matter was under discussion, and the Senator from New York talked to me as we talk to one another on the floor of the Senate. I think he also talked to the Senator from New Mexico.

The only point I was making was that when the Senator from New York had the opportunity to study the bill in its present form he saw that it was not the crudely drawn and the nefarious measure that some would have us believe it to be, but that it might work to the very great good of administrative agencies in which he himself was greatly interested.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of the opinion of the Senator from New York about it, what I had reference to in regard to the Housing Administration was that the bill provides that any person with a substantial interest may bring a proceeding in court to nullify what is done by one of these departments or agencies. I had particularly called to my attention the possibility—and I used the housing project simply as an example—that any real-estate owner in any community might conclude that he had a substantial interest in preventing the erection of a housing project because it might deprive him of tenants. That certainly would be a financial interest, and it has been my belief that, under the terms of this bill, any owner of property in the neighborhood of a housing project might have a substantial interest or be regarded as having a substantial interest and might go into court and sue to prevent the erection of a project or the negotiation of leases under it.

Mr. HATCH. The only trouble with the Senator's theory is that the bill conveys no such authority.

Mr. BARKLEY. It does convey the authority that anyone with a substantial interest may go into court and bring suit.

Mr. HATCH. It conveys no authority on the court to decide cases upon the proposition that the Senator from Kentucky has just announced. That is one trouble with the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. One trouble with the bill is that nobody understands it.

Mr. HATCH. I have the floor. One trouble with the bill is that Senators have not studied it, and there has been propaganda against the bill continuously for months and years.

The argument was made here on the floor last May when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] rose and referred to "this mysterious bill, this committee print No. 2, that nobody knows anything about, this secret bill about which Senators know nothing and cannot get any information." Yet on that day there was put into the RECORD the identical bill so that every Senator could understand it.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Not now. And with it were placed the amendments the committee had worked out and, coupled with that, was a long detailed explanation of the bill. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has discussed this bill on the floor many times. A few days ago he made a very able and scholarly address explaining the bill in detail, and yet we could hardly get a quorum of Senators present to hear him. The Senator from Nebraska has spoken at length on the bill. When are Senators going to get the information they say they desire?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The Senator referred to the objection I made to the bill. Was not the Senator from Indiana correct when he said that copy number 2 of the committee bill was not in the possession of the Senate at the time I made that statement?

Mr. HATCH. When the Senator from Indiana made that statement the copy was in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, yes; but the Senate had never received it.

Mr. HATCH. That was last May.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator put it in the RECORD, and at this very moment it is not on the desks of Senators.

Mr. HATCH. And we put a copy in the hands of every Senator; or, at least, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] told me that he had had copies mailed from the Judiciary Committee showing the amendments.

Mr. MINTON. Containing the amendments recently suggested by the committee?

Mr. HATCH. Containing the most recently suggested amendments; and that was last May.

Mr. MINTON. The copy I have in my file is the one that was sent to me, and it does not have the very vital amendments which the Senator from New Mexico told me privately, did he not, were put in to make the bill more palatable?

Mr. HATCH. I told the Senator from Indiana privately nothing that I will not state publicly.

Mr. MINTON. Then suppose the Senator tells us publicly.

Mr. HATCH. Why, certainly; I will take up the bill and discuss it when we come to it. Let Senators vote to take up the bill, and we will take it up and discuss all those things, and where it is bad, if it is bad, strike it out, improve, or correct it; but let us legislate.

Mr. MINTON. But the Senator is not now talking about legislation.

Mr. HATCH. I am asking the Senate to take up the bill.

Mr. MINTON. May I interrupt the Senator one more time on another angle of this discussion? A moment ago, with a good deal of force, the Senator asked the Senate what was wrong with a bill that provided for a determination by a court as to whether or not a rule violates the Constitution. He asked what was wrong with the court determining whether or not a rule violates a statute. I desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico, who is always fair, if at the present time that right does not exist in anybody who has a case or a controversy in which he believes there is a question of the constitutionality or legality of a rule. Does he not now have the right, under existing law, to go into court and challenge the constitutionality and the legality of the rule?

Mr. HATCH. Is the Senator through?

Mr. MINTON. Is not that correct?

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator from Indiana that in many respects, perhaps the most important respects, this bill about which so much talk has been made only writes into the statutes principles of law which have heretofore been laid down by the courts.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I have answered the question. I think in substance the Senator is correct in many respects, but not altogether.

Mr. MINTON. Am I not correct in all respects?

Mr. HATCH. No; the Senator is not.

Mr. MINTON. Am I not correct that whenever a rule violates the Constitution, or violates the statute pursuant to which it is supposed to have been issued, anybody who has a case or controversy in which that question is involved may have a determination of the matter in the courts?

Mr. HATCH. I think that is correct, if he can—if his property has not been confiscated and destroyed, as has been done. I do not like to talk about those things because they have no importance in the debate as to whether or not we shall take up and consider the bill; but you may take the case of the Federal Communications Commission, and you can see that the principle the Senator stands for will afford absolutely no relief—not a bit.

Whether or not the Senate will take up and consider the bill is a serious thing. It is especially serious to me. I have not made any charges of bad faith against anyone who is opposed to taking up the bill; but this very morning I spent some time in my office looking back over the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at statements which have been made on the floor of the Senate to the effect that "We will take up the bill at this session of the Congress"—statements which have been made to me and to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and to the late Senator Logan and others. I am not trying to bind anybody by those statements, and I do not charge bad faith; but I do think, in a spirit of fairness to us who have tried to cooperate—and I think we have tried to cooperate—that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Referring to the discussion which has been had on the floor with reference to a report of the studies of the Acheson committee, I ask the Senator if he is in agreement with me that not only is that committee not in any way an agent of the Senate of the United States, or under any obligation to report to it, but it has no right to report to the Senate as a committee; neither can its report come up to the Senate in any other way than by a request from the Senate, or a message from the Executive of the United States to the Senate?

Mr. HATCH. Of course, the Senator from Iowa is correct that the committee has no standing from the constitutional or legislative standpoint.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Neither has the American Bar Association, but it got in.

Mr. HATCH. The American Bar Association was heard. So far as I am concerned every person who wants to be heard at any time when a committee is considering the proposition will be heard. There has been no disposition to deny anybody except the Senate a right to be heard in regard to this bill. The Senate is the only one that has been denied any right to a hearing, and the Senate will be denied that right today if this motion does not prevail. I shall not renew it. Senators know the situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to have a yea-and-nay vote on this motion, and preliminary to that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. BARKLEY. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

So Mr. HATCH's motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate first proceed to consider committee amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have just suggested to the Senator from New Mexico that, in view of the fact that probably Senators are not prepared today to enter into a detailed discussion of the bill, we go over until tomorrow.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to that, but I desire to ask unanimous consent that amendments which we shall offer, which have been authorized by the committee and which do not appear in the official print, be first considered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is a little unusual to have Senate committee amendments considered in that way—amendments which have not been printed in the body of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. They have been printed in the second committee print.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope there will be a sufficient number of copies of the bill available before the final vote so that Senators will be able to see the bill as proposed to be amended, in order that they may understand what amendments have been suggested by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A large number were printed and distributed to Senators a month ago, and another print has been ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be instructed to see that a sufficient number of copies of the last print of the bill be printed so that a copy may be placed on each Senator's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in order that there may be an official print of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that I may report from the Committee on the Judiciary the amendments which the committee heretofore passed upon and authorized to be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask that the bill be printed showing the amendments reported by me from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROADS

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill

10098, to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think there was some objection in the committee by the chairman of the committee, as well as by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Have those objections been met?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; all those objections have been met. The amendment desired by the Senator from Kansas has been inserted in the bill as reported. The purpose of the bill is to define the word "deficit" in the Transportation Act.

Mr. AUSTIN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. AUSTIN. My only reason for objecting is that the Senate is now asked again to proceed in the absence of a Senator who is interested in the measure the subject of the motion. If upon a quorum call the Senator from Kansas appears and does not seem to have an objection to the Senate proceeding to consider the bill, I shall not object on his behalf.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. If the Senator will permit me to make a statement in reference to that matter, I think I can overcome the objection raised by the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is the bill to which the Senator refers House bill 10098?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It is.

Mr. KING. I shall object to its consideration until we have further information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

ELIMINATION OF PHOTOGRAPHS IN CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATIONS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, during the discussion and consideration of the Ramspeck bill in conference, the amendment with reference to the use of photographs by the Civil Service Commission was brought to the attention of the committee of conference, and the committee agreed to delete the amendment in view of an order which was issued by the Civil Service Commission eliminating the use of photographs and substituting the use of the fingerprint method in lieu thereof.

I should like to have published in the RECORD a copy of a letter which I have received, signed by the Civil Service Commissioners, ordering the change to which I have referred.

I should also like to have published a letter from Mr. Edgar G. Brown, president of the United Government Employees, commenting upon the bill.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., October 9, 1940.

Hon. JAMES M. MEAD,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MEAD: In response to your inquiry, you are advised that the Commission has been considering for some time the matter of eliminating photographs in civil-service examinations.

Photographs have been required by the Commission solely for the purpose of preventing impersonation and fraud in examinations, and the Commission is convinced that such impersonations and frauds can best be detected by the use of fingerprints.

For the reason stated the Commission will take steps immediately to abolish the use of photographs in connection with civil-service examinations.

Very sincerely yours,

H. B. MITCHELL,
LUCILLE FOSTER MCMILLIN,
ARTHUR S. FLEMMING, Commissioners.

OCTOBER 9, 1940.

MY DEAR SENATOR MEAD: We are quite mindful of our profound indebtedness to you for the leadership and success of H. R. 960, as amended and passed by the Senate and agreed to by the conferees. May we again formally and personally thank you on behalf of the organization and myself.

In view, however, of the possible failure of this measure as a result of the House's rejection of the conference report, may we request your further consideration.

First, our feeling is that on page 12, line 9, of the bill, paragraph E and amendment No. 23 should be slightly changed from the present language to read "In carying out the the provisions of this act, the civil-service laws, and the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923," and so forth.

In other words, in the language now suggested for inclusion in the bill for the word "title," "act" is substituted and the words "the civil-service laws" added. This additional insertion will, I believe, give us full and complete protection such as is not now included in the law, which at present only prohibits discrimination on account of politics and religion. This language in the bill will protect citizens against discrimination on account of race or color.

This is the all-important amendment, in my judgment, and I hope you and the other conferees may see eye to eye with us on this matter.

We do and now heartily endorse what you have done in bringing this matter to such nearness of consummation and will support you in your further recommendations. We take this position also because of our confidence in the Civil Service Commission in carrying out the intent of Congress and the Constitution that no person shall be discriminated against under the civil-service laws on account of race, color, or creed.

We hope you every success personally and officially in this matter, and for many years may your distinguished public service merit the rightful acclaim of your State and the Nation.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

EDGAR G. BROWN,
President, United Government Employees.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon in the caucus room in the New House Office Building, pursuant to the resolution heretofore adopted.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Have mercy upon us, O God, according to Thy loving kindness. According to the multitude of Thy tender mercies, blot out our transgressions. Wash us thoroughly from our iniquities and cleanse us from our sins. Create in us, O God, clean hearts and renew a right spirit within us. Our Father, who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, November 22, 1940, was read and approved.

LABOR DIFFICULTIES ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I would again like to draw the attention of this House to the strikes that are proceeding out on the Pacific coast and the sabotage program that the C. I. O. group are throwing into our airplane industry, shipping industries, and other industries out there.

I have repeatedly drawn the attention of this House to one Harry Bridges, who has not been deported, and I would like to know why. Our shipping is being tied up on the Pacific coast and at our airplane plants where we do not have strikes other things are hindering their program, and that program is eventually going to stop. How far is this going to proceed? We have practically no shipping. We cannot get parts into the plants. We cannot get timber for the plants, for the extensions that are being made, and it is due to the program of communism that has been carried on through the C. I. O. I do not see why we should expect anything else when Mme. Perkins has fostered this, and our Attorney General has refused to take action. In a statement appearing in yesterday's paper he said he knew of some of these things going on and he knew when the man skipped his ship. I am asking him why he did not deport him then and why they do not go into this whole program and begin the wholesale deportation of these some 800 undesirable aliens in this country who are carrying forward this program of sabotage. [Applause.]

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to call attention to the serious situation in which California, if not the entire country, finds itself. I do not know whether there is a fixed, preconceived program or not, but out on the west coast there is a strike in the Vultee aircraft factory which is stopping the production of the basic training planes essential for the training of our pilots. On the west coast, also, we have a shipping strike, which I hope will be settled within the next day or two. Meanwhile, however, 27,000,000 board feet of lumber are being tied up in Los Angeles Harbor, which means that the expansion of airplane-factory facilities cannot be carried forward. Construction at the North American plant is on the verge of being stopped any day. It has been slowed down. Third, you have this new strike at New Kensington, Pa., where a C. I. O. union, in order to collect $12 in delinquent dues, has already cost labor over $65,000 in wages in 2 days.

Mr. Speaker, there may or may not be some agreement in the matter of these three strikes, but it looks like an organized program—possibly a plot. I ask, What are we going to do? Out at Vultee the union refuses to sign an agreement because they will not agree not to strike—will not agree to arbitrate future disputes. Why? Because they want to be free to strike again for higher wages because they fear inflation. Mr. Speaker, it is a deadly spiral. They raise wages and as a result living costs go up. Then the unions want to strike again for another increase in wages. The thing goes around and around and there is no end to it. In all this I ask, Where is the American public? Are they not to be considered? Are their demands for national defense to be sidetracked because labor has totally disregarded its obligations? [Applause.]

The thing I am most fearful about in all this is the position of labor itself in this country. While we are demanding the preservation of democracy and all its rights and prerogatives, are we not witnessing the loss of all freedom on the part of the individual laborer? Recognizing the right of labor to organize, is not labor, in the process of organization, actually surrendering control over itself to a handful of bosses far removed from the local union and too often located even outside the State? The individual members of labor unions must themselves recognize the necessity to protect their own rights and not permit outside agitators and leaders to so dominate their course of action as to deprive them of the control of their unions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

TAXATION

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the two gentlemen from California who have addressed us this morning. It is my belief that if conditions throughout the country are such that we are going to have this wave of strikes and organized propaganda, then, certainly this House has legislative work cut out for it. Something should be done to stop the subversive forces that are at work in this country. We should do our duty. If we are good, sound, conscientious American citizens, and if this Congress wants to do its duty, it ought to take some action whereby these "reds" would be put in concentration camps and the American people permitted to proceed orderly with the prosecution of those things that are necessary and vital to the protection of this country, that are necessary to enable us to carry on in case of emergency and defend our liberty and our freedom. I hope this Congress will take such action, and do it now, before it is too late. That is your responsibility. This, however, was not the purpose I had in asking for this time this morning, but I want to express myself so that no one will mistake my attitude, to the end that "fifth columnists" and "reds" be locked up and kept locked up, or deported.

For the first time the House of Representatives meets in the room of its own Ways and Means Committee. I feel that there is no more appropriate time than the present for me to suggest to the Members that in this very Ways and Means Committee room where we are to formulate legislation to conduct the affairs of this Government, in this very room, beginning in January, will be framed the outline of legislation providing new taxes to enable this country to carry on its functions of government. In the last few years I have tried to cut down unnecessary functions of Government, cut out waste and extravagance, useless functions of government not really essential to the welfare of the country, and we have many of them. As we meet today in the Chamber that is dedicated by the Congress and the House of Representatives to the formulation of just taxation, it is entirely fitting that we give a little consideration to this same subject. We must have taxes to produce revenue, economize in spending or "bust."

It is going to be necessary to tax the American people sufficiently that they will realize that the money we have been spending and the obligations we have been incurring must be raised from and borne by the people of this country at this time. We cannot saddle this entire debt on future generations. It is not just, it is not honest, it is not sound. I hope that when the Congress convenes in January, if not before, the Ways and Means Committee will give every consideration to honest, just taxation that will let the people of America know that the spending that is going on must be paid for by the people of this country now, and that we cannot pass it on to future generations; because if we do, as I see it, there will be a wreck of the American Nation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to clear up in my own mind some thoughts that have been running through it. How far would the gentleman be willing to go in increasing the rate on the excess profits of our industries? In other words, would he be willing to go to 60 percent, 75 percent, or 80 percent on excess-profit taxation in order that we may raise more money?

Mr. RICH. If it is the gentleman's theory that the Ways and Means Committee should place all of that burden on the businessmen of the country you might as well go on and take all of their excess profits. I would, however, hesitate in such taxation as it will place stagnation on expansion and improvements and I do not believe that would be wise.

That is not the kind of legislation we want to bring in here. The Ways and Means Committee will find it necessary to tax the American people until they feel individually that they are paying for the cost of government, a direct tax. May I say first that the cost of government should and must be reduced. It is up to this Congress to cut down expenses.

Mr. Speaker, may I call attention to a financial statement that was put in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 6478, by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], chairman of the Appropriations Committee. Every Member of the House ought to study this schedule of appropriations made at the last session. It will astound you; it will, or should, cause you to shudder. We have appropriated, according to the statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]—and it is a true and correct statement—$19,069,548,775, which is three times as much money as we will receive in the next year in taxes unless the increased business from war preparations will result in greatly increased taxes. We must also take into consideration the authorizations that were made, and if you will refer to item 22 of that statement, it is stated—

> In addition, contracts are authorized to be entered into subject to future appropriations, aggregating $4,066,191,860—

Which makes a large grand total, because you know and I know that those authorizations are going to be contracted for. In 1942 you will have to raise the additional money in order to make ends meet, or you will have the greatest deficit this country has ever had. This administration promised a balanced Budget. Now, let us have it or, at least, try to get it.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. I agree with what the gentleman is saying about cutting expenditures, but I would like to know where he is going to start the attack.

Mr. RICH. Where we are going to start the attack?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes; what specific items?

Mr. RICH. If we have a Congress and an Appropriation Committee that appropriates everything that every bureau wants, we will never cut down any expenses; they will continually increase. We have got to cut out the nonessential items of government, and the Lord knows we have lots of them that we can cut out. Many bureaus and functions have been created the past 10 years that should be eliminated and cut out next year.

Mr. DISNEY. Have you not specific suggestions? I would like to hear them. I am interested in any specific suggestion.

Mr. RICH. If I were to undertake to give you specific instances I could talk about the Interior Department alone and it would take 10 minutes to enumerate them. If the gentleman will come to my office I will sit down and give him, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, some recommendations that he might make to the Appropriations Committee to eliminate those items.

Mr. DISNEY. May I offer a suggestion?

Mr. RICH. I will be glad to have it. I hope the gentleman offers it to the Congress. Do not offer it to me because I am here to cut them down, but I will be glad to have the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman suggests that I come by his office. Why does he not, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, make a list of the things that ought to be reduced and file them in the RECORD for the rest of us to see?

Mr. RICH. Was the gentleman at the last session of the House from January to the present time? If he was, he would have heard me time after time after time make recommendations with reference to cutting down appropriations in the one department I am principally versed in, and that is the Interior Department; yet what happened? When the time came for the House to appropriate you put them all in. You do not heed curbing expenses. There is no use of my taking time now to enumerate those things, because it will be for nought. I would use up my 10 minutes and I would not accomplish anything. Also, the things I would suggest now cutting out would only encourage the lobbyists for those things to get busy, and they have more influence with the Congress than I seem to have, I must admit.

Mr. DISNEY. I am not asking the gentleman to enumerate them. Put them in the RECORD as an extension so we will have the benefit of the gentleman's suggestion. I think it is a good one and if he will make definite suggestions as a member of that committee as to what cuts ought to be made, at least it would have a beneficial effect.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that, and I will from time to time give to the Members of Congress my ideas of the various things that ought to be cut down at the time they are being acted upon on the floor of the House. I realize the seriousness of the situation with which we are confronted. I say we must spend less, tax more, or "bust." Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. DISNEY. Somebody has got to sit down and make up such a list and do the cutting, and every member of the Appropriations Committee wants that done; but unless somebody makes suggestions, it is idle to talk about it.

Mr. RICH. No; the Appropriations Committee has not shown a disposition to cut down appropriations. No one has been more diligent in that respect than I. I am going to continue to do that, even though it is disagreeable for the Members of Congress to listen to me. I have asked the question many times in the Appropriations Committee room, "Where are you going to get the money?" I have asked it on the floor of the House. No one has the answer. Now we are in session in the Ways and Means Committee room. A grand opportunity to suggest where to get the money, by taxes, more taxes, and more taxes till the country rebels. If the Appropriations Committee is going to spend, it is up to the Ways and Means Committee to tax the people so that the people back home will realize the situation, get after the Members of Congress, and compel them to stop making these appropriations. [Applause.]

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. Am I correct in my understanding that the unanimous-consent request previously submitted by me that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next was agreed to?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I renew the other request at this time. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday it adjourn to meet on Monday following.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENDING CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE TO POSTMASTERS OF THE FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD CLASS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4373) to amend the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An act extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, this is the bill that would bring the postmasters into line with the other people in the various departments?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct. It is the bill introduced at the request of the Postmaster General to permit the Department to appoint acting postmasters, where the postmasters have been called into the military service, during the year they serve.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That seems only fair and only just.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I believe so.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the bill, it is that if a regularly appointed postmaster is called into the service the Postmaster General will be permitted to appoint anyone he sees fit who qualifies as acting postmaster to hold office during the time the regular postmaster is in the service.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Is there anything in the bill providing that this appointment shall be made from among those within the service or who are experienced, or can the Postmaster General pick out any politician in the community and make him postmaster during the time the regular postmaster is in the service?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Under the terms of the bill he could appoint anybody he wanted to. I believe that would have to be true because in some of the fourth-class offices, for instance, there is no one else who could be appointed except some outsider.

Mr. MICHENER. The lady from Massachusetts is the ranking member on the committee. If it is agreeable to the committee, of course, I do not believe there will be any objection on this side. But I do hope that when the Postmaster General reaches the point when he is going to give consideration to the appointment of an acting postmaster for 1 year he will select someone in the office who is qualified and who has civil-service status.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I agree with the gentleman about that, and I hope he will follow that policy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act approved June 25, 1938 (ch. 678, 52 Stat. 1077; U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. V, title 39, sec. 39a), is amended by the addition of the following: "Provided further, That at any post office the postmaster of which has been called for duty as a member of the National Guard or of the Reserve of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps or pursuant to draft or voluntary enlistment, the Postmaster General is authorized to grant leave of absence without pay to such postmaster and to appoint an acting postmaster at such post office to serve for the period only of the absence of the regular postmaster on military service, requiring such acting postmaster to furnish suitable bond with surety for the faithful performance of the duties as acting postmaster and releasing the regular postmaster and his sureties of responsibility for the conduct of the office during such period: Provided further, That where a postmaster resigns for the purpose of military service as herein described and subsequently wishes to resume his previous position as postmaster he may be permitted, upon being released from military service, to withdraw his resignation and resume the office of postmaster, or be reappointed thereto, in the event the office is being conducted at the time by an acting postmaster: Provided further, That appointments of acting postmasters to serve during absences of regular postmasters on leave granted pursuant to the terms of this act shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and such appointments may continue until the return to duty of the regular postmaster or until it has been determined that the regular postmaster will not return to duty."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] is recognized for 5 minutes.

STRIKES AND SABOTAGE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the most shameful thing that has happened in this country for a long time are the strikes throughout the country now in progress against the Government. The next most shameful thing that I have witnessed is the adjournment of this Congress from day to day without doing anything about it. [Applause.]

I say to you that if this country is to be saved and if its institutions are to be protected it must be saved and its institutions protected right here in this House. [Applause.] The responsibility is upon you. It is yours and you must meet it. And if there was ever a time when there was a necessity resting upon you to stand up and perform as real patriots now is the time.

Mr. Speaker, we have been saying for a long time that the one great pressing necessity resting upon this country is the development of national defense, the building of a fighting machine adequate to protect us against the combined world. Proceeding along this line, we have mortgaged coming generations to the extent of around $20,000,000,000, and we are conscripting into the Army millions of our young men. Today in the face of efforts being made to defeat the defense program that has been laid out we are saying that Congress has no legislative program, that there is nothing for Congress to do, and that Members might as well go home. This is being said while right under our very noses there is sabotage of the defense program and treasonable conduct on the part of labor racketeers in the shutting down of manufacturing plants which have virtually been conscripted by the Government and which are producing entirely for the Government.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. Just where is the sabotaging of these things by the labor racketeers or the sabotaging of the House's program on various subjects that we have been waiting on for several months?

Mr. COX. Maybe sabotage is not only being practiced on the part of labor racketeers, maybe there are others who are likewise guilty of committing that crime against this country, but it is the labor outlaws that we are after right now. If Congress has not the spirit or the courage to take account of what is happening in this country and to do something in an effort to remedy it, then what is to become of preparedness? How much defense do you expect to buy with the $20,000,000,000 when you must, in any degree, rely upon the loyalty and the cooperation of the people who are now on strike against the Government?

Mr. Speaker, who or what is it that is responsible for this tender solicitude being shown these outlaws, and how much longer must the coddling of these men be tolerated? How much longer must it go on before either the Congress or somebody else rises up and does something about it?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Are we going to be forced to look to the mothers, the sisters, and the sweethearts of the millions of young men we are sending to the Army to deal with this situation? I believe the responsibility is upon the Congress to act and to act now, to adopt legislation outlawing all strikes at all times against the Government, and outlawing all strikes during an emergency, forcing labor disputes to be submitted to arbitration.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. Suppose this House should pass that kind of legislation, what on earth would become of it, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. COX. Well, if there is not a better attitude displayed on the part of administrative agents, a better disposition to enforce the will of Congress expressed in law, than what we find at the present time, it would be a dead letter; it would be an ineffectual law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, instead of our coming here and going through the farcical procedure of listening to a few 1-minute speeches and then submitting to a request to adjourn, we should get down to business and do business. If we are not going to do this, then we might as well go home, for under such circumstances nothing is more foolish than having us come here at all. I submit, Mr. Speaker, we ought to abandon this foolish practice. We ought to come here as real, red-blooded Americans and meet our responsibilities. We ought to outlaw sabotage and the holding up of the defense program. We ought to make the labor unions understand that they, too, must live under the law the same as all others. We ought to force Federal incorporation of all general labor organizations. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

STRIKES ARE PREVENTING PROPER OPERATION OF OUR DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to echo and enlarge upon the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. We all know about these strikes that are preventing the proper operation of our defense program, and I want to talk about two of these situations for a very few minutes. Now, take the Vultee strike. That concern has the sole contract for the production of training planes to train the boys that this Congress has conscripted into the service of their country. Now, that in itself is pretty serious. Let us see what caused that strike. We now have the official statement from the Attorney General that behind that strike is the "red" hand of communism. I echo the words of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], What is this Congress, that is charged with responsibility, going to do about it? How do a few "red" Communists manage to stop the entire production of training airplanes for this country in its emergency?

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOSSETT. The Congress is now coming in for some lambasting, it seems, and I want to ask the gentleman whether he does not feel that the executive and administrative agencies of this Government have not the power and the responsibility to deal immediately with this situation.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. In all fairness, I am not sure that they have. I am not sure there is sufficient legislation on the books to do the business.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman briefly.

Mr. COX. But does not the gentleman recognize the responsibility upon the heads of government at least to express disapproval of what is going on?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I would wish they would do so, but coming back to the responsibility of this Congress, which was what I was getting around to, how do a handful of "red" Communists manage to disrupt and interfere with the entire program of this Nation for planes to train the boys you have conscripted into service? How do they do it? They do it because they are members of a labor organization, and under the cloak and under the protection of that radical labor organization they are able to interfere with and stop the program of defense of this country.

Then you will ask how does any minority labor union exert such a power? How can the C. I. O. or any other labor union say to 140,000,000 people, "You shall not build airplanes to train the boys you have conscripted into service"? Because there is a law known as the National Labor Relations Act, which stands behind and protects the activities of labor unions, which time and time again, by its ukase, has said to the employers of this country, "You shall not discharge a Communist from your organization." Time and again that has happened, and I can cite you the cases where they have said that. I can cite you a case decided in the last 90 days where the Labor Board has said to an executive of the New York Times, "You cannot fire your confidential secretary because she is a Communist."

So they operate under the protection of labor unions, and the labor unions, in turn, operate under the protection of the National Labor Relations Act.

Under whose protection does the National Labor Relations Board come? It comes through this Congress. It comes through us who have put it into effect and have not seen to its proper administration and amendment.

So, Mr. Speaker, that brings us right straight back to the proposition of where this trouble lies. We cannot lay it on the administration. We cannot lay it on the labor unions. We cannot lay it on the Communists. It comes straight back to our door, and I repeat the question, What are we going to do about it?

Now, let us consider the aluminum strike for a moment. One of those strikes, I am informed, has been going on for a month, delaying the production of aluminum. Another strike as the gentleman from California has just told you, occurred in the last few days because one man would not pay tribute to a labor union.

Now, he has paid that tribute but still the strike goes on because he has not been discharged. You will recall that in the last 60 days this Congress was called upon for an authorization of $25,000,000 to increase the facilities of the T. V. A. at the request of the Defense Commission. Why? Because we were informed that in our defense program if a bottleneck ever came in that work it was going to come in the production of aluminum, because we were informed that it requires 5,000 pounds of finished aluminum for every airplane, much to my astonishment. We were informed that we must have additional power at the T. V. A. in order to produce that aluminum.

Now, does it strike you as significant that this little handful of radical "reds" in these various key matters have been able to absolutely stop the production of necessary and essential materials in two of the most important things that this country has to deal with?

Mr. Speaker, I have concluded. I just urge the Congress again to wake up and get out of the class of Rip Van Winkle and let us do something about it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks, I include the following statement from the Vultee Co. as to the situation in regard to their plant:

Failure to reach a settlement of the strike at the Vultee aircraft plant, Downey, Calif., is due solely to the refusal of C. I. O. negotiators to protect national-defense production by agreeing to an arbitration clause in the proposed contract.

No question of wages, hours, or working conditions remain between the company and the union. Full agreement has been reached on those points.

The company, however, insists that for the term of the proposed contract—2 years—any differences arising between the company and the union should be adjusted by arbitration in case agreement by negotiation fails.

Union officials, however, have refused to accept the arbitration clause. They insist on full freedom to strike in case of failure to reach a settlement by negotiation within 5 days.

The 2-year period of the proposed contract covers the term of operations that will be necessary for Vultee to turn out basic training planes contracted for by the Army Air Corps and the fighter planes under contract by the British Purchasing Commission.

The company submits that during this period of intensive production for national defense, public interest—even more than any interest of the company—demands that its aircraft production be protected against arbitrary strikes. Such protection would be afforded by the proposed arbitration agreement.

The right to strike for better wages and working conditions is, of course, a prerogative of labor. But for union leadership to insist on reserving a right to strike during the period of a contract can mean only one thing in the opinion of the company. It means that the union desires to reserve an opportunity further to impede the progress of our national-defense program.

The question of granting that right is one which no company engaged in defense production should be permitted to decide. That decision should rest with the Government and the people.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special orders entered for today I may be permitted to speak for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LABOR DIFFICULTIES

The SPEAKER. Under previous order heretofore entered the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, we can all agree with what the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] had to say this morning, when he called attention to and condemned the situation existing at the Vultee Aircraft Co., at Downey, Calif. We can approve of what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] said, when he referred to other strikes which are delaying the national-defense program, and laid the responsibility for the situation directly upon the shoulders of Congress.

We can all applaud wholeheartedly the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], who reiterated the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] that the responsibility for a continuation of the present situation was our responsibility.

But neither words nor lofty sentiments, however eloquently and cogently expressed, so far have solved this problem. Although the gentlemen who preceded me, to paraphrase, spoke with the tongues of men or of angels, but proposed no legislation, their words become "as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

Some of us saw the present danger coming. The plan which now appears in the open was conceived prior to the election of 1936. It first openly manifested itself on the last day of December of that year, when armed men invaded the State of Michigan, instigated and, until June of 1937, carried on, the sit-down strike. It was 2 long years before the Supreme Court announced what every intelligent person knew—that the sit-down strike was illegal.

Those sit-down strikes were conceived in hatred by the Communists who then sought, and who now seek, the overthrow of our representative, republican form of government. Instead of being treated as violators of the law, which they were, the Communists behind that strike were not only tolerated but were given encouragement. The situation has gone from bad to worse until today it is now openly acknowledged that our national-defense program is being delayed by their activities.

For more than 3 long years, I have hammered at the doors of Congress, criticizing, sometimes bitterly, always sincerely, the methods, the procedure, and the objective of this subversive group and those who were aiding it. Over the same period, from time to time, constructive measures have been proposed and, on each occasion, the suggestion for relief was, without comment, quietly pigeonholed.

But "let the dead past bury its dead." Let us think of the future. It is well that on the floor today so many Members of the majority party to whom the House listens with attention and respect have spoken freely and without reserve of the situation which now confronts us.

TIME TO ACT

The responsibility for the failure to curb the activities of the Communists, of the subversive influences which are delaying our national-defense program, rests, as was stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], upon the shoulders of the Members of this House.

But the responsibility of the House is more properly the responsibility of the majority party. The minority can aid by its votes, but just as long as corrective legislation proposed by the minority is, as has happened to legislation proposed by me, consigned to a pigeonhole, the failure to act is directly chargeable to the majority party and its leadership.

Attorney General Robert H. Jackson on Saturday last charged that the strike at the plant of the Vultee Aircraft Co., at Downey, Calif., where more than $84,000,000 worth of Government defense work is to be turned out, was "caused" and "has been prolonged" by Communists. This strike is now being continued because the company demands and the union refuses to enter into an agreement to submit all differences of opinion which may arise within the next 2 years to arbitration before a strike is called.

If that be the cause of the continuation of this strike, then what we need is a law compelling the arbitration of labor disputes in all industries engaged on the national-defense program. As long as we are in session it should not be difficult for the House to put through such a law and send it to the Senate, sending with it the responsibility for action on the part of the Senate. Unless some Member of the majority party offers such legislation it will be dropped in the hopper by me when next we meet on Thursday.

One of the Members who just preceded me referred to the strike at New Kensington, Pa., where 7,500 employees of the Aluminum Co. of America are on strike. Suspension of operations in the plant of this company tied up work on supplies for planes and other military equipment, including a $1,200,000 order for a new type United States Army field kitchen. The present cause of the suspension of work is the fact that the company refuses to discharge or transfer an employee who failed to pay his union dues amounting to $12.

HAS MAN THE RIGHT TO WORK?

What right has any organization or any man in this so-called free America to demand that before another man can work, he must join a particular organization and pay tribute to it? That is the same question asked by me in February, March, April, May, and June of 1937 on the floor of this House in connection with the General Motors sit-down strike. It went unanswered then. It is still unanswered. It is unanswered because no man, no organization, has such right; because no one can maintain that such a right exists under our form of government. It has gone unanswered because such a practice is but a form of racketeering and the courage to condemn it by legislative action has been lacking.

UNIONS ACCUSE EACH OTHER OF RACKETEERING

Because of the activities of the A. F. of L. at Camp Grant, Ill., where a $4,250,000 construction project is now under way, officials of the C. I. O. United Construction Workers Union contend that the A. F. of L. unions will collect a kitty—"draw down a $350,000 jackpot"—if they succeed in limiting employment to A. F. of L. men.

At this camp the contractor's rules require membership in A. F. of L. unions for all employees, and the men will be required to pay union initiation fees ranging from $50 to $100.

Apparently, the C. I. O. complaint is not based upon the denial of the constitutional and basic right of an American citizen to work in defense of his country but rather upon the fact that the money collected goes to the A. F. of L. instead of to the C. I. O. One day, one place, the C. I. O. levies tribute upon the hapless worker. Another day, at another place, the A. F. of L. is the collecting agency, as at Fort Custer, in Michigan, in the Third Congressional District, where the A. F. of L. insists that, before the common laborer may work to aid in the defense of his country, he must pay $25; before the carpenter may work to build a cantonment for the drafted soldier, he must pay $45, and at no time is there any assurance that the man paying that sum will continue to hold his job for any definite period.

ATTACK ON FORD EMPLOYEES

As we know, the Ford Motor Co. has been awarded contracts on Government defense work amounting to millions of dollars. Yet we learn from the public press that the new president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations has announced that Ford workers are to be "organized." That is to say, although the National Labor Relations Act expressly provides that employees shall be free to bargain through representatives of their own choice, the C. I. O. intends that, by one means or another—and undoubtedly by the exertion of force or the show of force—Ford workers, American citizens, law-abiding and peaceful, are to be forced to join the United Automobile Workers of America.

Words avail us nothing. The words of the gentlemen who have spoken today condemning these outrageous practices are futile unless a remedy is proposed and adopted.

You ask, What is the remedy? The remedy is easy, and we have it in our hands if we want to use it. In the first place, while I voted against conscription, as long as we have conscription I will support an amendment to the conscription law which will conscript these men in the factories, the men everywhere, and require them to render service to their country the same as the soldier in the field. [Applause.] And why not? If we are to have war, then let all share the burden. Do not shove the whole job off on the boys and young men.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to be confronted with this question of price increase. Last week I offered a bill which would freeze prices not only of labor but of services right where they are. If a bill of that kind were adopted, there would be no profiteering for the duration of this emergency, either by those in Wall Street or those in factories. We would all contribute at least something to the defense of our country. Each would make his usual profit, no more, no less. Each would pay something toward the cost of the program for the defense of our country.

Today I dropped into the hopper another bill reciting some of the things which have happened in recent weeks, in the last few days. In this bill it is provided that it shall be unlawful for any person, organization, union, or group to demand that before a man can go to work on a defense program he must either join or refuse to join any organization or pay a fee. That bill would enable American citizens to once more exercise their constitutional, their moral, right to work for a livelihood.

LET US HAVE DEMOCRACY HERE AT HOME

I ask you why today in America a citizen, a man who is law abiding, who is patriotic, should be compelled to pay tribute for the privilege of working for the defense of his home, his fireside, his country?

It is so simple; so simple, that the statement of the proposition brings its own answer.

In this bill it is also provided that it shall be unlawful for anyone engaged on the national-defense program to demand as a condition precedent to employment that the man to be employed join or refuse to join any organization, or that he pay or refuse to pay dues or initiation fees.

If you gentlemen who have spoken from the majority side mean what you said, if you are sincere—and all concede your sincerity—you have the votes, you have the ability to pick up that imperfect bill I placed in the hopper, you have the right to throw it into the wastebasket and bring in legislation of your own to meet and cure this evil of which you speak so truthfully and so feelingly.

Upon your shoulders rests the sole responsibility if you will not accept the legislation which we on the minority side propose to initiate.

As one of the minority, you are by me challenged here and now to propose such legislation, to bring it in while we are in session. And be assured, although I speak only for myself, that because the minority is patriotic you will find it supporting you. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to revise and extend the remarks I made previously this afternoon, and that I may include therein a statement from the Vultee Co. as to the situation in regard to their plant.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE VULTEE STRIKE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am going to attempt in a few minutes to get the House to consider calmly and earnestly some of the same things that have already been spoken of today.

I understand that what our efforts in the United States at the present time consist of is primarily an attempt to defend democracy. I understand that this means an attempt to make our democratic way of life and our democratic form of Government sufficiently successful so that it can stand against the threat of totalitarian philosophy, of totalitarian dictatorship, of totalitarian military challenge.

I think the House at the present time is in a completely totalitarian frame of mind. To speak frankly, the time may come—if it does come, all right, but I hope it will not—when in order for the defense of the Nation to be successfully carried through it will be necessary for us to pass measures essentially dictatorial and to put into the hands of our Government certain powers that heretofore we have not put in the hands of our Government. But if we are going to do this, Mr. Speaker, it is neither fair nor just to propose that we conscript labor on the one hand without mentioning in so much as a single breath the equal justice and the equal necessity, if we are going to propose such things at all, of conscripting on the same basis the services of the executives in industry and also the industrial plants and every dime of profit that might otherwise be made. [Applause.] In other words, it is necessary if we are going to talk this way, Mr. Speaker, that we talk in a wholehearted fashion, that we talk honestly, and that we take all factors into account.

It is my humble judgment—certainly it is my earnest hope—that these measures are not going to be necessary. I believe that America, by an appeal to her democratic basic methods, is going to be able to win through this battle. I do not think we are hopeless. I think we can carry the day. I want to say some things that are going to mean more from me perhaps than they might mean coming from some equally if not more worthy gentleman whose point of view, however, on some of these matters is known to be quite different from mine.

THE FRONT LINE OF NATIONAL-DEFENSE PRODUCTION

There is a certain group of people who are standing in the front line of a battle for national defense. Those people are the men in the ranks of labor who are fighting in those ranks against the influence of communism, nazi-ism, and things of that nature. Those fellows have got a tough job. It is the rank and file of labor upon whom will fall the weight of the blow if, because an indefensible thing is done at the behest of a handful of irresponsible people, the House loses its balance, goes haywire on these matters, and commences to pass legislation to restrict fundamental rights.

Mr. Speaker, it is up to us to not only deal with vigor with the problems we are confronted with, but also to deal on the basis of a careful view of all the factors in the situation. I think the Attorney General's statement about the situation in southern California is a fairly accurate statement. I do not think that just offhand, I think it because of certain things I know. The Vultee strike should have been settled long ago. I do not think that there is any justification under present circumstances for that thing to be prolonged if it is true that the only point of difference is an unwillingness to agree to a 2-year contract under terms whereby there shall not be any strike within 2 years unless the matter has been arbitrated. I do not think that is a justifiable reason for not ending the strike and I think it should be ended. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not want to yield until I am through, because I have undertaken a tough job here.

On the other hand, I regret sincerely that not a single speaker so far as I know has made the very important point that it would have been utterly impossible for any bunch of leaders to get any considerable group of American workers, such as those who work in that plant, to go out on a strike unless there had been some substantial reason for complaint. To my mind, that substantial and decent reason was the 50-cents-an-hour wage, which is probably not adequate for workers in the aircraft industry at the present time. I do not think it is, and I think there ought to be a better wage. My understanding is that the company has already agreed to a better wage. On that basis, as I said before, I think the strike should have been settled, and would have been by the right leadership.

Nobody in all the House of Representatives knows better than I do what the ravages can be in a progressive movement or a labor movement in this country when the people who are committed to a totalitarian philosophy of communism or nazi-ism work their work into such movements, because they are not committed to the best interests of American labor let alone the best interests of the United States of America. The fellows who in a democratic nation and a democratic way can keep them out and reduce their influence are the men in the ranks of labor itself. The most important job you can do is to uphold the hands of those men who are fighting that battle. On the whole, they have made a lot of progress. Certainly in the American Federation of Labor that is the case. Moreover, I have sat in the House of Representatives and heard a man unjustly castigated for political purposes by the half hour who only a few days ago went to the C. I. O. convention and there made the central appeal that they should put national defense before other things. I refer to Sidney Hillman. Whether or not you agree with everything Mr. Hillman has done in all his life, no one can doubt the tremendous importance of the stand he takes today on these things, and I think his influence is more constructive than can possibly be the influence of anyone who brings to this problem a general antilabor point of view. If our democracy is to be successful we have got to rely ultimately on the constructive forces within the ranks of labor.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND CONTRASTED

I would like to contrast for you, if I may for a moment, the difference between what happened in France and what happened in Great Britain in recent months. In France it is true there was a popular-front government that carried through many social reforms for a period of time. I might discuss, if I had time, some misconceptions that are abroad about some of that legislation. For example, they passed an act that was very foolish, it seems to me. It was a wage-hour law that said that no one could work more than 40 hours a week. I point out to you we have no such law in the United States. Our law makes no hard and fast limitation of the number of hours a man can work. It says if a man works more than a certain number of hours he shall get time and a half. Then all of a sudden France changed and adopted a dictatorship. Those things were swept away of a sudden by means of dictatorial decree. That is the record. And the tragic result is also a matter of record.

In Great Britain what happened? They had problems there, just as we have and just as every democratic country has on the surface where people can see them, not underneath where you cannot see them. Great Britain had problems, too. What did the Government do? It went to the constructive leaders of labor, the leaders of the people, and said, "You fellows come in here. We have got to have your help to solve this defense problem," and they did come in and they are there today. Look what Great Britain is doing. It is the difference between whether you are going to use the hard-boiled method and say, in effect, "We cannot rely upon the fundamental patriotism of great groups of American citizens," or whether we will say, on the other hand, "You fellows are responsible with us. We ask your help. We cannot afford these stoppages in the defense industries. How can we together work out a plan to avoid them?"

I submit that up until the last few weeks the record of American labor in not striking has been a most excellent record. Generally speaking—taking the whole Nation into account—the record is still excellent. I am not standing up here to defend strikes in defense industry. I do not think they should be allowed to happen. I think they ought to be avoided and I think they can be avoided if everybody works togegther to that end. But I am not for giving up the democratic method of accomplishing that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Briefly, but I want to ask that I do not be requested to yield again.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman contend it is the right of labor to strike against the Government in time of war or in time of emergency hinging upon war?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No. I do not contend it is ever the right of labor to strike against the Government.

Mr. COX. This is a strike in a plant producing entirely for the Government.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. This is a privately owned plant. I said previously I think the strike should have been settled before this. If the gentleman is for the Government running our plants and if the gentleman wants to go to the point where the Government is going to run the plants and require by law that there be no such thing, that may be one way. I think it is a basis upon which we can talk. But if the gentleman is supposing that you are going to leave the plant in private hands with private profit to be made out of the production and at the same time regiment only the labor in the plants, then I do not believe that is a balanced view that can be defended.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman see that, in fact, the plant is operating as the agent of the Government, producing entirely for the Government, producing for the national defense?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I may say to the gentleman that I believe the remarks I have made about that, to the effect that I agree with the Attorney General that there has been Communist leadership in connection with that strike—coming from me I believe that is a pretty significant statement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. This has nothing to do with what I have said so far, but I should like to get two other points in, if I may.

In the first place, I regret that there should be any conflict between agencies of the Government, whether they be legislative or executive, whose task it is to help to do the job of exposing and combating the subversive or un-American influences in the country. I believe there ought to be cooperation between all such groups, and that it is more important that the work be done decently, fairly, but effectively than that this or that agency or committee gets credit for the work. I wish I had time to go into this further.

In the next place, something has been said about what Congress is going to do about these problems. There is already a law on the statute books which resulted from a bill I introduced. It is Public Law 870. It requires the registration of any political organization under foreign control or a political organization that uses military tactics, with the Department of Justice of the United States. You say, What is that going to mean? I tell you that it means that whether or not organizations register, from now on the Department of Justice of the United States has the opportunity, the right, and the responsibility to find out about organizations as to whether they are under foreign control or engaged in military activities or in preparation therefor. Heretofore there has been no legislation under which such action could be taken.

I should just like to point out to you that progress has been made in some of these matters and that it can be made without violating our fundamental constitutional methods. My appeal to you is that you remember that the essential thing is that the American Nation should be a united nation, that you need every element in this country, and that we must remember that at least 98 percent of all the American people of every group are as loyal to this Nation as you and I, and that those small numbers who are not, ought to be and can be exposed and removed from places where they do not belong. The thing that has to happen is that you must have the united effort of every group and class in this country if you are to accomplish America's purpose. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

LABOR DIFFICULTIES

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we assemble in this Chamber today in a very critical time in the history of our Government and in the history of the world. We assemble under conditions which challenge us to keep our feet on the ground and our heads on our shoulders and do our job, whatever it may be, whatever it may cost. This is no time for any group to seek particular advantage for itself. We are all in the same boat. There is but one business in this country now that is worthy of consideration, relatively speaking, and that is the preservation of this country, which may become the last bulwark of free government on the earth.

I agree with the sentiment expressed by the last speaker that we must have a united people in order to win through. The difficulties which confront this people challenge us to do the best which a united people can do, and there is nothing less in this challenge than that. We have got to measure up to that challenge or lose.

We in America have become accustomed to the notion that there is some sort of a divine providence that is going to protect us against what the other peoples of the earth are having to face. The quicker we get that notion out of our heads the better. We are today dealing with a definite, concrete situation, in a way more important to labor than to any other group of our people. These people who are responsible for these strikes in these industries that are preparing, that are fabricating, in order that these young men who are subject to conscription, the youth of this country, may have the things necessary to defend themselves and to defend this Nation, these people connected with labor who are doing that dastardly thing, are doing more to hurt organized labor in this country than all the agitation that possibly could come from the employer group. We owe it to the decent, self-respecting, patriotic, working people of this country to eradicate these people who would paralyze the agencies of industry, the operation of which is necessary in this situation. The Members of the Committee on the Judiciary are taking the initial steps to see what can be done by them in the premises.

There is naturally going to be a disposition on the part of various groups to take advantage of this condition in order to procure some things for themselves which they have a long time wanted to procure. The thing that immediately concerns the country and concerns the Congress is to keep the necessary machinery in operation to prepare the things required for the national defense. How any human being in this country, how any Member of Congress in this country who has voted to subject to conscription the youth of America, can tolerate for one minute some dastardly scoundrel who will neither work to help prepare that which they require for their safety and the security of the country, nor permit other people to do it, I cannot understand. [Applause.] Living here beneath the Stars and Stripes of this country, breathing the air of free men, he will neither work nor permit anybody else to do the things necessary to build the planes and to put guns in the hands of these brave boys who are willing to lay down their lives to make democracy secure in this country.

We have coddled that bunch of cutthroats long enough. [Applause.] They respect just one thing, and I am in favor of giving them a double dose of their own medicine. They preach force. The time has come when America has got to subject them to the only sort of argument that they pay any attention to, and that is all there is to it. You can bet your life that that bunch of folks who want to destroy this Government by force are the first ones to cry out for governmental protection when somebody puts their tail in the crack. [Laughter.]

Now, we want to be fair about this thing. We want to be just about it. Organized labor in this country must be rid of that influence or lose the support and respect of public opinion. I know the working people of my section of the country. I will match them in loyalty and patriotism against any other group anywhere. I believe there is the finest and most heroic sentiment in America today that has obtained here in 100 years. I sometimes wonder if we Members of Congress fully appreciate that magnificent thing that is taking place in this country, a soft, pleasure-loving, ease-loving, indifferent people who have accepted our liberties and our privileges without responsibility and without gratitude are being regenerated in America, being reborn in America. They have a right to be, and they are going to be rid of these rats. That is what is going to happen. They come over here, a lot of them do, driven from the countries of their nativity, and they do not more than get to this country until they begin to try to tell Americans how to run this Government. We have had enough of it. I am in favor of being just with them, and with everybody else, but pretty positive with these people who are interfering with our preparedness program. They believe in force. They need not be surprised if the American people should, under the pressure of public necessity, exercise a bit of this force business they have been preaching, and make them like it. [Applause.]

I do not believe it can be accepted that it falls within the legitimate rights of either labor or capital to paralyze these manufacturing plants of this country which must be kept in operation at full capacity if we are to equip before it is too late the youth of America whom we are calling to the defense of this country.

It seems to me that everybody should understand that the patriotism and the common sense of this people must agree there must be a better, a less dangerous method than these paralyzing strikes to settle the controversies arising in the operation of these plants whose production is essential to the national security.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

DISLOYALTY, SEDITION, AND ESPIONAGE ACTS

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time because of what I have heard in the speeches that have preceded my remarks this afternoon, and for the reason I believe that I am the only Member of this body who had the experience of going through the World War period investigating disloyalty, seditious, and espionage cases of that particular period, and seeing them prosecuted in the United States courts. I know that the Government of the United States is today without the strong arm of enforcement that it had in those days.

In 1939, when we met for the beginning of the sessions of the Seventy-sixth Congress, I was approached out here on the street by one of my colleagues who said, "I believe we should immediately proceed to reenact the disloyalty, sedition, and espionage acts of the World War period." Shortly thereafter I received a letter from a constituent, inveighing against international affairs as destined to affect domestic policy. In response my comment on the opinion that was vouchsafed to me by this colleague of mine out here at the front of this very building was mentioned. That constituent, in his zeal, published my letter in a newspaper and the greatest storm of protest that could descend on any man descended upon my head from Socialists and Communists in my district; and the letters and newspaper clippings are a matter of record in the files of my office. This preceded the plot for my projected kidnaping. I was pilloried for my remarks, and I want to say to you now that the Department of Justice, more especially the F. B. I., is today without authority to proceed as it would like to proceed. I know this because I have discussed the matter with a representative of the Department. I have brought matters to its attention and been officially informed that the Department is without legal authority to prosecute.

We are absolutely impotent in dealing with those who are creating the mischief we have heard discussed here this afternoon. Their purpose is obvious. Their plans and objectives are being effected as they calculate they should be and, as an example, a felon who is out of jail on bail pending appeal ran for President of the United States in the election only this month on the Communist ticket. I refer to Earl Browder, whom we could not, under existing law, convict of the treasonable mischief he had been undertaking to create and stimulate; but we had to convict him of a lesser offense, namely, passport fraud. For his conceited assertion on his own devious acts and objectives that "the Government of the United States is ripe for transition," he escapes all consequences for that rash assertion; but there are those of us who believe he would accomplish it.

Kate Richards O'Hare, who, for her activities in the World War period and, among other things, asserted in opposition to the Conscription Act of that day that "American mothers are only brood sows," was convicted and sentenced to a term in Missouri State prison, appeared 3 years ago before the House Committee on Civil Service, inveighing against the Government's administration of the public business and the personnel of its administrators. Her case is an example of the soft policy of the American way of repealing disloyalty, sedition, and espionage acts, and granting amnesty by special acts of Congress to political prisoners.

Al Capone was never prosecuted and convicted of the crimes of which he was guilty in the prosecution of his rackets and open contempt for the laws of this Nation but, to rid society of his obnoxious conduct, he had to be prosecuted and imprisoned for false income-tax returns to the Government of the United States.

There is something defective with our laws and our enforcement agencies of government when we must resort to that indirect approach.

Again, we have the example of Fritz Kuhn in jail, not because of the nefarious Nazi tirade he carried on from coast to coast against the Government of the United States and the other mischief he was creating, but because he embezzled money from the organization he himself set up. I blush with shame for the laws of my country when we cannot properly deal with people of that dubious character.

The gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities. I have willingly given my complete support to that committee; but I have been disappointed that it has not come forward and given us legislation of the remedial type I feel it should have recommended to and caused to be adopted by the House.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me at that point?

Mr. MOSER. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman agree that the Dies committee has probably enjoyed chasing Communists and Nazis and Fascists sufficiently, and that the time has arrived when they should come here and propose in the way of legislation a remedy for the evil which they have been disclosing?

Mr. MOSER. I agree with the gentleman wholeheartedly.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOSER. I gladly yield.

Mr. RICH. Do you not believe that, if the F. B. I. has suggested that legislation should be enacted, the proper committee should now bring in legislation in order that we might get at those who are interested in subversive activities and put them where they ought to be?

Mr. MOSER. I certainly do, and to that end I have introduced a bill, H. R. 10483, as the result of my conferences with the representative of the F. B. I. I have in my office pictures that I have carefully preserved of Kunze, the successor of Fritz Kuhn, and Earl Browder appearing before the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], condemning consideration of the bill by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] as enacted by the Congress and approved by the Executive, they relating complainingly what it would do to their organizations. I care not what it would do to their organization. Let us punish those parasites for what they are doing, what they are advocating, and their practices adopted to accomplish that end by subversion seductively circulated by mail, and by sabotage. Those are the laws that we should enact. Whatever emergency exists in this country today incident to national defense the Congress met nobly and placed an adequate program in the hands of the administrative officials to provide against aggression from without, but that emergency which exists and is the obligation of every patriotic citizen is to see that before we go away from here, before we await out successors' action in January, we pass some legislation to provide against subversion from within and send it to the other body and let the responsibility be theirs. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the laboring man, whether organized or unorganized; but it is difficult for me to get excited over any crowd who is now striking to raise their wages above 50 cents an hour minimum, when the average farmer who toils in the sun in my district gets less than 10 cents an hour for his work, and when we are drafting the youth of this land to go into training camps to prepare to defend their country at $21 a month. I think these men who are striking at this time are making a serious mistake.

Another thing, this sabotage goes deeper than any labor battle. Do not forget that Russian communism has for more than 20 years been dedicated to the proposition of destroying this Government, of fomenting and bringing about a revolution in the United States. They have never receded from that policy. These labor unions should drive these Communists from their organizations and do it now.

But here is another danger: Today the papers tell us we do not have the planes to train our boys with, much less to supply to our friends across the seas, yet this program is being held up by these strikes. The great danger is that if you have these Communists in these factories they are likely to sabotage these planes, and the boys that they ask me and you to draft and send to the service may crash and go down to their deaths as a result.

If our representative Government is saved, it will be saved by the representatives of the American people in the Congress of the United States. I, for one, am willing to do my part, regardless of where the chips fall. This thing must stop, and the sooner we let the world know it is going to stop the better it will be for all concerned.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. COX. I wish to applaud the entire statement of the gentleman, but particularly the last utterance of the gentleman. We can no longer look to the Supreme Court as the bulwark of the liberties of America. Now, I have defended the Court——

Mr. RANKIN. I did not mention the Supreme Court.

Mr. COX. I have defended the Court when a majority of the members of the bench were lawyers earnestly interested in conducting the law——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield to the gentleman further. I have not mentioned any other branch of the Government. I was elected to only one branch of the Government; I was elected to the Congress of the United States, the only Representative the 250,000 people of my district have on this floor. They have a right to look to me, as your people have a right to look to you, for protection. They have a right to demand that you do not let these Communists creep in under the guise of organized labor or unorganized labor and sabotage this Government or wreck our defense program. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that I believe the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], in his statement, has more than doubled the wage of farm labor. It may be, as he said, 10 cents an hour in Mississippi, but it is less than 5 cents an hour in Alabama, and I believe the national average is considerably less than 10 cents. I rise, simply, to keep the record straight as far as I can by voicing my conviction that the wage of the average farm laborer is nearer 5 cents than 10 cents per hour.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. It has been found by the farm leaders of the South that a cotton farmer makes 1 cent an hour on an average for each cent a pound he gets for his lint cotton. Now that the farmer is getting approximately 10 cents a pound for his cotton it yields him about 10 cents an hour for his labor. Think how glad he would be to get even 25 cents an hour for his work.

Mr. HOBBS. But that, Mr. Speaker, is theoretical. I do not know how much per hour is represented by 10 cents per pound for cotton, but I sincerely believe that the average cotton farmer receives far less than 10 cents per hour for the work he does.

There can be no national prosperity until the farmers' incomes approach parity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRANT of Alabama asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and after the regular business for the day I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], inasmuch as he, as well as others, have made speeches to the effect that this business must stop: What law does he propose? He voted against adjourning Congress. We are all interested. This is as hot as a firecracker and I want to know what law he recommends. I want to know what he and all those of this Congress who have today made these positive statements wish to come forward with right now to do the thing they say must be done—stop it. We all desire that it stop.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield. I asked the question with yielding in mind.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Alabama that I have no bill framed at the present time, but this Congress is amply capable of preparing the kind of law that will stop it.

Mr. PATRICK. That is what we want. That is what all of us wish. But are you sure you have the "how"?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If the gentleman referred to me in his inquiry, I answer the gentleman by saying that I have already prepared such a law. Will he tell me how to get it up on the floor of the House for consideration?

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman is sitting next to a member of the Rules Committee, and is himself on the Rules Committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. We have heard earnest speeches against communistic activity. Will the Speaker kindly inform me what committee is clothed with power to bring in legislation to prohibit in this country the activity brought to our attention this morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pass on the proposition of referring bills as they are introduced.

Mr. RICH. I think if we could get that information we probably could get some action.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, November 28, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O holy and blessed Spirit of God, whose indwelling brings the gift of joy to our lives: Fill us with the gladness of God, that we may rejoice in all His works, and only be content when walking in His ways. Remove from us all languor and irritability, and breathe on us with that breath which infuses energy and kindles fervor in the loyal perception and fulfillment of our duty. Let Thy spirit curb our wayward senses and steer the vessel of our life into Thy glorious, gladdening presence, Thou Tranquil Haven of all storm-tossed souls. So shall we be meet to serve Thee this day in the power and understanding of the Christ who hath done all things well, and ever liveth to make intercession for us, in whose name we pray. Amen.

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4373) to amend the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An act extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes."

LEGISLATION BY THE COUNCIL OF ST. THOMAS AND ST. JOHN, V. I.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Herman Hertzberger, of New York City, N. Y., transmitting a statement of his opinion concerning measures that should be taken in the interest of American industry in general and the textile industry in particular, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution of the Midwest Conference, Religious Education Institute of the Young People's Religious Union, meeting at Lake Geneva, Wis., favoring solution of the fundamental problems vital in making democratic principles of government work, and protesting against war hysteria in the Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAILEY:

S. 4432. A bill for the protection of walruses in the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

S. 4433. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue oil and gas leases on certain lands; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REGULATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter I have received from Ezra T. Benson, executive secretary of the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, strongly endorsing the so-called Logan-Walter bill, now the unfinished business of the Senate, and urging its passage.

While I have the floor, Mr. President, I desire also to state my own position in support of this measure which I consider to be designed to bring some semblance of order into the chaos that prevails in the conduct of affairs by some hundred-odd Federal administrative agencies.

These administrative agencies exercise quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions. They have been granted broad powers to govern and regulate business and individuals. Some have established rules of procedure for conducting hearings; some have not. Some of them are accused of acting arbitrarily, capriciously, and unfairly. It appears that too many of them have been running wild. I do not profess to understand the ins and outs of this measure, but I do feel that the measure has legitimate and necessary objectives, and I have confidence enough in the Judiciary Committees of the two branches of Congress to believe the measure itself is basically sound and that legislation of this sort is imperatively necessary. Therefore I shall support and vote for this bill.

I send to the desk the letter from Mr. Benson, stating the position of the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, an influential group which is deeply interested in the problems of agriculture, and ask that it be printed at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF FARM COOPERATIVES
(Formerly National Cooperative Council),
Washington, D. C., November 20, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It is gratifying to this council to learn of the recent renewed interest in Senate consideration of the Logan-Walter bill.

The National Council of Farm Cooperatives believes this to be a fair and just bill aimed at the safeguarding of democratic institutions, and the continuation of a government of laws instead of men. If enacted into law it will, we believe, provide uniformity in procedure in issuing regulations, adequate hearing of controversies between individuals and officials of their Government, and impartial judicial review.

We also believe that the bill is thoroughly sound, greatly needed, and will reduce costs, expedite administrative processes, and increase respect for government.

On behalf of the more than 1,500,000 farmers represented by the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, through some 4,000 farmer-owned and farmer-controlled associations distributed in every State, we endorse and urge passage of the Logan-Walter bill. This action has been taken following careful study of the measure by the executive committee and the president of this council, John D. Miller, and 13 other leading attorneys representing large agricultural organizations.

We earnestly request your immediate consideration and support of the Logan-Walter bill, H. R. 9624 and S. 915.

Respectfully submitted.

EZRA T. BENSON,
Executive Secretary.

EDITORIAL BY WILLIAM E. JACKSON ON THE INDISPENSABLE OPPOSITION

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD something I regard as very timely and helpful as an expression of civic virtue by a college man whose unique position gives the expression special value at this time. The matter to which I refer is an editorial written by William E. Jackson, son of the Attorney General of the United States, and published in the Yale Daily News, of which he is vice president. It is entitled "The Indispensable Opposition," and is an appeal to the majority to learn the lessons its adversaries can teach. I want the RECORD to show one particular paragraph. Therefore I read it:

It is always easier to condemn than to understand; and it will be a fatal misjudgment of the temper of the country if the newly commissioned rulers fail to recognize that the men they defeated are indispensable; not as an indulgence to a smug sense of tolerance, not as a concession from infallibility, not just as a sop to the tradition that "all points of view should be heard," but as the realization that a man or a nation never grows very much if it is surrounded and inspired only by those who think and act like unto it. It takes an adversary to teach and an intelligent opponent to learn. In the principle of "honor thine enemy" lies the path to that wisdom and understanding which the governors owe to the governed.

This editorial is republished in the United States News of November 22, 1940, and I wish to give it further publicity. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE INDISPENSABLE OPPOSITION—AN APPEAL TO MAJORITY TO LEARN LESSONS ITS ADVERSARIES CAN TEACH—COLLEGE EDITORIAL MAKES PLEA FOR CONCILIATION AFTER BITTERNESS OF THE CAMPAIGN

Occasionally the college press presents an editorial on public affairs which is worthy of attention along with the editorials of the Nation's daily newspapers.

Such an editorial, written by William E. Jackson, vice chairman of the Yale Daily News and a son of Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, seems to us to merit reproduction here this week. Young Mr. Jackson was an ardent supporter of the Roosevelt side of the campaign, yet in the wee hours of the morning of November 6 he wrote for immediate publication an editorial of reconciliation and national unity which pays high tribute to Wendell Willkie and calls him the "indispensable man" of the opposition party.

The editorial in full follows:

"(By William E. Jackson)

"Yesterday we were many people; today we must be one people. That is the sentiment of the great men in both parties this morning. The Nation is fallen upon troublesome days, through forces from without, and now that the campaign is over petty facetiousness must yield in good grace to national unity, in Lincoln's spirit, 'with malice toward none, with charity for all.' For, even to those of us who were most partisan, this is a most sobering victory. None of us has any reason for recrimination, any right to crow.

"There is always a propensity for the vanquished to brood, like the poet, 'majestic in their sadness at the doubtful doom of humankind.' But to my friends who see nought but ruin in the collapse of their hopes, who have said that if Roosevelt were reelected papa would have to lay off 500 men, or resign from three clubs, or flee the country to escape confiscation or socialization—I ask them to temper their apprehensions and not to face the future with distrust or resentment. I think it probable that the American way of life, greatly as its meaning differs among Americans, will somehow last as long as they care to look ahead, perhaps bred to new splendor and greatness through the triumphs it shall win against alien systems. Defeat is bitter, but there are still stars in our flag.

"Yet the burden, I think, falls most heavily on the victors. Those of us who worked, as I did, for the President's reelection must never forget that, right or wrong, many millions of our fellow citizens have shown by their votes that they do not approve his policies or lack confidence in his abilities. For it is not true that 51 percent always has the moral right to coerce or to ignore the other 49 percent, their interests, and their convictions. The democratic device of head counting is useful for settling certain problems, e. g., who shall lead the Nation for 4 years. But equally important and more subtle problems, such as what kind of a nation ours is to be, cannot be settled by head counting alone, or by the inundation of an essential minority by a powerful majority. The mandate of this election must be accepted for what it is—and no more.

"There is, however, still another burden on the victors, and that is to recognize that today Mr. Willkie, or at least his party, is in very truth the indispensable man. The opposition is indispensable. Walt Whitman put it best when he asked: 'Have you learned lessons only of those who admired you, were tender to you, and who stood aside for you? Have you not learned great lessons of those who braced themselves against you and disputed the passage with you?'

"It is not just for reasons of fair play, of sportsmanship, or magnanimity that enlightened men welcome opposition, but to learn from them that dispute the passage. So to do requires a broadness of vision and a largness of view that it is not given some to attain. In the zeal for national unity, let no man assume that his late opponents were the tools of treasons, strategems, or spoils; let no man brush aside their convictions as the mouthings of either knaves or lunatics—as, in the first flush of triumph, it is so uncommonly easy to do.

"It is always easier to condemn than to understand. And it will be a fatal misjudgment of the temper of the country if the newly commissioned rulers fail to recognize that the men they defeated are indispensable. Not as an indulgence to a smug sense of tolerance, not as a concession from infallibility, not just as a sop to the tradition that all points of view should be heard. But as the realization that a man or a nation never grows very much if it is surrounded and inspired only by those who think and act like unto it. It takes an adversary to teach and an intelligent opponent to learn. In the principle of 'honor thine enemy' lies the path to that wisdom and understanding which the governors owe to the governed.

"I have deliberately been harder on my own side than the other, because, through power, theirs is the greater obligation. A poverty of the spirit is our own greatest threat today. A great writer has ably pointed out that our final problem, as always, is a problem in personal morals, for in the end, whether we make America a good or a bad country will depend upon what we make, individually, of ourselves.

"We have said, for all the world to hear, that ours is 'one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.' And now we are going to show that we meant it."

REGULATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement concerning the Logan-Walter bill, which has been made the unfinished business of the Senate.

As the Senate knows, from time to time, for reasons which have appeared to me to be sound, I have urged the postponement of the consideration of this measure. I think all Senators realized, when the question was raised, that a bill of this importance and complexity should not be passed except after consideration by the Members of the Senate, which could not be given during a call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Under the circumstances which prevailed when the bill was called and passed on a previous occasion, during the absence of myself and other Senators opposed to it who had repeatedly objected, I sought a reconsideration of the vote by which the measure was passed, and its return to the calendar. After some negotiations, reconsideration was granted, and the bill was returned to the calendar.

During the negotiations which resulted in the reconsideration I indicated that it would be entirely agreeable, at some convenient time during the present session, for the bill to be taken up and acted on by the Senate. As I stated yesterday, I think Members of the Senate and the Senate itself have to be governed by circumstances as they arise from time to time, and no one, on the previous occasions, could foresee the conditions which would exist in the world and in the legislative history of this country; and when efforts have been made to bring the bill up in the meantime, I have urged postponement, for reasons which still seem to me to be sound. In doing so, I have subjected myself to the criticism and denunciation of those on the outside of this Chamber who have been impatient for the consideration of the proposed legislation.

Yesterday I stated that I did not believe that under the present circumstances the Senate was in a mood to consider a bill of this importance. I do not think so now. Half the Members of the Senate are absent. It is doubtful whether under present conditions many of them could be brought back, or would be willing to return for the purpose of voting on any one particular bill. Many of them undoubtedly would.

We are now approaching the 1st day of December, and, as always has happened, as we remember, when Congress, under the previous provision of the Constitution, met on the first Monday in December, very little legislation could be accomplished in the atmosphere of the preholiday season until after the first of the year, and as a result December was practically wasted.

Somewhat coincidental with the consideration of the pending bill in the present session of the Congress, the President, recognizing that this subject was entitled to deep study, and recognizing that it was under the aegis of the Department of Justice, which presumably would be impartial as among other departments and agencies of the Government, asked the then Attorney General, now Justice Murphy, of the Supreme Court, to appoint a special committee to investigate the subject.

The Attorney General appointed the committee, which is made up of outstanding lawyers. It has been conceded in debate here that no more able committee has ever been appointed to make an investigation of any kind than the committee headed by Dean Acheson, appointed to look into this subject. In making his request, undoubtedly the President had in view the importance of the subject, and the desirability, presumably, of Congress having the most accurate information regarding it.

I have felt all along, and I now feel, that this is not a matter which could be adequately dealt with in haste. I have read every article written and every speech delivered for and against the bill, including the testimony of Dean Pound, referred to yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska; including a brochure prepared and distributed by Mr. O. R. McGuire, the chairman of the subcommittee of the American Bar Association, who has devoted himself almost exclusively to urging the proposed legislation during the last few years; including testimony had before the Committee of the House of Representatives, which was brief, at best, considering the importance of the subject.

I have read the article prepared by Mr. Louis Caldwell, at one time the chief counsel of the Federal Radio Commission, at one time a member of the subcommittee of the American Bar Association, which has sponsored the pending legislation. Recognizing that there was need for some consideration of the subject of administrative law, Mr. Caldwell devoted himself, with the other members of the subcommittee, to looking into it and in the preparation of a bill. The bill which was reported by that subcommittee was of such a character that Mr. Caldwell could not endorse it, resigned from the subcommittee, and has since criticized it in two very able articles. I have read those articles. I have read the very able article written by Dean James M. Landis, than whom I think there is no greater scholar. Lawyers may disagree with his theories, his philosophy of government, and of law and jurisprudence, but no one can deny the ability of Mr. Landis. He devoted himself very industriously and earnestly to this subject.

The committee which, at the request of the President, was appointed by the Attorney General, has been working diligently ever since its appointment. The members of the committee draw nothing in the way of compensation for their work. They have no salaries.

They practice law for a living. It has not been possible for them to devote every hour of every day to the study of this subject, and they assigned to some of their subordinates, and to those who were employed by them, the meticulous and careful and detailed investigation of the various agencies and bureaus and departments of the Government, in order to find out what were the defects of administration, in order to become intimately acquainted with the processes of the governmental agencies, and their practices and methods. They have, as I have previously stated, gone through these bureaus and agencies with a fine-tooth comb, and have now made their report to the Attorney General's committee, and that committee have been for the last month here in Washington sitting daily to consider their report to the Attorney General. I have been advised authoritatively, as I stated yesterday, that their report will be ready for the Attorney General next week.

In spite of that situation, Mr. President, certain newspapers in this country, which have been demanding that Congress remain in session because of the emergency which exists in the world, have usually wound up their editorials by giving as the real reason that Congress ought to vote on the Logan-Walter bill, and on the so-called Smith amendments to the Wagner Act which are now in committee. I do not say that with reference to any Member of this body, but I am bound to conclude that those on the outside of this Chamber who are pressing for a vote and "riding" the opponents of the bill day by day in order to get a vote, are willing for the Senate of the United States to vote without the value and benefit of the information which has been collected by the Attorney General's committee. They have urged us to vote. They are urging us to vote now.

Mr. President, I wish simply to state that I do not now believe the Senate understands the bill sufficiently to know what effect its enactment will have on the various departments of the Government of the United States. These departments were created by Congress. If we made any mistake in their creation, or in their jurisdiction, or in their methods of procedure, Congress could amend the law creating the agency or department and correct the defect, if it wanted so to do.

I have been told by numerous Senators on both sides of this measure that they have not had an opportunity to study it and do not understand it. This may be an intellectual limitation on my part, but I started a while ago to say that, after having read all that has been said about it on both sides, I still am not sure what its passage will do to all the agencies of the Government of the United States. I know it will handicap some of them. I know it will hamstring them. I know they could not function efficiently and as Congress intended they should function if this measure were enacted and were suspended over them in the operation of the functions which Congress has conferred upon them.

I believe it would be wise for the Senate not to act until the next session of Congress. I have already so stated, and I am sincere in that belief. I believe if it acts now it will act without sufficient information; it will act without sufficient knowledge or understanding of what the bill contains and its effect upon the Government of the United States, which, after all, is the Government of the people; and I want the people of the United States to know that those on the outside of this Chamber who are pressing now for a vote prefer that we vote without sufficient information rather than that we pass a wise bill which we may be able to write when we get the benefit of the investigations which have been made more carefully than any which have been made by anyone else, including the American Bar Association.

It has been impossible for those of us who oppose this proposed legislation to convey to the country our real reasons for opposing it. I have spoken from time to time on this bill. Other Senators have also spoken on it. No person beyond the range of my voice ever heard anything I said or that any of the opponents of the measure have said about it unless they happened to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The American people do not know what the effect of this proposed legislation will be. If they knew what its effect would be, they would not favor it. A provision similar to that contained in this bill was placed in a new constitution which was submitted to the people of New York a year or two ago, and they had a right to vote separately on the different provisions of the new constitution submitted to them, and when they voted on a similar provision in the constitution of New York they voted it down, 10 to 1, because they did not want even the departments of the New York State government to be handicapped by such legislation as this. They were not willing to put those departments into the hands or under the control of the courts, as I believe this bill will do in the case of Federal departments and agencies.

Mr. President, I do not believe the Senate ought to act in haste. It may be said that it has not acted in haste. So far as many individual Members of the Senate are concerned, the bill is no more understood today than it was when it was introduced in the Senate. That is not true of some of those who have taken an active part for or against it, but by and large there are many who do not understand it today, and who will not understand it after weeks of discussion, because it is the sort of bill that the more one discusses it the less he understands it. [Laughter.]

Notwithstanding my belief that it is a mistake to vote on the bill at this session, and that it ought to go over in order to get a really sound bill that can become a law——

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. According to the Senator's statement, would it not be better to vote soon?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and I am coming to that. The Senator is a mind reader, I am afraid.

Notwithstanding my objections to the bill, notwithstanding my opposition to it, notwithstanding I believe that the Senate ought to have the benefit of all the information which can be collected and has been collected, notwithstanding the fact that no harm can come to our Government or our people by delay in acting on this legislation until January, I am willing to vote today, and I am now concluding my remarks with the understanding that if the proponents of the legislation are ready for a vote on it now we are ready for a vote on it now.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the Senate declare itself, and let the country understand the circumstances under which the vote is taken.

Mr. President, on the passage of the bill, if we are ready for a vote, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are committee amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. The yeas and nays can be ordered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I am sure everyone has been impressed with the seriousness and conscientiousness of the address made by the majority leader. I cannot understand, in my simple way, why there should be any objection to having an act on the part of an administrative agency of the Government reviewed by a court of competent jurisdiction; and if there is going to be any further debate on this subject, I should like to have an attempt made to explain why that should not be done. Why would review by a court of an act of a bureaucrat in the executive branch of the Government take control of the executive branch of the Government and put it into the hands of the court any more than a court passing upon an act of Congress result in the court taking control of legislation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 2, page 3, line 8, after the word "hearings.", to insert "Such notice shall be published in the Federal Register, shall state the date of the public hearing, which shall be not less than 10 days after the date of the notice, and shall set forth the language of the rules proposed to be adopted. After the public hearing, such rules or amended rules dealing with the same subject may be approved", so as to read:

SEC. 2. (a) Hereafter administrative rules and all amendments or modifications or supplements of existing rules implementing or filling in the details of any statute affecting the rights of persons or property shall be issued by the head of the agency and by each independent agency respectively charged with the administration of any statute only after publication of notice and public hearings. Such notice shall be published in the Federal Register, shall state the date of the public hearing, which shall be not less than 10 days after the date of the notice, and shall set forth the language of the rules proposed to be adopted. After the public hearing, such rules or amended rules dealing with the same subject may be approved. All such rules shall be published in the Federal Register within 10 days after the date of their approval by the head of the agency or the independent agency concerned, and shall not become effective until such publication, except when the President declares that a public emergency exists.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have been somewhat amazed at the objection to the bill, accompanied by a demand for an immediate vote on it, without explanation. I happen to be one of the Senators who do not concede the statement that it is impossible to understand the bill if it is explained. I think the proponents of the bill owe it to the Senate to make an explanation of the bill. I, for one, do not want to be driven to a vote on a bill which has not been explained.

The only statements which have been made have been preliminary statements. On the one side the statements have had to do with reasons why we should consider the bill, and on the other side with reasons why we should not consider it. Speakers on both sides have said that they were not discussing the merits of the bill. The bill is stated to be of tremendous consequence; and it seems to me, as an individual Member of the Senate, that we are entitled to an explanation of the objections to the bill as well as the reasons for it.

I am concerned about the particular paragraph which is now before us, as to what, if any, limitations are to be included. I can conceive of many minor administrative rules, such, for example, as a rule with respect to office hours in a department——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator will notice that on the first page "administrative rules" are defined to include only rules of general application interpreting the terms of statutes which the agency is charged with administering. Such a rule as the Senator suggests is in no way subject to the provisions of the bill. The Senator will see the definition of "administrative rules" on the first page, in subparagraph (1) of section 1.

Mr. ADAMS. What rule could there be which would not come within that definition? It seems to me that practically every one comes within that definition.

Mr. TAFT. No; a rule setting the hours of work for a department is not a rule interpreting the terms of a statute in any sense. Only rules interpreting the terms of statutes are included.

Mr. ADAMS. That may or may not be true. There might be rules for the regulation of admission to national parks, which are general rules.

I am interested in knowing how far this provision goes. My inclination is to support the bill. I shall not support it if I find that it includes within it a multitude of minor, petty administrative regulations which cannot be put into effect without the process of advertisement.

As I have read the bill, it seems to me to need limitation. It seems to me to need prescription and exception. I am appealing to those who think the bill should be passed to make some explanation. In connection with section 2, I should like to know what is included and what is excluded, other than what is indicated by the mere general statement made by the Senator from Ohio.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 3, beginning in line 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Implementing administrative rules", in section 2, on page 3, line 25, after "(c)", to strike out "Any" and insert "Within 1 year after the date of the approval of this act any"; on page 4, line 2, after the word "rule", to strike out "in force on the date of the approval of this act and"; in line 3, after the word "has", to strike out "not"; in the same line, after the word "force", to insert "on such date"; in line 4, after the words "a period of", to insert "less than"; in the same line, after the word "years", to strike out "or more"; and in line 9, after the word "and", to strike out "public hearing, if requested within 10 days thereafter" and insert "a public hearing if the same be requested within 20 days after the publication of such notice", so as to read:

(c) Within 1 year after the date of the approval of this act any person substantially interested in the effects of an administrative rule which has been in force on such date for a period of less than 3 years may petition the head of the agency or the independent agency which administers any statute under which the rule was issued for a reconsideration of any such rule; and the head of such agency or the independent agency shall, after publication of notice and a public hearing, if the same be requested within 20 days after the publication of such notice, determine whether such rule shall be continued in force, modified, or rescinded. All amendments of such rules shall be in accordance with the procedure provided in subsection (a) of this section and all action of the head of such agency or the independent agency on such petitions and all new or amended rules shall be published in the Federal Register as prescribed in said subsection (a) for the publication of rules.

The amendment was agreed to.

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF RULES

SEC. 3. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction, upon petition filed by any person substantially interested in the effects of any administrative rule within 30 days from the date any approved administrative rule is published in the Federal Register, to hear and determine whether any such rule issued or continued in force in accordance with section 2 of this act is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the statute under which issued. No rule shall be held invalid except for violation of the Constitution or for conflict with a statute or for lack of authority conferred upon the agency issuing it by the statute or statutes pursuant to which it was issued or for failure to comply with section 2 of this act. A copy of the petition, and copies of all subsequent pleadings shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, who shall direct the defense of the rule. The court may refer such petition and any reply thereto for the taking of such evidence as shall be material and relevant thereto. The court shall give preference to such petitions and shall have no power in the proceedings except to render a declaratory judgment holding such rule legal and valid or holding it contrary to law and invalid. If the rule is held contrary to law and invalid, the rule thereafter shall not have any force or effect except to confer immunity as provided in section 2 of this act. Nothing contained in this section shall prevent the determination of the validity or invalidity of any rule which may be involved in any suit or review of an administrative decision or order in any court of the United States as now or hereafter authorized by law.

Wherever practicable, such boards shall be designated in various sections of the United States to hear any controversy which may have there arisen. At least one employee designated for each such board shall be a lawyer. Each employee so designated as a member of an intra-agency board shall, before he enters upon his duties as such member, take an oath or affirmation that he will act impartially with respect to all matters pending before such board without regard to the position of the Government as a party in interest, and that he will decide such matters upon their merits in accordance with law and the evidence presented.

A copy or copies thereof shall be sent by registered mail to the aggrieved party. The independent agency shall enter at the expiration of 30 days such appropriate decision as may be proper unless within said 30 days the aggrieved party shall signify his written consent to the entry of the decision or shall file by registered mail with the independent agency his written objections to the findings of fact and decision in which event the independent agency shall not enter its decision without first according a public hearing upon reasonable notice to such party. Such hearing shall be before the members of the independent agency, if it has not less than three members, or before any three of such members. If the independent agency has less than three members, an intra-agency board shall be constituted in the manner provided in subsection (a) of this section, upon which the member or members of such agency may serve at his or their election.

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DECISIONS OR ORDERS OF ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

SEC. 5. (a) Any party to a proceeding before any agency or independent agency as provided in section 4 of this act who may be aggrieved by the final decision or order of any agency, or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days after the date of receipt of a copy thereof, may at his election file a written petition (1) with the clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; or (2) with the clerk of the circuit court of appeals within whose jurisdiction such aggrieved party resides or maintains his principal place of business or in which the controversy arose for review of the decision. Before filing a petition such party may within 10 days after the date of receipt of the copy of the final decision or order make a motion to the agency or independent agency concerned for a rehearing, tendering a statement of any further showing to be made thereon which shall constitute a part of the record, and the time for appeal shall run from the date of the order on such motion if denied or the order made on such rehearing if a rehearing shall be had. The petition shall state the alleged errors in the decision of the agency or independent agency concerned. The Attorney General of the United States and the agency or independent agency shall each be served by the petitioner with a copy of the petition and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to cause appearance to be entered on behalf of the United States within 30 days after the date of receipt by him of a copy of the petition, and it shall be the duty of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days or such longer time as the court may by order direct, after receipt of a copy of the petition, to cause to be prepared and filed with the clerk of such court the original or a full and accurate transcript of the entire record in such proceeding before such agency or independent agency. Upon the filing of any such petition for review, the court to which the same is directed shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the questions determined therein and shall have power to grant such temporary relief by restraining order, mandamus, or otherwise as it may deem just and proper. The court may affirm or set aside the decision or may direct the agency or independent agency concerned to modify its decision. Any case may be remanded for such further evidence as in the discretion of the court may be required but no objection not urged before the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, shall be considered by the court unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused by the court for good cause shown. To facilitate the hearing of such appeals and avoid delay in the hearing of other matters before the court, such court may constitute special sessions thereof to consist of any three judges competent in law to sit as judges of a circuit court of appeals, which special sessions may be held concurrently with the regular sessions of said court. Any decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; or (2) that the decision is not supported by the findings of fact; or (3) that the decision was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing; or (4) that the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be; or (5) that the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 14, line 8, after the word "appeals", to insert "under this section and section 3 of this act", so as to read:

Sections 2 and 3 of this act shall not apply to the General Accounting Office. No right of review hereunder shall be exercised during the construction of any public building or public works project as to any decision, ruling, or order made with reference to the prosecution of the work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 17, line 2, after the word "shall", to strike out "without further requirement" and insert "unless otherwise prohibited by law", so as to read:

(c) Members in good standing of the bar of the United States Supreme Court, any circuit court of appeals, or any district court of the United States, shall, unless otherwise prohibited by law, be eligible to represent clients and practice before any agency or independent agency as defined in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the semicolon following the word "establishments" and insert a comma and the following: "including the Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission thereto, the Priorities Board, and any other agency or authority hereafter created to expedite military and naval defense."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] made a request, not only that the bill be explained by the proponents of the measure but that the opponents explain their opposition to the bill. I think the request made by the Senator from Colorado is reasonable. The proponents of the measure have spoken on the floor of the Senate, not once but many times. The bill has been explained at length and in detail.

Mr. ADAMS. But the Senator knows that the bill has never been before the Senate except for a very brief moment, when it passed by unanimous consent, and a motion to reconsider was made. In its present form it has never been explained. We have just proceeded to adopt a long series of amendments.

Mr. HATCH. That, in part, is correct. Some of the amendments, I think, have been explained on the floor of the Senate, and certainly what the bill proposes to do generally has been explained not once but several times. The Senator from Colorado, however, is entirely correct when he says that this is the first time the bill has been before the Senate. I know that only too well.

I do not desire to delay the vote on the measure; I do not wish to take the time to explain again what its provisions mean. I do not know, but it may be that it will be impossible to get a conference with the House; perhaps the House will not meet, and perhaps none of these amendments can be agreed upon. I do not know as to that. I only know that some of us have honestly tried to secure legislation upon what we consider to be an important subject. We have been perfectly willing at all times to take up the bill line by line, paragraph by paragraph, to explain and debate it, and let the Senate decide what should be good legislation on the subject. I am willing that the vote be taken.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass? On that question, the yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. I understand that, if present, he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am informed that, if present and voting, he would vote as I intend to vote. I am at liberty therefore to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCKELLAR. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] are unavoidably detained from the Senate. I am advised that if present and voting, they would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce the necessary absence of the following Senators: The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senators from Washington [Mr. BONE and Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senators from Virginia [Mr. GLASS and Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS and Mr. LEE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senators from Montana [Mr. WHEELER and Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN].

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senators from Virginia [Mr.

GLASS and Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea" and the Senator from Wyoming would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is detained from the Senate because of illness in his family.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], would would vote "nay";

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], who would vote "nay."

The following Senators, who are necessarily absent, if present, would vote "yea":

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

The vote was recapitulated by the legislative clerk.

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. HOLT entered the Chamber and voted.

Mr. MINTON. I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did we not just have a recapitulation?

Mr. MINTON. That was the first call. There has since been no recapitulation, and I am entitled to one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the vote has been recapitulated.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish simply to state for the RECORD that the mere announcement of the call of the roll and the result of it immediately after it is finished has not heretofore been regarded as a recapitulation. Frequently the request for recapitulation is granted. It may be a repetition of some process, but there is nothing unusual about it. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not care whether the request is granted or not, but I see no reason to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian, when there is objection to a recapitulation, while personally the Chair has no objection to it, it cannot be ordered.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—27

So the bill (H. R. 6324) was passed.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conferees will be appointed a little later.

Mr. HATCH subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. KING, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BURKE, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. TAFT as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 915 will be indefinitely postponed.

WILLFUL INJURY OR DESTRUCTION OF WAR MATERIAL, ETC.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, for the purpose of getting the measure before the Senate, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10465, the so-called sabotage bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10465) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, is this a motion or a request for unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill amends the existing sabotage law so as to make it applicable in time of emergency. The existing law applies to sabotage in time of war. This bill makes it applicable to national-defense activities, utilities, and structures in time of emergency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think we are all interested in having some teeth put into the present law. I am wondering whether the proposal which the Senator now submits does put teeth into the law. I wish the Senator would make plain to us the situation in that respect.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill prescribes a maximum $10,000 fine or a maximum of 10 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, or both such fine and imprisonment, for acts of sabotage.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Are the acts of sabotage sufficiently broadly defined so that we can actually get some protection out of the situation, which up to now apparently we cannot get?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They are very specifically and explicitly defined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 10465) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 1 of the act approved April 20, 1918, entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes" (40 Stat. 533; U. S. C., title 50, secs. 101–103), is amended by striking out the word "the" immediately preceding the word "war."

The fourth paragraph of section 1 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"The words 'United States' as used in this act in a geographical sense shall include the Philippine Islands, the Panama Canal Zone, and all other territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States as thus defined."

Such act of April 20, 1918, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following sections:

"SEC. 4. That the words 'national-defense material,' as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, livestock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, fuel, supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description and any part or ingredient thereof, intended for the use of the United States in connection with the national defense.

"The words 'national-defense premises,' as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places wherein such national-defense material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other miltary or naval stations of the United States.

"The words 'national-defense utilities,' as used herein, shall include all railroads, railways, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad or railway fixture, canal, lock, dam, wharf, pier, dock, bridge, building, structure, engine, machine, mechanical contrivance, car, vehicle, boat, or aircraft, or any other means of transportation whatsoever, whereon or whereby such national-defense material, or any troops of the United States, are being or may be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas; and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains and pipes, structures, and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas may be furnished to any national-defense premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, and all electric light and power, steam or pneumatic power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used to supply water, light, heat, power, or facilities of communication to any national-defense premises or to the miltiary or naval forces of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense of the United States, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any national-defense material, national-defense premises, or national-defense utilities, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"SEC. 6. That whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense of the United States, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any national-defense material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such national-defense material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4297, a similar bill, will be indefinitely postponed.

What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before proceeding to the consideration of executive business I wish to make a statement for the benefit of Senators.

The passage of the Logan-Walter bill disposes of the only important piece of legislation on the calendar. I have conferred with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and I am advised that there is no probability that the so-called Smith amendments to the Wagner Act will be reported for action at the present session of the Congress. Therefore there is no need for Senators to remain here in order to pass upon the twin virtues that have been extolled in this country under the heading of the Smith amendments to the Labor Act and the Logan-Walter bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think there is a very good chance that the Smith amendments may be reported to the Senate. This morning there was a meeting of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor at which six members were present, which was a quorum. That quorum was broken by the fact that the chairman of the committee had to leave the committee, saying that he was called by the majority leader to confer with him. He left at 11 o'clock and did not return.

If the chairman of the committee desires to call a meeting of the committee, there is a quorum now in town, and I think the committee can act. I cannot guarantee that the committee's action will be favorable; but certainly action by the committee, which I have been urging for some months, can be taken and should be taken before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. BARKLEY. I simply wish to say that I am making this announcement for the benefit of Senators who may want to govern themselves accordingly. There is certainly no other important legislation on the calendar; and it is my purpose to have a series of 3-day recesses, during which time Senators will be at liberty either to remain in Washington or to depart hence, subject, of course, to the suggestion that if any important legislation shall come up for consideration, or is likely to come up, Senators will be notified in time to return to Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, may we go away with the feeling and the belief that at present there is nothing to require our attention here, and that if anything shall arise we will be notified immediately?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct. That is the understanding which I wish to convey.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The reason why I ask the question is that I am very anxious to go home. I have not been home for a year and a half. I have a grandson who is very ill in the hospital there, and I am anxious to see him.

Mr. BARKLEY. We all appreciate that, and sympathize with the Senator. I wanted to make this announcement so that all Senators might govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish also to state that in the event the House should take any action on the amendments, or on the request for a conference on the bill which has just been under consideration, which would require action on the part of the Senate, an effort will be made to notify all Senators of the situation.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to make an inquiry of the majority floor leader, because some of us still think there is a possibility of the House acting directly on the amendments and accepting them, in which event there would be no necessity for action on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator understands that the Speaker has advised Members of the House that there is nothing which requires their attendance, and has advised them that they may return to their homes.

Mr. HATCH. That applied to the situation up to this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. And large numbers of the Members of the House have taken his advice.

Mr. HATCH. The Speaker has also notified them that if matters of legislation should arise, he would notify them, and they could return.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; that is always the understanding, in both Houses.

Mr. HATCH. There is a matter now which the House should consider, in our opinion, and I am very hopeful the House will act on these amendments, or at least grant the request for a conference, and we can still proceed before the end of this session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not in a position to state what the House will do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think I understand the situation; but before the distinguished leader of the majority makes a motion to recess I wish to clarify my own view a little.

Is it true that if we should adopt the Senator's motion to recess until Thursday——

Mr. BARKLEY. Until Friday. In one or two States Thanksgiving has not yet been observed, and we do not desire to interfere with that. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. If we should adopt the motion, there would be nothing in the action we would take which would interfere with the consideration of the Walter-Logan bill in conference, or a conference report on it, if the circumstances called for it?

Mr. BARKLEY. The situation is that the Senate has asked the House for a conference. If the House agrees to the conference, of course, the members of the conference can work; and if they should reach an agreement and bring back a report, it would have to be passed on by the Senate, and, of course, Senators would be notified in time to return to Washington.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should like to present a word of explanation, not in reply to what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] said but explaining what I stated to the leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

In all the hearings we have held on the so-called Smith amendments as they have come over from the House, there has never yet been a witness who was willing to accept the amendments as they were presented to us. In other words, the amendments which would have to come to the floor of the Senate are in such a state that they would come in a way that would make them, at least, parliamentarily speaking, out of harmony with the Smith amendments. It is for that reason that I made my statement to the Senator from Kentucky. It would not have been accurate for me to say that we could probably agree on some report. I do not think that would be possible, under all circumstances governing us at the present time.

I should also like to call attention to the fact that the Smith amendments and the Walter-Logan bill have been linked together in one sentence. Time after time telegrams have come to us telling us to remain in Washington to pass these two measures. The writers certainly did not understand what they were writing. The Smith amendments contain page after page of procedural matters. The Walter-Logan bill deals with procedure entirely. It would be an extremely interesting situation if the Senate of the United States, in the same breath, passed two procedural amendments out of harmony with each other.

It takes a long time to study measures such as the Walter-Logan bill and the Smith amendments, which deal with procedure. Of course, it is easy to say that we should bring out some report, that we should pass something. But I am pretty sure there is hardly a Senator present who realizes that the amendments passed by the House of Representatives are longer and more complicated than the original act itself. If we should merely want to do a sentimental thing, and bring some amendments to the floor of the Senate and let the Senate accept them or reject them as it saw fit, it would be a gesture for which I, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, would not want to be held responsible. It seems to me these are serious matters, and that we should realize that we have been acting upon one bill today which is quite out of harmony with many of the provisions covered by the Smith amendments; that the two things must be coordinated, that they must be brought into some sort of uniformity, or we legislate greater confusion.

It has been stated that the reason for the Walter-Logan bill is that it would overcome confusion in the administration of our governmental affairs. Let us grant that statement to be true. Should we then in the same breath try to overcome the good that has been accomplished?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield, if the Senator from Kentucky is willing.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Merely as one who has had something to do with procedural matters in connection with the Walter-Logan bill, and something to do with the Smith amendments, it has often occurred to me, I think quite correctly, that if the principles of the Walter-Logan bill, as contained in the measure we have just passed, were carried into law, there would be no occasion for the Smith amendments at all.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is exactly what I am saying. I wish I had the ability of the Senator from New Mexico to say it. When we are trying to overcome confusion by enacting a law aimed at overcoming confusion, why should the Senate act, in the same breath, to introduce more confusion into the situation?

There has been no disposition to be unfair in this matter at all. On the floor of the House of Representatives certain amendments were attached to the Smith amendments as offered. The proponent of the Smith amendments is not entirely satisfied with the amendments as they came to us, and that is true of practically every one which came to us.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment. What I stated a few minutes ago was not intended in any way to interfere with any action which the committee might take, but I felt that in frankness to the Members of the Senate I should state, in view of what the Senator from Utah has just said, that there is no need for Senators to remain in Washington now on account of the Smith amendments. If the committee takes any action, of course, we will have something on which to act.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator from New Mexico is in error in saying that the Walter-Logan bill will meet the difficulties or problems caused by the National Labor Relations Act and the Smith amendments. There are many things in the Smith amendments which are not referred to in any way in the Walter-Logan bill. I see no reason why specific procedure should not be necessary in the case of particular agencies. Therefore the enactment of the Walter-Logan bill does not remove the need of legislating for many separate departments of Government.

These particular amendments have been before the Committee on Education and Labor for 2 years. They were offered and three different bills were considered. We had hearings for over 4 months. We had hearings from about the 1st of April 1939 until the 1st of July. The House then proceeded by itself. Our committee did nothing. We had before our committee evidence of instances of what in my opinion were the grossest perversions of justice which have ever occurred in the United States. Never in the history of our Nation has there ever been anything like the outrageous procedure of the National Labor Relations Board and its examiners.

The amendments have been before our committee. Consideration of them has been constantly put off—constantly delayed. We have received demands from businessmen in every section of our country for action on the amendments. We have received demands from business organizations in every section of the United States for action on the amendments. We have received demand after demand from the president of the American Federation of Labor for action on the amendments, yet the committee has delayed, and the chairman has called few meetings. I wrote a letter several months ago asking for action. This morning we had a meeting of the committee at which the committee could have acted, but the chairman left the meeting because he is opposed to action. Let it be understood that the reason no action is taken on the amendments proposed to the National Labor Relations Act is because a majority of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor is opposed to making those amendments, and not because of any complications or any difficulties or any lack of time to consider the amendments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose the Senator will agree that if a majority of the committee is opposed to the legislation they are within their rights in not reporting it.

Mr. TAFT. They are, but they are not within their rights in refusing to vote on the motion to report it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say, for the Senator from Utah, as chairman of the committee, that he left the committee meeting at my urgent request. I was not aware that the committee was in session, and I desired to confer with him about an important matter.

STANDARDIZATION OF BALE COVERING FOR COTTON

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement in reference to House bill 57, an act to provide for the use of net weights in interstate and foreign commerce transactions in cotton, to provide for the standardization of bale covering for cotton. I make the statement so that no one will think that I have been unfaithful to my duty and responsibility to the cotton growers of the Nation.

This bill has been on the Senate Calendar for several months, having passed the House of Representatives, and I have attempted from time to time to get action on it, but at this time I will not insist on action for three reasons. In the first place, there is barely a quorum of the Senate present, and I think matters of important legislation of this character should have consideration by the full Senate.

In the second place, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], is very much opposed to the proposed legislation, and I have felt that it was not ethical to press consideration in his absence.

Third, it will be necessary to amend the bill, if it shall be passed by the Senate, providing for the date when the law shall become operative, and I am convinced that the House will not have a quorum to act upon such an amendment.

Mr. President, for these three reasons I shall not press for consideration of the bill at this time. But I serve notice on the Senate that this will be one of the first bills to be brought up after the meeting of the new Congress in January, because its enactment will mean a saving of from twenty to twenty-five million dollars a year to the cotton growers of the Nation; and since we are now having trouble because of the importation of jute from across the sea it becomes very necessary that other provision be made for bale covering for cotton in the future.

ADDITIONS TO UINTAH-OURAY RESERVATION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether it would be possible at the next meeting of the Senate to consider a bill which is very much desired by the Indian Office and by various agencies.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what the bill is. Why not consider it now, or at least make a request for its consideration? I think the Senate should consider it now rather than have the Senator from Utah ask for consideration of the bill at some other session, when there may perhaps not be a quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is interested in the bill. I ask that the Senate proceed with other business for the moment. I understand the majority leader is about to move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business. When the executive business shall have been concluded, I shall ask for consideration of the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Ernest Muster, to be postmaster at East Bernstadt, Ky.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the nomination of Harry A. Millis, of Illinois, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the term of 5 years from August 27, 1940, vice Joseph Warren Madden.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION—JOHN J. DEMPSEY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of JOHN J. DEMPSEY, of New Mexico, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission for a term of 6 years from September 26, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Thomas E. Trulove to be postmaster at Inglewood, Calif.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

TREATIES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there are a number of treaties and conventions on the calendar. The first two conventions are known to be controversial, that is to say, objections have been raised to them by certain Senators, some of whom are not present. The first is Executive E (73d Cong., 2d sess.), the International Convention of the Copyright Union as revised and signed at Rome on June 2, 1928. The second is Executive K (75th Cong., 1st sess.) and has to do with liability of vessels for collisions at sea. Both those matters are highly controversial, and certain Senators are interested in them.

I therefore ask, Mr. President, that they be passed over, but I ask for consideration of all the remaining treaties and conventions on the Executive Calendar beginning with Calendar No. 6. They are all treaties or conventions of conciliation or extradition, and all are amendatory of existing treaties.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he also request that the Senate pass over the next two conventions, because they deal with radio problems, in which the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] is particularly interested, and in his absence I would prefer not to have them taken up. Beyond the first four that are on the calendar, therefore, I can agree with the Senator from Georgia that the proposals are substantially routine, and might very well be ratified.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Mr. President, omitting the first four Executive orders on the calendar, I ask for the consideration of the fifth and remaining orders on the calendar, because these matters have been considered by the Foreign Relations Committee. They were reported by the late chairman of the committee, the Honorable Key Pittman, and ought to be disposed of now so that they will not go over into the committee after the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ECUADOR—SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION TREATY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, Executive B (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Ecuador, signed at Quito on September 22, 1939, which was read the second time, as follows:

In testimony whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty, in duplicate, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of Liberia being desirous to strengthen the bonds of amity that bind them together and also to advance the cause of general peace, have resolved to enter into a treaty for that purpose, and to that end have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries,

The President of the United States of America:

His Excellency Lester A. Walton, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Liberia; and

The President of the Republic of Liberia:

His Excellency C. L. Simpson, Secretary of State of the Republic of Liberia;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in proper form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:

Article I

Any disputes arising between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Liberia, of whatever nature they may be, shall, when ordinary diplomatic proceedings have failed and the High Contracting Parties do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, be submitted for investigation and report to a Permanent International Commission constituted in the manner prescribed in the next succeeding Article; and they agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and before the report is submitted.

Article II

The International Commission shall be composed of five members, to be appointed as follows: One member shall be chosen from each country, by the Government thereof; one member shall be chosen by each Government from some third country; the fifth member shall be chosen by common agreement between the two Governments, it being understood that he shall not be a citizen of either country. The expenses of the Commission shall be paid by the two Governments in equal proportions.

The International Commission shall be appointed within six months after the exchange of ratifications of this treaty; and vacancies shall be filled according to the manner of the original appointment.

Article III

In case the High Contracting Parties shall have failed to adjust a dispute by diplomatic methods, and they do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, they shall at once refer it to the International Commission for investigation and report. The International Commission may, however, spontaneously by unanimous agreement offer its services to that effect, and in such case it shall notify both Governments and request their cooperation in the investigation.

The High Contracting Parties agree to furnish the Permanent International Commission with all the means and facilities required for its investigation and report.

The report of the Commission shall be completed within one year after the date on which it shall declare its investigation to have begun, unless the High Contracting Parties shall limit or extend the time by mutual agreement. The report shall be prepared in triplicate; one copy shall be presented to each Government, and the third retained by the Commission for its files.

The High Contracting Parties reserve the right to act independently on the subject matter of the dispute after the report of the Commission shall have been submitted.

Article IV

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the President of the Republic of Liberia in accordance with the constitutional laws of the Republic.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Monrovia as soon as possible, and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by one year's written notice given by either High Contracting Party to the other.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate in the English language and hereunto affixed their seals.

SWITZERLAND—SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION TREATY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty, Executive E (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a supplementary extradition treaty between the United States of America and Switzerland, signed at Bern on January 31, 1940, which was read the second time, as follows:

The President of the United States of America and the Swiss Federal Council, animated by the desire to assure better administration of justice and to suppress crime on their territory and under their jurisdiction, have resolved to conclude a supplementary treaty enlarging the list of crimes or offenses which are extraditable under the treaties concluded respectively May 14, 1900 and January 10, 1935, between the United States of America and Switzerland and have named as their Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Mr. Leland Harrison, Envoy extraordinary and Minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America in Berne;

The Swiss Federal Council:

Mr. Johannes Baumann, Federal Councillor, Chief of the Federal Department of Justice and Police., who, after having exchanged their full powers, which were found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

Article I

The list of crimes and offenses for which extradition may be requested, enumerated in Article II of the said treaty of May 14, 1900, as modified by the supplementary treaty of January 10, 1935, is amended as follows:

3. The word "extortion" is added after the word "robbery" and before the words "burglary, house-breaking or shop-breaking".

9. The words "abduction" and "kidnapping of minors" are omitted. GUATEMALA—SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION CONVENTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive F (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a supplementary extradition convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Guatemala, signed at Guatemala City on February 20, 1940, enlarging and amending the extradition treaty of February 27, 1903, between the two countries, which was read the second time, as follows:

SUPPLEMENTARY CONVENTION TO THE EXTRADITION TREATY CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF GUATEMALA ON FEBRUARY 27, 1903

The United States of America and the Republic of Guatemala, desiring to enlarge the list of crimes and offenses for which extradition may be granted in the terms of the Treaty concluded between the two countries on February 27, 1903; and in the desire also to clear up certain doubts which may arise in the application of the said Treaty, and thus favor the administration of justice and prevent crime in their respective territories and jurisdictions, have resolved to conclude a supplementary Convention for that purpose and have appointed their Plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, Fay Allen DesPortes, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Guatemalan Government; and who, after having exhibited their respective Full Powers, which were found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

Article I

The High Contracting Parties agree to the addition of the following crimes and offenses, under number 23, to the list of the crimes and offenses specified in Article 2 of the Extradition Treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Republic of Guatemala on February 27, 1903, namely:

23. Violation of the laws prohibiting or regulating the traffic in narcotics, when the penalty to which violators are liable is one year's imprisonment or more.

The High Contracting Parties also agree to amend number 23 of Article 2 of the said Treaty of 1903, to make it read as follows, renumbering it number 24:

24. Extradition shall also be granted for an attempt to commit any of the crimes or offenses listed above, or for participation in such crimes or offenses as an accessory before or after the fact, provided that all such violations are punishable with imprisonment of one year or more by the laws of both Contracting Parties.

Article II

This convention shall be considered as an integral part of the said Extradition Treaty of February 27, 1903; and it is agreed that the participation as an accessory before or after the fact referred to in the foregoing Article shall be applied, in a proper case, to all the crimes or offenses listed in the said Treaty, and to the crimes or offenses included under number 23 of the Second Article of the above-mentioned Treaty, in the manner previously agreed upon.

Article III

In order to avoid, as far as may be possible, the doubts which might result from difference in the scope of the Spanish word "delito" and the English words "crime" and "offense", as well as the exact translation into Spanish of the expressions "attempt" and "accessories before or after the fact", and the exact translation into English of the words used in the Guatemalan penal legislation "tentativa", "cómplice" and "encubridor", the High Contracting Parties declare that for the application both of the Treaty of Extradition which they concluded on February 27, 1903, and for the application of the present Additional Convention, the Spanish word "delito" is equivalent to the English words "crime" and "offense"; that the Spanish words "delito frustrado" and "tentativa" are equivalent to the English word "attempt"; and that the Spanish names "cómplice" and "encubridor" are translated into English as "accessories before or after the fact".

Article IV

This Convention shall be ratified and the ratifications exchanged in Guatemala City as soon as possible.

It shall come into force ten days after its publication in accordance with the laws of the High Contracting Parties, the said period to run from the date of its publication in the country last publishing, and it shall continue and shall terminate in the same manner as the above-mentioned Treaty of February 27, 1903.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have subscribed and affixed their seals to this Convention, in duplicate in the English and Spanish languages in the City of Guatemala on the twentieth day of February, nineteen hundred and forty.

[SEAL] CORDELL HULL.
[SEAL] RALPH W. CLOSE.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask the able Senator from Georgia if my recollection is correct at this point. This treaty, and the three subsequent treaties, as I understand, merely change the original treaty between the United States and Great Britain, the 1914 peace treaty, through the recognition of the independent negotiating states of the Union of South Africa, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of Canada, and the Dominion of New Zealand? Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator's understanding is correct. They provide for the selection of commissioners in accordance with that theory of independence of the Union of South Africa, the Commonwealth of Australia, and the Dominions of Canada and New Zealand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And the net result is that each of these Dominions or Commonwealths is permitted to act independently rather than under the original general treaty?

Mr. GEORGE. That is the general purpose of the treaties. The Senator's understanding is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive G, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a treaty between the United States of America and the Union of South Africa, signed at Washington, April 2, 1940, amending in their application to the Union of South Africa certain provisions of the treaty for the advancement of peace between the United States of America and Great Britain, signed at Washington, September 15, 1914.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive N, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of New Zealand, signed at Washington, September 6, 1940, amending in their application to New Zealand certain provisions of the treaty for the advancement of peace between the United States of America and Great Britain, signed at Washington, September 15, 1914.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to and the treaty is ratified.

There seems to be come confusion in the minds of certain Senators with respect to the nominations on the Executive Calendar. The Chair distinctly recalls that both nominations on the calendar were read and confirmed. The record will speak accordingly.

Mr. ADAMS. Did I understand the Chair to say that the nominations on the calendar were confirmed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were.

Mr. ADAMS. I am interested in the nomination of JOHN J. DEMPSEY, of New Mexico, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission. Was Mr. DEMPSEY's nomination confirmed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD—HARRY A. MILLIS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah obtained the floor.

Mr. KING and Mr. AUSTIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should like to have the floor if I may. On behalf of the Committee on Education and Labor I previously submitted the committee's favorable report on the nomination of Harry A. Millis, of Illinois, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the term of 5 years from August 27, 1940, vice Joseph Warren Madden. Because of the statement which was made by our leader, I now ask that that nomination be acted upon today, if there is no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am informed by Members of the minority on the Education and Labor Committee, that it is entirely appropriate to proceed now, notwithstanding the rule. Therefore, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah to proceed to consider the nomination of Harry A. Millis to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board? The Chair hears none. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry A. Millis, of Illinois, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the term of 5 years, from August 27, 1940, vice Joseph Warren Madden.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

PAYMENTS TO SHORT-LINE RAILROADS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], who yesterday asked unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 2341, being House bill 10098, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I thought the Senator was asking unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GURNEY. I did not ask for unanimous consent. I moved that the Senate proceed to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I inquire what is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10098) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist on taking up for consideration the bill at this time. Efforts to defeat consideration would probably prove futile. I had hoped that the amendment which has been suggested would be accepted by those having charge of the measure, but, as I understand, they are opposed to it and are supporting the bill in its present form. I have an amendment pending which I have called to the attention of several of the members of the committee, but they are not willing to accept it. I am not a member of the committee, and I am not sufficiently advised as to the testimony which has been offered and of the questions which have been raised, but from the limited information which I possess it does seem to me that the bill ought not to receive the approval of the Senate in its present form. I have protested against it and, as indicated, had hoped that it would not be brought up for consideration at this session or, at any rate, would not be acted upon without an understanding that the amendment pending would be approved. My information concerning the questions involved, however, is not sufficient to enable me to determine definitely the merits or demerits of the bill, but it does seem to me from the facts which have been brought to my attention that the objections urged are worthy of most serious consideration.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, the bill has passed the House and has been before a subcommittee of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, and has the full approval of the Interstate Commerce Committee. As a member of that committee, I feel that it is a very fair bill. With the amendment made to the bill by the committee, I feel that it would be unfair not to consider it in this Congress. I understand that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] will be glad to explain the bill if the Senate so desires.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senate would be interested in understanding how the matter happens to arise at this time. The clerk of the committee brought to my attention the fact that the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who, I believe, is chairman of the subcommittee which considered the bill and is its sponsor, wanted it taken up. He is absent. In his absence the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] would probably be in charge of it, but he is also absent. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], chairman of the full committee, is absent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to state that my colleague would be present to be in charge of the bill except for the fact that his mother, who is very old, fell and broke her leg, and it was necessary for him to leave unexpectedly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's explanation. I happen to know that that is true. Members of the committee interested in the bill happen to be away. I know that they are interested in obtaining action on the bill. I myself do not know much about it, but I am sure it can be explained.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate. If what is desired is an explanation of the bill, I have had sufficient experience with it in the Interstate Commerce Committee to make the explanation. Of course, if the Senator from Utah intends to suggest the absence of a quorum, there is no use in my taking the time to explain it. Ten or fifteen minutes will be required to explain the bill. In its present form I think it is a meritorious bill, and ought not to have serious objection from anybody.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KING. I regret that the Senator places me in this embarrassing situation. Objections have been urged to the bill, which it seemed to me were such as to call for further consideration. I am not a member of the committee reporting the bill and do not know what facts were brought to the committee in support of the measure. I do not know what the merits of the bill are or the reason why the provision objected to was inserted in the same. I shall be pleased to have the Senator explain the reason for rejecting the view which opponents of the bill have urged.

An objection is that the bill discriminates against a number of small railroad companies, and that they will not receive the same consideration as other railroad companies, large and small. One of the companies, I might add, is functioning in the State from which I come. If the Senator will make clear that point, the justice and fairness of the bill, I may not attempt to defeat its passage.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, back in 1917 the Government took over all the railroads. In the first part of 1918—about April, I should say—the Director General of Railroads relinquished control of what are known as the short-line railroads, and they went back to their owners. Through the World War period the Government continued to control and operate the trunk-line railroads. Wages increased, and various things happened, and in 1920 the Congress, in what is known as the Esch-Cummins Act, provided for indemnity or relief—whichever one may choose to call it—for the short-line railroads and vested power in the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine the extent of relief.

In writing the law Congress used the term "deficit" in referring to the net operating income of a railroad over a period of several years. The Interstate Commerce Commission gave a certain construction to the word "deficit" which I think was a proper construction. That is to say, it was construed to mean the difference between what the railroad earned before and what it earned during the war period.

Then the Interstate Commerce Commission reversed itself. It reversed itself in a case with which I am sure the Senator from Utah is familiar, and which I am sure he will not object to my mentioning. The case arose in his State in connection with the Bingham & Garfield Railroad.

The Interstate Commerce Commission held in that case, and has subsequently held, that the deficit was not the difference between what a railroad earned during the test period and what it earned during the war period, the test period being the years 1915, 1916, and 1917. The Commission held that in order to obtain relief a railroad must have had an actual deficit in its operations.

As I am sure the Senator knows, the Bingham & Garfield Railroad is owned by the Utah Copper Co., which in turn is owned by the Kennecott Copper Co. I want the record to be clear that this is a statement from recollection. I was not prepared to make the explanation today. I am taking on this burden—if it be a burden—because some of my friends on the Interstate Commerce Committee who were in charge of the bill are absent; but I think I am familiar in a general way with the entire subject.

The Bingham & Garfield Railroad earned about 15 percent on its investment, which was regarded as an entirely adequate earning. Two or three bills were introduced in the Senate and considered by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate in this Congress, and also by the House. The bill originally introduced called for a payment in relief of certain short-line railroads, which payment would have aggregated something like $5,200,000. There was objection to that, because some of the short-line railroads were in the position of the Bingham & Garfield. They had earned an adequate return. So the matter was dropped. The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee did not feel like recommending the bill. However, the House passed House bill 10098 and inserted a provision to which the railroad in Utah referred to by the Senator objects. That provision was that no railroad should receive the reimbursement or relief if it had earned 5¾ percent on the value of the carriers' property. The reason why 5¾ percent was used was because in the Esch-Cummins Act the Congress fixed 6 percent for a period of 6 months following Government operation, after which the Interstate Commerce Commission should determine the percentage which would constitute a fair return.

The Interstate Commerce Commission fixed the rate at 5¾ percent. So the House, in framing its bill, used 5¾ percent, the figure fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under authority of Congress 20 years ago. The trouble with the Bingham & Garfield Railroad, if I may suggest it to the Senator from Utah, is that, if my recollection is correct, it earned about 15 percent.

The bill came over from the House to the Senate, was considered by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, and was reported favorably by that committee. In order to protect the Public Treasury a further amendment was made by the committee, which amendment is found on page 3, beginning in line 4. The amendment reads as follows:

Provided further, That no claim certified under this subsection shall be for an amount in excess of $150,000.

I think the Bingham & Garfield Railway and other railroads belonging to copper companies and steel companies either have collected or would collect several hundred thousand dollars each.

Under the original bill the Kennecott Copper Co., with which the Senator from Utah is very familiar, would have collected something like $1,700,000.

Mr. KING. I am not familiar with the Kennecott Copper Co.

Mr. REED. Well, the Utah Copper Co., which, as the Senator knows, owns the Bingham & Garfield and the Nevada Northern and some other railroads, is a subsidiary of the Kennecott Copper Co.

So, Mr. President, yesterday the distinguished acting minority leader, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], objected to this bill in my absence in the belief that I might have some objection to it. I did have objection, for without amendment and limitation there were unusual, extraordinary, and unreasonable payments to be made, but with the bill in its present shape, limiting the relief to any of the short-line railroads—and there are some forty-odd involved in this bill—to 5¾ percent, which is the fair-return figure fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and with the further provision which I shall ask to have inserted, that no railroad shall receive more than $150,000, to me the bill is a very fair one, and, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, desiring and intending to protect the public interest, and being fairly familiar with some of these matters, it is my opinion that the committee finally framed this bill in a way that is beyond any reasonable objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain why the limitation of $150,000 is imposed upon those who might claim some benefit under this bill? That limitation was not imposed upon many railroads that received payments out of the Treasury of the United States by reason of the taking over of their plants and operating them during the period of the war. Will the Senator also explain why he fixes the limit at 5¾-percent interest with respect to those unfortunate organizations that have not as yet received any payment?

Mr. REED. Today 5¾ percent is the limitation fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission as a fair return; and, where a railroad has already earned a fair return, certainly there is no equity in giving it more money out of the Public Treasury in addition to its fair return. Some of the railroads did earn during this period not 5¾ percent, but something like 15 percent, if my memory is correct; and the committee was unwilling to advocate a bill that would give more than a limited amount to a railroad, particularly one owned by a copper company or a steel company that made enormous profits.

As the Senator knows, the Bingham & Garfield Railway carries principally the products of the Utah Copper Co. out of Garfield, Utah. That company made enormous profits during the last World War out of copper, just as the steel companies made enormous profits out of steel. Some of these large companies, such as the Utah Copper Co. and the United States Steel Co., have what they call railroads, which are really plant facilities; they are not common carriers in the sense that they serve the general public and the general public only. They carry principally—and that is true of the Bingham & Garfield—the products of the company that owns them, and, having made enormous profits out of the products they carried on their own railroads, and, in addition having made 15 percent on the valuation of the railroads, certainly those organizations cannot come before the Congress of the United States and ask to be put on a basis with those that actually lost money and who were actually and are now actually short lines and common carriers, which are being abandoned from time to time, and which we all know are having a hard time.

Having said this much, I will be very happy to answer any question any Senator may desire to ask while I am on the floor. In my opinion, Mr. President, this bill ought to pass, and I move that the Senate agree to the committee amendment on page 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is now pending a motion to take up the bill. The motion to agree to the committee amendment would not be in order until the Senate acts on the motion to consider the bill.

Mr. REED. I am sure the Chair is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] that the Senate proceed to consider the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator, before he relinquishes the floor, another question. Was the limitation of 5¾ percent imposed upon all railroads, large and small, that were taken over by the Government of the United States?

Mr. REED. The figure 5¾ percent was fixed following the World War as a fair return by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the fact is that in the Transportation Act of 1920 Congress undertook to fix what was regarded as a fair return on the investment in transportation property. That was 20 years ago, but my recollection is—and I was on that committee and on the conference committee that wrote the bill—that 6 percent was fixed in the law at first, but that was reduced by the Interstate Commerce Commission to 5¾ percent, applying to all roads.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kentucky has stated the matter correctly. Congress, because of the necessity to fix some figure following the relinquishment by the Government of the railroads, fixed a figure of 6 percent temporarily—I think for a 6 months' period, or perhaps a year—after which it directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine what would be a fair return, and the Interstate Commerce Commission fixed 5¾ percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was a provision in the law that any excess over a fair return should be recaptured in a certain way provided by the law.

Mr. REED. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Kansas another question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KING. After certain settlements had been made between the Government and a large number of the railroads and the basis which was accepted as the basis of settlement would have applied to all, why did the Interstate Commerce Commission reverse itself so that a number of railroads—30 or 40, as I recall—were left outside, which, if it had not been for that reversal of the policy which had been pursued, would have been the beneficiaries of the provisions of the law under which settlements have been made in the case of a large number of other railroads.

Mr. REED. Of course, I cannot speak as to what was in the mind of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There was a difference of opinion in the Interstate Commerce Commission as to how the term "deficit" should be applied. I stated that in the beginning of my remarks. The Interstate Commerce Commission first applied that to be the difference between earnings during the test period, which was 1915, 1916, and 1917, and the earnings during the World War. Then the Interstate Commerce Commission held that in order to get any relief under that act and under the term "deficit" there had to be an actual operating loss.

If the Senator from Utah will just take my opinion for it, one of the reasons, possibly, was that under the former interpretation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the first interpretation, the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad, which is owned by the Anaconda Copper Co., which made enormous profits during the war on its property, and also earned 9 percent following the period of relinquishment, was awarded $487,000, which was a shocking thing to the conscience of any fair-minded man; and the Interstate Commerce Commission, believing that that was an outrageous imposition upon the Public Treasury, asked the Attorney General to sue to recover, and the lower court held that the Government should recover.

The Court of Appeals held that the Government should recover; but the Supreme Court, without undertaking to pass on the merits of the matter at all, merely said that it was a matter which was beyond judicial attention, and reversed both the district court and the appellate court.

If the Senator wants my opinion about the matter, however, it was an outrage upon the public to pay $487,000 to the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Co. I wish the Government could have recovered it, and it would have recovered it so far as the two lower courts are concerned. The Supreme Court never passed on the merits of the question at all. It merely passed upon the legal side of it.

This bill has endeavored to avoid all of those pitfalls, to do equity where equity is due, and to refuse to pay exorbitant sums to anybody. I think it is a fair bill. I had no responsibility for it. I am assuming this task in the absence of Senators who were on the subcommittee, but with whom I conferred as to the report; and I was present when the bill was favorably reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee. I may say that it meets the approval of the Interstate Commerce Committee. So far as I know, there is not a single objection from any member of the Interstate Commerce Committee to the passage of the bill in its present form; and I hope the motion of the Senator from South Dakota will prevail.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question? Will the Senator further explain why the limitation of $150,000 has been offered as an amendment? Would that limitation apply to the railroads which have been paid something—perhaps large sums?

Mr. REED. It would not. If the Senator wants to know the truth of the matter, the reason why that limitation was applied is this:

The United States Steel Corporation owns what is known as the Union Railroad Co. It has about 23 or 25 miles of track, located up around Pittsburgh, Pa. It is largely what is known in transportation parlance as a plant facility. It is not a common carrier in the sense that it is a railroad which does a general business. Most of its business is done by and for the United States Steel Corporation. Without this limitation of $150,000 the Union Railroad Co. might have been able to recover about $600,000, which would go to the United States Steel Corporation.

I objected to that.

I am stating these facts from memory. I was not prepared for this discussion. What I am stating to the Senator now is just out of my general knowledge of the situation. The bill as passed by the House would have called for about $1,900,000, of which 40 percent would have gone to one railroad which was a subsidiary and really a plant facility of the United States Steel Corporation. I am the Senator who objected to that; and to meet that objection a limitation was placed upon the amount that any railroad could recover. The bill as it now reads covers every case, I think, except this one extortionate thing. The committee wrote into the bill that we would limit the recovery of any one railroad to $150,000, which I think is fair, and which covers, I think, every case except this United States Steel Corporation road, which is really a plant facility of its own.

That is the reason of the limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10098) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 3, line 4, after the word "Act", to insert "Provided further, That no claim certified under this subsection shall be for an amount in excess of $150,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1446), be amended and reenacted by adding thereto the following new paragraphs (i), (j), and (k), as follows:

"(i) That the term 'deficit in its railway operating income,' as that term is used in paragraph (a), shall be construed to mean a deficiency or decrease in the carrier's railway operating income for that portion (as a whole) of the period of Federal control during which it operated its own railroad as compared with its average railway operating income for the corresponding portion of the test period, as held in Construction of the Word 'Deficit' (66 I. C. C. 765, 774).

"(j) That the Commission is hereby authorized and directed to reopen all claims heretofore filed by carriers in compliance with its orders or regulations issued under this section and to ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury such amounts, if any, as may be payable to any such carriers under said section 204 as hereby amended: Provided, That the aggregate of the railway operating income of any carrier during that part of the period of Federal control during which such carrier was not operated by the Director General of Railroads plus the amount certified by the Commission under this act shall not for said period be at a rate in excess of 5¾ percent per annum of the value of the carrier's property determined by the Commission under section 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act: Provided further, That no claim certified under this subsection shall be for an amount in excess of $150,000.

"(k) This act shall take effect as of March 1, 1920, but shall not be construed as extending the time for filing claims as limited by paragraph (h) of section 204, as amended by the act of March 4, 1927."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider, and to have it pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to make the motion with regard to the bill just passed, and the motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. KING. Yes.

RECESS TO FRIDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if there is nothing further, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I understand the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary situation is that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed House bill 10098.

Mr. REED. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to recess is pending, and has precedence. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Friday, November 29, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou, O Lord, art high above all the earth; light is sown for the righteous and gladness for the upright in heart. We praise Thee that the billowing tides of love and mercy are ever flowing out from the Divine heart. As Thy kingdom is neither meat nor drink, but righteousness, joy, and peace in the Holy Spirit, we thank Thee that herein is the eternal remedy for all human ills. We turn in humble appeal to our Master, who takes unbrotherliness out of the hearts of men, who are so often adrift on the high seas of a turbulent, confusing day. O Thou who art a good God, help us to acquire the best minds and the purest souls which transcend time itself. Blessed Saviour, Thou who art the basis of all worthful progress, clothe the Congress with unswerving loyalty to conscious duty; oh, let knowledge and understanding come and wisdom linger. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

STRIKE RESULTS AT VULTEE AIRCRAFT FACTORY

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, 1 week ago yesterday I called the attention of this body to the unfortunate strike at the Vultee aircraft factory in California. Following the comment which I made, other Members joined, and even a legislative committee has given attention to this subject. Informal groups have discussed the practicability of legislation to deal with strikes which take place in factories working on national-defense orders. From the White House we received news of a conference dealing with this subject.

I say to the Members this afternoon in all earnestness that information I have received indicates that prior to the calling of this strike in the Vultee factory the company itself offered wage increases amounting to $1,140,000 a year, and that when the strike was finally settled, after a 12-day tie-up of production, the increases granted in the contract amounted to $1,300,000. In other words, $160,000 in wages was given to those who had asked increases, and while the strike continued the workers suffered a net loss for the year of $43,240. It will require more than 1 year of employment to recoup the wages lost during the period of the strike.

In the meantime, the Government lost delivery of between 40 and 50 much-needed basic training planes, the Air Corps' pilot-training program was slowed down, the union suffered expense in its strike activities, the company has had expense of a wholly nonproductive nature.

This could have been avoided, with savings and benefits all around, had the dispute between the company and the union continued in negotiation, or been submitted to arbitration, with production continuing during such period of settlement. We must guard against a repetition of this situation. Congress has a responsibility. The Nation looks to us. [Applause.]

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., November 28, 1940.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: The certificate of election, in due form of law, of Hon. WILLIAM E. BURNEY as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress from the Third Congressional District of the State of Colorado, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. John A. Martin, is on file in this office.

Respectfully yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives,
By H. NEWLIN MEGILL.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, at the election this fall in the Third Congressional District of Colorado the people elected a Republican for the full term of the Seventy-seventh Congress to succeed our late colleague, Mr. Martin. They elected Mr. J. EDGAR CHENOWETH, who is a very distinguished man. [Applause.] They also elected at the same time a Democrat to fill out the unexpired term ending on the 3d of January next. That Democrat, Mr. WILLIAM E. BURNEY, is now present to take the oath of office, filling out the unexpired term of our late colleague, John A. Martin.

WILLIAM E. BURNEY, Representative-elect to the Seventy-sixth Congress, presented himself at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice that on next Monday the Committee on the Judiciary will move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6324 and seek to have concurrence in the Senate amendments.

The Committee on the Judiciary will insist that this motion is privileged; and if the opposition should make the point of no quorum and it comes to the necessity of having to have a roll call to test the question of a quorum, the Judiciary Committee is going to be prepared to do that. [Applause.] If no quorum should be developed, we will endeavor to hold the House in session until there is a quorum and this matter is disposed of.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understood, the gentleman from Texas, who is the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, made a unanimous-consent request that this bill, which is the so-called Walter-Logan bill, be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments be concurred in. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] objected. As the matter stands now, this measure will stand over until next Monday, and may I suggest that we all recognize that there are sufficient votes in the House under any conditions to pass the bill in the House, and any delay is simply inconveniencing the Members. If this bill as amended does not pass today, it will pass Monday. Nothing is gained. This should not be a political matter. The result is going to be the same whether we vote today or Monday. I do hope that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will have consideration for the other Members here and those who are not here, in view of the fact that he must know that this bill will pass on Monday, then why not today? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN rose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield with the observation that I hope the distinguished gentleman from Missouri will withdraw his objection and let us dispose of this matter today. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, when this legislation was before the House I opposed it and I am going to oppose it whenever it comes before the House at the present session of Congress unless a bill is brought in that will not have for its purpose the destruction of New Deal legislation.

One of the reasons why I opposed the legislation was that at the request of the President, the Attorney General appointed an outstanding committee, and I am sure the Judiciary Committee will agree that it is an outstanding committee, to study this very question.

The present bill was born in the mind of an enemy of this administration, who seeks to destroy the progressive legislation that we have enacted, and as far as I am concerned I feel that the welfare of the American public should be taken into consideration rather than the convenience of the Members of this House. I assure you that while I recognize the motion is privileged, on next Monday there is going to be a quorum present in this House to vote upon a motion to agree to the Senate amendments which no one knows anything about. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not have the faintest idea who the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] was referring to when he said that the administrative law bill was drafted by someone who was an enemy of this administration.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will yield, I will tell him.

Mr. WALTER. I do not yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman wants to know, I will tell him.

Mr. WALTER. I will tell you what is back of this proposition if you want to know the truth. [Laughter and applause.] The fact of the matter is that this problem was first considered by Senator GEORGE NORRIS, who certainly could not by any stretch of the imagination be accused of being an enemy of the New Deal Administration. Subsequently the Senate considered ways and means of endeavoring to curb the infringements upon all of our rights by an all-powerful bureaucracy, which if not curbed will ultimately destroy this Republic. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Missouri says that the Attorney General appointed a committee. That is true, but I will tell you that this committee has never functioned. It has met but once. The brains of the committee, or the entire committee, is one Walter Gelhorn, a young professor from Columbia University [laughter], who made a speech at the Lawyers Guild that was so radical that Ferdinand Pecora, who has never been accused of being a reactionary, withdrew from that organization. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. MICHENER. Cannot the gentleman have the time to name some more who withdrew?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman at this time.

Mr. WALTER. I withdraw the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD regarding the homestead lien act in Minnesota; and, second, regarding the high cost of transportation in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, after the disposition of the regular business and other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean after the legislative program?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. After everyting is finished and following any other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PROGRESS OF THE DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am at this time calling the attention of the membership of the House to House Concurrent Resolution 94 that I introduced in this body on November 25. This resolution provides for a joint committee composed of five members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, and five members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate. The duty of this committee will be to keep itself currently informed on all expenditures that are made under the defense program and to be advised as to the contracts that are made from time to time, and to provide general information and recommendations that may be helpful to Congress and to the people of this country in carrying on the national-defense program.

Our Government is engaged in the biggest peacetime business in its history—that of spending between fifteen and twenty billion dollars within the next few months in order to provide for the adequate defenses of the United States; for a program to defend this country against aggressor nations. It is not the intention of this resolution to interfere in any manner but, on the contrary, to see that the armament program shall be carried on just as efficiently, effectively, and speedily as possible.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress represents the people of this country. I think it is entitled to first-hand information concerning the defense program. During the past few months huge contracts have been let involving billions of dollars to be used directly or indirectly in the building of armaments of all kinds and for providing equipment that is essential to the program. I am not unmindful of the fact that Members of Congress may call and secure information concerning specific items. That is beside the point. Congress should not have to depend upon the press for its information, or read the Wall Street Journal every week in order to find out about the contracts that have been let and their amounts. Information should be provided so that Congress, or a committee representing it, may have a complete picture of the program and detailed information as to the progress that is being made from time to time. The administration and those in charge of carrying out the program should not only be glad to furnish the information but should welcome the advice and suggestions of such a committee.

Right now we hear complaints from various sources that the program is not going forward fast enough. It is alleged from other sources that huge profits are being made by those participating in the program. Why not find out about these matters before they go too far? Time after time resolutions have been introduced in this Congress asking for committee investigation of expenditures for amounts involving only a few thousand dollars. There is nothing wrong about that. But here is a situation where these matters can be brought to the attention of Congress before and while the funds are being expended. There could be no delay in a procdure of this kind. Newspapers are reporting rumblings to the effect that some of the departments of Government having charge of these expenditures do not entirely agree with others as regards certain portions of our program.

It is said that the Defense Commission is a board that acts only in an advisory capacity. It is not a creation of Congress and does not have power to act. It does not, as I understand it, even have a chairman. When members of that Commission are asked what they are going to do about a certain proposition, the reply is made that their position is only advisory and they cannot tell what may or may not be done. It may be advisable that this Commission should have some power and authority in these matters. If so, we ought to provide it. If not, let us find that out, too.

After all, to turn this huge building program over to Army and Navy officers, and even to the President of the United States, is a tremendous responsibility. It is said that a great amount of delay has come about because of disagreements between the Army on the one hand and the Navy on the other. We ought to find out about that and fix the responsibility somewhere. Heretofore, as I understand it, it has been the responsibility of the head of the Army, as well as the Navy, to recommend the best types of defense to be used, the kind and amount of armaments to be provided, as well as the number of personnel that may be needed to carry out a specific program. It seems now that we are giving them the additional authority not only to make plans, but, to a great extent, to make contracts and help carry them out. I am not complaining about that situation, but think the Congress could be most helpful through a committee of this kind. In any event, there should be more coordination between the various groups having charge of providing the huge increases in our defense system.

Our Nation is not at war, and we do not intend to get into war. We do not want to adopt a program of wartime economy, but we are going to get to a place pretty soon, I think, when it is going to be determined by someone in responsibility, for example, just how much priority is to be given the defense program in our industry. Some of these industries are building armaments for other nations. Congress should know just how that situation is being handled. In what respect are we dividing with foreign nations in the building of armaments? Another problem that is going to confront the people of this country is to determine how far the defense program is to take priority in the manufacture and production of things which are not required for our defenses. I mean the things we ordinarily use in our peacetime economy. If we were at war, that situation would be handled rather promptly. Under our present situation it is a matter that ought to have the careful attention of the Congress and the people of this country.

For example, only a few days ago, one of our industries was said to have increased its contracts for airplanes to be used for commercial purposes, to the detriment of Government contracts for war planes. These, together with many other problems, could be carefully studied by this committee, with recommendations to this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that it has become necessary to spend these billions of dollars that have been appropriated. Billions more will be expended next year. I think Congress should assume more responsibility in the carrying on of this defense program, with a view of prosecuting it as economically, efficiently, and speedily as possible.

Mr. Speaker, one thing further before I close: While Congress is providing for the great defenses we have mentioned, against enemies from without, we should not be unmindful of the grave responsibility of protecting our country from the enemies that are boring from within. We should deal with them justly, but we should also deal with them promptly.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THANKSGIVING

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, today is the last Thursday in November. Until recently this day was universally set apart throughout the land, by proclamation of the President and the Governors of the several States, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. Last year, however, the President of the United States departed from this time-honored custom and proclaimed a date 1 week earlier, as he has done again this year, giving as his reason a desire to "lengthen the Christmas shopping period."

It is not my purpose today to take exception to the President's action or to criticize his motives. He had a perfect legal right to do what he did, although there are many who might question whether a religious holiday of this character should be changed for reasons wholly commercial. I rise simply to say that, as a citizen and a Representative of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, where the custom of thanksgiving had its origin in this country, I am proud that the people of my State, along with the citizens of some 15 other States, prefer to adhere to the traditional Thanksgiving date and are today giving thanks to the Almighty for the many blessings he has conferred upon them.

His Excellency, Governor Saltonstall, of Massachusetts, in his Thanksgiving proclamation of last year, well said that—

> Not for revelry and sport, and not for the inauguration of Christmas shopping, is this day set apart.

In this materialistic age we are prone to forget the spiritual significance of our religious holidays. They have become commercialized to an extent which causes us to lose sight of their true meaning and purpose.

What was the origin of Thanksgiving Day, and why do we celebrate it? We have read in our histories that it was at Plymouth, Mass., in 1621, that a day of thanksgiving was first set apart. It originated with the little band of Pilgrims who had managed to survive the rigors and hardships of that first year in the New World. It was celebrated not as a prelude to Christmas shopping but in gratitude to God. Let me quote further from the Thanksgiving proclamation of Governor Saltonstall last year:

> Let us remind ourselves of the historical origin of Thanksgiving in America and the conditions which surrounded it. One-half of the little Pilgrim band at Plymouth had died during the preceding year. Four households were wiped out entirely, and only four households were left unentered by what Bradford called the "general sickness." They had no prosperity. Their harvest was not bountiful. Yet out of these meager remnants they made their thanksgiving, gave solemn thanks to Almighty God, and shared their scanty store with the Indians.

Since first proclaimed by Governor Bradford, of the Pilgrim colony, in 1621, Thanksgiving has been a New England custom. At first the subsequent Thanksgivings were held only for giving thanks to the Almighty as special occasions presented themselves, but in 1684 the festival became an annual one in Massachusetts, and other colonies soon followed her example.

In 1789, after the Colonies united to form our present Union, Congress adopted a resolution calling upon the President to proclaim a day of thanksgiving. In response to that resolution, President George Washington issued the following proclamation, which I shall insert at this point:

> PROCLAMATION.
> A NATIONAL THANKSGIVING.
> Whereas it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly to implore His protection and favor; and
> Whereas both Houses of Congress have, by their joint committee, requested me "to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness:"
>
> Now, therefore, I do recommend and assign Thursday, the 26th day of November next, to be devoted by the people of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being who is the beneficent author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be; that we may then all unite in rendering unto Him our sincere and humble thanks for His kind care and protection of the people of this country previous to their becoming a nation; for the signal and manifold mercies and the favorable interpositions of His providence in the course and conclusion of the late war; for the great degree of tranquillity, union, and plenty which we have since enjoyed; for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one now lately instituted; for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge; and, in general, for all the great and various favors which He has been pleased to confer upon us.
> And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beeseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions; to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually; to render our National Government a blessing to all the people by constantly being a Government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed; to protect and guide all sovereigns and nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us), and to bless them with good governments, peace, and concord; to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the increase of science among them and us; and, generally, to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as He alone knows to be best.
> Given under my hand, at the city of New York, the 3d day of October. A. D. 1789.
> G°. WASHINGTON.

In other words, I call special attention to the fact that both branches of Congress asked President George Washington to declare the date of Thanksgiving.

It was Abraham Lincoln who was responsible for establishing the last Thursday in November as the date for Thanksgiving, and the precedent he set was consistently followed by succeeding Presidents until the date was changed by President Roosevelt last year.

It seems to me that we should have retained the precedent established both by President Washington and President Lincoln.

It was pointed out to us a few days ago the many difficulties which have arisen by reason of the fact that Thanksgiving has been celebrated on two different dates during the past 2 years. Aside from this fact, our traditions are not to be lightly cast aside. We are admonished by Scripture: "Change not the ancient landmarks." I feel that the example which Massachusetts and New England offer in the retention of long-standing custom should be given very careful consideration before ruthlessly permitting it to be sacrificed for mercenary considerations.

Disrespect for custom and tradition has been given too much encouragement in recent years. How much more appropriate it would be if the people throughout our land might celebrate Thanksgiving on the same day, as of yore. And how much more significance the day would have if it were celebrated on the traditional date. It seems to me that it would be well if the Congress, in accordance with the example set in George Washington's time, would adopt a joint resolution calling upon the President to proclaim the last Thursday in November of each year as a day of thanksgiving.

In closing I desire, in keeping with the occasion, and in the spirit which led the Pilgrim Fathers to hold the first Thanksgiving Day, to insert in the RECORD the following Thanksgiving prayer, which may be found in the Episcopal Prayer Book:

Most gracious God, by whose knowledge the depths are broken up and the clouds drop down the dew, we yield Thee unfeigned thanks and praise for the return of seedtime and harvest, for the increase of the ground and the gathering of the fruits thereof, and for all the other blessings of Thy merciful providence bestowed upon this Nation and people. And, we beseech Thee, give us a just sense of these great mercies, such as may appear in our lives by an humble, holy, and obedient walking before Thee all our days. Through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be all glory and honor, world without end. Amen.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two different subjects and to include certain pertinent material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mrs. BOLTON asked and was given permission to revise and extend her own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

GOVERNMENT ECONOMY

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but call to the attention of the Members of the House the statement made by Chaplain Montgomery this morning in his prayer when he said:

Thou who art the basis of all worthful progress, clothe the Congress with unswerving loyalty to conscious duty.

It seems to me that every Member of Congress must assume his own responsibility for his action and vote in Congress. I expect to assume mine. I call the attention of the House to the big headlines that appeared in the Washington Post of Wednesday, November 27, "Roosevelt to slash nondefense budget."

I picked up the New York Times of the same day and I read a big headline, "President carves spending for all except defense."

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it is true? Will it happen? The responsibility rests upon the Members of Congress as well as on the President of the United States. I heard the address delivered here a few moments ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] in regard to the two Thanksgiving Days. A few years ago we talked about having two chickens in every pot. Then we talked about having two cars in every garage, two pair of pants with every suit. Some people want two pay days and two salaries. It seems to me that perhaps two Thanksgiving Days now would not be inappropriate, because we would have a little more time to really give thanks for the things that we have and enjoy in America. If the people of this country would give more thanks to the Almighty God for the blessings we receive, probably we would get further along. Certainly we would not complain so much when we think of and really count our blessings. I feel as if we have much to be thankful for.

The point I want to make here is the fact that the President made the statement that he is going to cut down expenses in everything but defense items for next year's Budget. I am glad that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is sitting before me at this time, because I have written him in reference to the statement that he put in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 6478, showing the amount of money we expended this year.

It is a tremendous sum of money, three times more than our revenues will amount to for the year, and in addition to the appropriations we have already made, we authorized the expenditure of over $4,000,000,000. When we try to balance our books on July 31 next we are going to find that we will be in the red so far it will be a very serious thing for this country and we will not know how we are going to get the money to balance the Budget.

For 10 years we have been going in the red from a billion and a half to four and a half billion dollars. This cannot continue indefinitely. You know it, any sensible citizen knows it. I call attention to a statement made by the President on March 10, 1933, when he said in his message to the Congress:

And on my part I ask you very simply to assign to me the task of reducing the annual operating expenses of your National Government. We must move with the direct and resolute purpose now. The Members of Congress and I are pledged to immediate economy.

The President made that statement to the Congress, and of course you all know what the Democratic platform of 1932 pledged to the country. Economy, 25 percent reduction in Government expenses. Notwithstanding those pledges you have not heard very much about economy in the last 2 or 3 years, in fact, the last 6 years, from any New Deal President or Member of Congress. You have forgotten all about that. Now the President comes back and tells the press that he is going to slash the Budget. He makes statements for publicity but he does not do what he says he will do. Why?

You know what happened in January of the present year. All the headlines of the papers were to the effect that Congress and the President would reduce our expenditures, and we would economize. Then look what the chairman of the Appropriations Committee states in his report to which I just referred. It is so far from being economical that it is just laughable. It is deplorable. It is serious. It is a crime against our children, and against future generations. It is not right, it is not just, it is not honorable, and it is not honest.

I want to know what the President means when he tells the news reporters now that he is going to slash the Budget. We are going to follow this up. God giving me health and strength, I am going to be here for the next 2 years and I am going to call this to your attention day after day after day, if it is necessary, because I believe that, as was said by the Chaplain in his prayer this morning, we should have unswerving loyalty to conscientious duty. I believe that is one of my jobs. While it is not pleasant, and while it is not wanted by the Members of the House, yet I feel that if God gives me health and strength I am going to call it to your attention. It is your duty and responsibility. Let me call your further attention to a quotation of the President at Sioux City, Iowa, September 29, 1932, and I quote from his speech:

We are not getting an adequate return for the money we are spending in Washington, or to put it another way, we are spending altogether too much money for Government services that are neither practical nor necessary. And then, in addition to that, we are attempting too many functions. We need to simplify what the Federal Government is giving to the people.

I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peacetimes in all our history. It is an administration that has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs and the reduced earning power of the people. Bureaus and bureaucrats, commissions and commissioners have been retained at the expense of the taxpayer.

And I am going to call it to your attention, Mr. Speaker, of the Appropriations Committee, because you have the responsibility and you have the opportunity to tell the members of the Appropriations Committee that they have to cut down appropriations, notwithstanding the fact that the various departments of the Government may want to increase them. I am going to look to you as an honest citizen, a man whom

I respect and honor, to show that committee that you mean exactly what the President says, and that you are going to demand that the President do that. Do not let him say one thing and do another—it is not honest or honorable to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Colorado, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman has as many votes on that committee as I do.

Mr. RICH. I have only one. You have great influence with 35 members.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let me make a suggestion. It seems to me that instead of giving a general blast every day in favor of cutting down expenses, the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to pick out the specific items he would eliminate from each of our appropriation bills. I inserted in the RECORD of October 24 my annual report as chairman of our committee for this year, including all the appropriations made from the 3d day of January last year up to that time. In that report I challenged the Members of this House who had objections to any part of that appropriation, of approximately $25,000,000,000, to specify to the House and to their constituents just what items they would cut out. I wish the gentleman, when he makes a general wholesale criticism, would pick out what he feels our committee or the House itself or the Senate ought to have eliminated. The committee nearly always reports less than the Budget recommends. The House sometimes adds large items, and the Senate nearly always does. The committee cannot override both bodies.

Mr. RICH. Let me say to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that I am just about as regular an attendant in the committee as anyone on the committee. There never was a time when we had a committee bill under consideration that I did not try to pick out some item that should be cut, and show it to the House. The gentleman knows he let items go through and did not stand up there and say that some of the appropriations ought to be cut. The gentleman let them go right through. Now I am telling the gentleman in public to do that duty. I am showing him his responsibility. I am going to look to him, because I know he is an honest and honorable citizen, and I admire him. However, there are some things that he should do that he has not done in the past. If I told the House beforehand what economies should be effected all the lobbyists in Washington for that particular thing would be after every Member of Congress.

Let me now call your attention to another statement made by the President of the United States:

> The credit of the family depends chiefly upon whether that family is living within its income. And that is equally true of the Nation. If the Nation is living within its income, its credit is good.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. If that is agreeable to the other gentlemen who have special orders to follow the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. We have lots of time, and we have nothing to do. We ought to be permitted to have all the time we want.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What was that request?

Mr. RICH. The request is granted. The gentleman is too late.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that the gentleman could speak for 10 minutes after I got through.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has already been granted.

Mr. RICH. I tried to protect the gentleman this morning and he ought to protect me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This is not protection; or maybe it is protection, after all.

Mr. RICH. I am protecting the gentleman and every citizen of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right; go ahead.

Mr. RICH. Everyone in this House ought to realize that that is my only motive. I do not have any idea of trying to criticize the President of the United States. God knows that he needs the help of everyone. I am here to give him all the help I can give him. But I want him to do as he says he will do. I do not want him any longer to say one thing and do another. It is not honest.

Let me continue with this statement of the President:

> If, in some crises, it lives beyond its income for a year or two, it can usually borrow temporarily at reasonable rates. But if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds and is willing to make no sacrifice at all in spending; if it extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay and continues to pile up deficits, then it is on the road to bankruptcy.

This statement was made by the President of the United States at Pittsburgh on October 19, 1932.

No truer statement was ever made by any man than the statement made by President Roosevelt on that occasion, but I want President Roosevelt to carry out the promises he has made. I want President Roosevelt to go over the sensible and sane statements he made 8 years ago, as well as ones he has made since that time, and I want him to do what he has stated is honorable, right, and just. I cannot for the life of me understand how he can feel that he can go on with a debt now of $49,000,000,000 and the Secretary of the Treasury asking him to increase that indebtedness $15,000,000,000 or $20,000,000,000. We must spend less, tax more, or bust.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not yield. I want the gentleman to get a little of this lesson. The gentleman needs it and a lot of you gentlemen need it.

If we are going to increase this indebtedness $20,000,000,000, then we are just about on the road to ruin. It is not going to be possible for this Nation to carry on with so great a debt. In my judgment it is so serious for the future generations of boys and girls that it seems to me that we should assume our own responsibilities, not pass it to future generations. Why, the Congressmen are just featherweights and do not amount to a tinker's hoot so far as looking after the affairs of this country may be concerned if we permit this to go on.

You know that if you are unable to meet your expenses today you should not pass that burden on to your children or your children's children. Now, what are you going to do about it? Are you going to suggest to the new, incoming Congress that you cut down expenses? What I want to know is whether the President of the United States is going to do what he said he would do—"Roosevelt to slash nondefense budget." He gets big headlines today and then he fools the people. Now, that is not honest.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. I may say to the gentleman and to the House and to the world that, in my judgment, we are going to spend whatever amount of money is necessary, and do whatever else is necessary to defend our country, our form of government, our freedom, liberties, and modern civilization on this planet. I do not believe there is going to be any limit whatever, insofar as the Congress of the United States may feel that it is necessary for us to go in order to protect our democratic form of government.

Mr. RICH. I am with the gentleman 100 percent on that.

Mr. TAYLOR. And I am just as much in favor of cutting down on the things that do not apply to national defense as is the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Thank goodness for that statement. I am going to look to that aid in the Committee on Appropriations, and every time they want to build up and increase appropriations I am going to remind you and the committee that very thing and then we will hammer them down. We will decrease departmental askings, and, with the gentleman's help and cooperation, I am sure we will succeed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE DIES COMMITTEE AND THE F. B. I.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and also to insert excerpts from certain newspapers concerning matters I am going to speak about today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, if anybody has the right to speak on the so-called Dies committee, about which I hope to make some observations today, I think I have that right, and I shall speak about the Dies committee and its activities that have been going on for the last few years.

In the first place, I want to say to this House that the attack made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] or any member of his committee, on the Department of Justice is shameful and disgraceful. I would say that I would not exchange one G-man or one man of the Department of Justice for all the Dies committee investigators that have been on his pay roll. I want to say that there is no finer nor better administrator than J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, a man of fine character, ability, and trustworthiness, so considered by all parties and administrations since I have known him in Washington. I say that every man in the Department of Justice who goes out to do his job does it honestly and faithfully and in an effort to help this country, no matter how dangerous his assignment may be. An attack on them by the so-called Dies committee is unfounded and, in my honest opinion, interfering with due process of law.

I do not believe there is any man in this House who likes to get up here and stand before this Congress and criticize any committee of this Congress, but there are times when one must speak for the good of the Congress and for the good of the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the duty of a committee making an investigation, whether it is investigating un-American activities or any other activity within the borders of the United States?

The duty of a congressional committee, as I understand it, or as I was taught it, is to make an investigation only for the purpose of bringing before the Congress legislation to remedy certain evil conditions that exist in the country. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and his committee have not brought in one single recommendation to the Congress of the United States to rid this country of the so-called "fifth columnists," may they be directed by Nazis or Communists—but all we have had was a lot of ballyhoo and some more ballyhoo to arouse the country. The committee is selling us short. They are selling us short because with the appropriation of $220,000 or $230,000 he, the chairman, should have been able to go to the bottom of things instead of going around the country making statements freely, without consideration of the opinion of his colleagues who have given him the opportunity to head that committee.

On Friday, November 22, my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] flew from Orange, Tex., into Illinois. He had discovered a great nest of espionage. He was going to disclose some very important information. He had a real spy who was going to tell us all about the Gestapo, the German secret police in this country. This so-called spy was going to crack the press and going to tell us so much about what is going on here. After this ballyhoo and these newspaper-press releases, whom do you think he brought before the committee? A man whom I threw out of my office about 2 years ago, a man whom I would not trust under oath; a criminal; a seller of information. And the Department of Justice, by the way, had his record. This man, Heinrich Peter Fassbender, that big secret-service agent of the Gestapo of Germany, is nothing but a squealer, a rat, an informer for a price. And this was the only evidence that cracked the press on November 22 about this great nest of Gestapo police that is going to destroy the United States of America.

This so-called gentleman who calls himself a secret-police agent, is about 22 years of age, incompetent, and of criminal character. He will sell you any information, even if it is perjury, if you will buy it. And this is the type of information he made so much noise about and the Dies committee fell for.

Attorney General Jackson, an able, fine American, has well said in this connection that the Dies committee is interfering with the progress and work of the Department of Justice. Let me quote some of his remarks as reported by the New York Times:

WASHINGTON, November 23.—Attorney General Jackson today accused the Dies Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities of seeking to undermine public confidence in the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which he called the "finest investigating service in the world." In at least one recent case, Mr. Jackson said, the Dies publicity had hampered the work of the F. B. I. and made its efforts fruitless.

Indicating resentment at Chairman DIES' announcement that his committee would investigate the strike at the Vultee Aircraft Corporation, the Attorney General stated that the F. B. I. already had investigated the strike and found that Communist influence had caused and was prolonging the strike.

The F. B. I. had identified the strike leaders either as members of the Communist Party or affiliated with Communists, he added, and this information had been given to the War and Navy Departments and to the National Defense Commission "so that they may take such action as may be warranted in the protection of the Government's interests."

Mr. Jackson's statement was in comment on the publication yesterday of the Dies White Paper, and he caustically accused the committee inferentially of seeking publicity and attempting to arouse public sentiment or emotion.

The activities of the F. B. I., Mr. Jackson said, must of necessity be done quickly and "should not and must not compete with the legislative committee for publicity."

Mr. Jackson's statement follows:

"I very much regret that Congressman DIES has seen fit to accompany his recent disclosures with an effort to disparage and discredit the good work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation under Director J. Edgar Hoover.

"ATTACKS" ARE DECRIED

"I have inclined to the view that there was sufficient field to warrant the publicity activities of a legislative investigating committee even if some of those activities have the effect of endangering by premature exposure the work of this Department. It would not seem, however, that such legislative activities need be accompanied by attacks on the Federal Bureau of Investigation, whose purpose in investigation is quite different from that of a legislative committee and, of course, should not and must not compete with the legislative committee for publicity.

"The fact that much of the work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is necessarily carried on quietly and without publicity does not diminish its effectiveness. For example, Mr. DIES says that next week he will investigate the strike at the Vultee Aircraft Corporation.

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation already has investigated this strike and has supplied confidential reports to the War and Navy Departments and to the National Defense Commission. This confidential report describes the Communist influence which caused and which is prolonging the strike. It identified those leaders of the strike who are either members of the Communist Party or affiliated with the Communists and the persons who are the contacts between the strike committee and the leaders of the Communist Party.

F. B. I. INVESTIGATION CITED

"While the activities of the parties involved may not constitute a Federal crime warranting prosecution, the details have been furnished to the War and Navy Departments and to the National Defense Commission so that they may take such action as may be warranted in the protection of the Government's interests.

"The Dies committee has published a report on the propaganda activities of Manfred Zapp and Transocean News Service. These activities had been under investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which was trying to complete a legal case with admissible evidence. The action of the committee made further effort in this direction fruitless, and on October 28 last, based on Federal Bureau of Investigation reports and the Dies material, the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice instituted a grand-jury investigation of Zapp, the Transocean News Service, and others, to determine whether violations of Federal law were involved. This secret grand-jury investigation is now in progress in the District of Columbia.

"At Chicago, Congressman DIES announced that Heinrich Peter Fassbender, described by Mr. DIES as a former Gestapo agent, would describe the full workings of the Gestapo in this country.

"Fassbender has long been known to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Its files contain a detailed record of his life and activities from his birth in Dusseldorf, Germany, on August 14, 1917, down to the present time. In this country he has operated under different aliases in addition to the name Fassbender. He entered the United States on August 2, 1938, jumping ship when the steamship Westmoreland, of the Bernstein Line, docked at pier No. 3 in Hoboken, N. J. He has worked in this country as a waiter in

New York City, as a taxi driver in California, and he has twice been the subject of Federal Bureau of Investigation white slave investigations. He is also suspected of having operated a confidence game.

WITNESS CALLED UNRELIABLE

"In experienced investigative circles Fassbender is known as a professional and unreliable informer. He has been known to offer to sell information on both Communists and Nazis for a price. I make no criticism of Mr. DIES for examining this witness. It may be that he may furnish information or leads which might be useful for the purposes of a legislative investigating committee, but witnesses of Fassbender's type are of limited usefulness for court purpose, and I do not feel that evidence obtained from such a source can properly be used as a springboard from which to launch an attack on the methods of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

"In the protective field the Federal Bureau of Investigation has been making a highly creditable record. In September of 1939, at the request of the War and Navy Departments, the Bureau initiated a program of surveying the protective facilities of industrial plants. The program extends to all plants in which the War and Navy Departments have a particular interest. To date, the War and Navy Departments have requested surveys of 1,214 plants.

"Surveys have been completed and reports and recommendations have been submitted, or are being submitted, with reference to 1,032 of these plants. A total of 112 plants are in the process of survey at the present time. Among the 70 plants yet to be surveyed are a number in which the survey is being held in abeyance pending completion of building programs, awaiting the outcome of labor difficulties, and for other reasons. It is anticipated that the remaining surveys will have been completed by December 1.

"The rate at which these surveys can be made is indicated by the fact that between October 22 and November 14, 668 surveys were completed.

SCOPE OF SURVEYS NOTED

"The surveys are conducted by a specially trained group of F. B. I. agents and are intended to reduce to an absolute minimum the possibilities of espionage and sabotage operations within the plants surveyed. The surveys cover the entire physical property of the companies upon the priority list and include a study of the plant police force, the communication system, the care of confidential materials, handling of mail, the issuance of identification badges to employees, a study of power lines and sources of power, as well as other sources of essential materials, the establishment of restricted areas, and all other items and factors pertinent to the proper protection of the plant.

"Anticipating increased activity in this type of work in the future in view of the present rearmament program, a course of training has been installed in the Training Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which is designed to qualify all of the special agents of the F. B. I. in this type of work.

"The Dies committee has reported on the activities of Ferdinand Kertess in the field of international business and espionage. The activities of Kertess have been under inquiry by the Department of Justice for a year and a half. Kertess was subpenaed by the Department to appear before the Temporary National Economic Committee in May of 1939 and he appeared and testified in connection with the Department's investigation of the beryllium industry. This investigation, which was the subject of public hearings before the T. N. E. C., demonstrated that the beryllium industry was subject to patent control and penetration by German interests."

HOLDS F. B. I. "FINEST IN WORLD"

"For over 2 years the Department of Justice has been investigating the penetration of foreign influence into American industry. Indictments have already been obtained in three industries. In addition, there are pending investigations in a large number of defense industries involving foreign penetration and control.

"I am disclosing these facts to reassure the American public as to the ability of the Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation to cope with any situation which may arise.

"I think it is highly regrettable that Mr. DIES should seek to undermine the confidence of the American public in the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which has long been regarded, and which I think deserves to rank, as the finest investigative organization in the world.

"The F. B. I. has gone about its task in an efficient and workmanlike manner without alarmist tactics and without sensationalism. It will continue to supply the prospective agencies and Government authorities with reliable, thoroughly sifted evidence as to subversive activities in this country. Efforts to arouse public sentiment or emotion, if that be desirable, will have to come from other sources."

I challenge any Member of the House to contradict that. Most of the information gathered by the Dies committee has been based on hearsay, and most of it had been brought to the public's attention before. There is not a scintilla of evidence that you could go before a grand jury and indict any one of the persons whom the Dies committee named in their so-called White Paper, which I had to pay 50 cents for as a Member of Congress. The Red Paper, however, which is being issued now, will cost a little more. It will be $1.25. Whoever heard of a Member of Congress, who had voted to help make this investigation at the expense of the country, having to buy a book of white or red or green or whatever kind of paper the Dies committee chooses to issue? What is the money given to the committee for? To make a study of the problem and present a report to the Congress.

Now, what did he do, my friends? If you want to know something about his investigation, you have to buy a book at $2.50. This book is known as the Trojan Horse in America. That costs $2.50. This is a report not to the Congress, Mr. Speaker, but it is a report to somebody in this country known as the so-called public suckers. And what is in this book? A lot of stuff that we had discarded in the Clerk's room when the McCormack committee filed its report in 1935.

I have noticed in the last 2 weeks that most of the members of the Dies committee were sitting here in Congress. Did they gave the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] a blank check to issue all these statements? I saw a few here last week and the week before. Have they given him a blank check to go on and issue these ruthless statements based upon no evidence? It seems that way.

If you will take the trouble to go to a newsstand and buy the magazine Friday, for 25 cents, it will give you more information about the "fifth columnists" and their un-American activities than you can find in the Trojan Horse book, the White Paper, and the Red Paper put together. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] or his committee would have followed the information contained in this magazine they would get the key to the "fifth column"; they would get at the big shots who are pulling the strings instead of picking up small fry and interfering with the work of other Government agencies that are doing an honest and serious job of investigating foreign spies in this country.

I will give him some information if he really wants to subpena the "fifth columnists." But he seems to discriminate between various types of "fifth columnists."

On November 19 I spoke on the floor of this House. You will find it in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 6636. I designated the charges that I have made with regard to un-American activities, going away back to 1933. I give you the date of the talk, the charges that I have made from 1933 up to the present time.

If the Dies committee would only follow up the "fifth columnists" I have enumerated at various times it would have no difficulty in securing legal evidence to present before any grand jury for their indictment, because they are inimical to our form of government and they are not proper people to remain in this country. But no, that has been disregarded. For the last 5 or 6 years, without ballyhoo or press releases I have been calling the attention of the Congress to what is going on. The press has not been as kind to me as it has been to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. But that does not disturb me, for I am satisfied, because at least my conscientious endeavor and honest effort was put into my work and I tried my utmost to present the true picture to the Congress and the American people.

Mr. Speaker, the information this Congress wants from the committee is the kind of legislation necessary to rid this country of these subversive groups. A few years ago I tried to establish the fact that we have in this country at least several million people who believe in dual nationality. They are both German-Americans and Fascist-Americans, but not straight Americans. I went before the Rules Committee to ask that power be given to the Committee on Immigration, of which I have the honor to be chairman, to make an investigation and to study from the files and records to be able to suggest a remedy, but we got a run-around for 1 whole year. We could not get the rule out because certain people on that committee were afraid we might show that all this scare about immigration was nothing but ballyhoo, because while the front door is being shut for decent immigrants the back door is wide open and through this back door a lot of cheap peon labor is smuggled into this country to take the place of organized American labor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman for a brief question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Could not the gentleman lay that information before the House without being chairman of the committee? Could he not put it in the RECORD?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I never asked to be made chairman of the committee and I have put a great deal of information in the RECORD at various times. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], who is a member of the committee, was jealous that I might infringe upon his investigation of un-American activities.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, the gentleman does not mean that, does he, that the gentleman from Texas was jealous of him?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know; I do not know. We will let it lie as it is. There seems to be somebody somewhere in this Congress who runs the show. The McCormack committee tried hard to get an appropriation of $40,000 or $50,000 to investigate this very question way back in 1933 and all we could get was a little $30,000. We had to go before the Accounts Committee and present evidence; we had to go before the House and submit documents and proof; yet another committee seems able to walk into the Committee on Accounts and get $50,000, $100,000—and I dare you to prove that a bit of evidence is presented by so-called committees to justify the expenditure of the money that has been appropriated for their use, and this applies to at least 10 different committees in the last 5 or 6 years.

Coming back now to what I want to bring home to this Congress: We want the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and his committee to stop their ballyhoo and present to the Congress recommendations for action and legislation. If the Communist Party is trying to overthrow this Government, let us destroy them by legislation. If the Nazis are trying to control this Government, let us pass laws to stop them.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly; I yield to my distinguished friend from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. How long has it been since the Dies committee was first given the power to proceed?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Dies committee was set up in 1938.

Mr. PATRICK. Has it brought in any bill or recommended any legislation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; not a thing; and even after reading the so-called White Paper you will find nothing recommended there. It is only a nice job of selling something that means nothing.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Can the gentleman explain to us why, if his committee has not brought in anything of value, the membership of the House continues it in force in successive years? Are we all dumb?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know. The gentleman can answer that himself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I did not think so. I thought the majority were intelligent and patriotic.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All right; all right. His committee will be continued next year. He is now asking for $5,000,000 more. He has scared the country with this ballyhoo; he has scared us. Some Congressmen even came to me this morning and said, "I do not think we can get enough votes to beat it." He has taken this Trojan horse around in the different districts until he has the people scared.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman will admit that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] is a good showman, then?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I certainly do.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this House, that, in all sincerity, in 1937 or 1938, before the Dies committee was ever in existence, I made a check-up on the Nazi Camp Nordland. I was there and was accompanied by some good people. We found that the Nordland camp was a menace to this country and a menace to the honest citizens of New Jersey. I came to this House and begged for some action. I told the Congress that the Nordland camp was located within a few miles of the Hercules powder plant, that it was dangerous to allow it to stay there. The records bear out my statement. There is something wrong in Denmark when a camp like that is established next to the largest powder plant in this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not have to tell you what happened. The place was blown up; 250 people lost their lives, property was destroyed, and the Dies committee did not even check on who the members of that bund were in the Nordland camp. What happened after the explosion?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I cannot yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I want to ask a question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to bring something home to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How do you know they did not check up?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well, I know it because they had a hearing a week or two after that in Newark, N. J. They were going to tell us who was behind this whole movement. When the executive meeting was had they brought a couple of cracks from the Nazi bund in and put them on the stand. They repeated their hash, maybe 15 times. This was just to quiet the public and to lead them to believe that they were going into this Hercules plant destruction. If they would have originally subpenaed certain groups of the Nazi Bund in New Jersey, they would have found out who the members were. They should have subpenaed all the people on the list, and investigated their activities. Of course, after the cow is gone, what is the use of the barn?

We want legislation. If it be Communists who are seeking to undermine or destroy our Government, let us destroy them first by legislation, not by publicity. If we have people who seek to overthrow our Government, let us jail them or deport them or send them back to the Feuhrer, Mr. Hitler, in Germany, or to Stalin, or send them wherever they have to go. Two years is enough of reading a lot of incompetent material. Let us get to work, Mr. Speaker, and I plead with you with all the sincerity I have at my command to forget the Dies committee.

We know now what is the trouble. We know what to do. Why not do it without more of these so-called white papers, red papers, green papers, about white shirts, blue shirts, and the dirty shirts? Let us get rid of them. We know what to do. Let us pass constructive legislation and stop scaring the people, which has been done by the Dies committee that has a blank check from the Congress.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Does not the gentleman think that all of the things he has outlined will be definitely settled at this conference on Friday with the President?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I think the Congress and the country is disgusted with what has happened. Certain things were published at Boston. The committee are denying and they are repudiating these things. Certainly they are embarrassing the administration.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Notwithstanding that, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] comes in with a resolution in January, I venture to say that the Members, who are scared and believe what he says in the newspapers, will be afraid to vote against this so-called ballyhooing around the country.

Let us be men. Let us fight the enemy within because that is the only way we can get rid of them. I will vote for any law that will destroy any man or woman who seeks to undermine this Government. I will go as far as any man in the House to rid this country of undesirables, but let us do it, Mr. Speaker. Let us stop this book writing whereby one Member of Congress has to pay $2.50 to find out what another Member of that body has done. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] seems to be much more interested in making reports to the public than he is in making his report to the Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE PLIGHT OF THE AMERICAN APPLE GROWER

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts and some records from the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the distressing situation in my section of the United States, the Northwest, due to the importation of fresh apples from Canada. This is not only depressing the price received by our American growers but is depriving many American apple producers of an opportunity to sell their crops at any price. In our district many growers have been compelled to abandon their entire crops owing to their inability to find a market. The Canadian apples, however, are coming into our markets and crowding out our own growers. The reports from the Department of Agriculture for October 21 show arrivals of 68 cars of apples in the Chicago market. On this same day there arrived from British Columbia 33 cars. The Surplus Marketing Administration has attempted to give some relief. Its work, however, is being nullified by the Canadian importations. On October 25 the Surplus Marketing Administration reported it had purchased 792 cars of apples. At the same time 485 cars of Canadian applies had been imported. Our Government is permitting foreign apples to come into our markets, supplanting the American-grown product, and the Government is taking tax dollars which come from the farmers and other taxpayers to buy up the surplus. In effect the United States is buying the Canadian apples in an attempt to aid the American farmer. It is true that we are exporting apples also to Canada. This, however, does not provide a remedy. The unequal rates of duty and of exchange operate against the American farmer. The Department of Agriculture has sent representatives to Ottawa to confer with the Canadian Government seeking a solution of the problem. No effective steps have been taken by our Government to afford protection to our growers. In the meantime their crops have rotted in the orchards. I recently addressed a protest to the Secretary of Agriculture, urging remedial measures be taken. A way out is provided by the terms of the treaty with Canada—raising the duty as Canadian currency is depreciated. No steps have been taken to bring this about. The Tariff Commission may also take action under sections 22 and 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This is not being done. The Honorable Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, in response to my protest, wrote me under date of November 26, 1940, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, November 26, 1940.

Hon. HOMER D. ANGELL,
House of Representatives,

DEAR MR. ANGELL: Reference is made to your letter of November 12, with which you enclosed a statement forwarded to you by Mr. J. E. Klahre, General Manager of the Apple Growers Association, Hood River, Oreg.

It is true, as Mr. Klahre points out, that the United States duty on imports of apples is 15 cents a bushel and that the Canadian duty is approximately 60 cents a bushel. The American rate was fixed in the 1936 trade agreement with Canada and continued in the agreement of 1939. The Canadian rate was in effect for a number of years before 1936. Notwithstanding the difference in the rates, the United States has been for many years a net exporter of apples to Canada as may be seen in the attached table.

The Department has been keenly aware of the large imports of Canadian apples this season and has recently sent two representatives to Ottawa to consult with Canadian Government officials on the subject. These representatives found that the Canadian authorities had been taking steps which appeared to be bringing matters under control. The situation as reported is described in the enclosed press releases dated November 6 and 11, and in the attached copy of Foreign Crops and Markets for November 12. Approximately 70,000 bushels have been shipped since the Ottawa discussions, leaving a balance of possibly 180,000 bushels yet to be expected. The rate of arrivals has now fallen from an earlier average figure in excess of 20 cars a day to less than 10 cars daily.

At no time has there been evidence of dumping of Canadian apples in the United States. So far as can be learned the Canadian Government has neither subsidized nor otherwise stimulated shipments.

Irrespective of Canadian imports, apple growers in the Northwest were this year faced with a difficult marketing situation owing to the prevalence of large sizes in certain varieties. The Surplus Marketing Administration has given substantial assistance through its surplus relief program. For the week ended November 9 purchases of apples in the United States amounted to 763 cars, while the total for the season up to the same date was 4,463 cars.

Sincerely yours,

CLAUDE R. WICKARD,
Secretary.

NOTE.—There are about 750 boxes per car.

Compiled from official records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations.

The following is a statement with respect to this matter I called to the attention of the Secretary:

In connection with the movement of Canadian apples into the United States the following facts are of interest:

The Canadian duty, with the dump duty included which is now in effect against apples from the United States into Canada, is approximately 60 cents a box.

The duty of the United States for Canadian apples is 15 cents.

The current quotation for Canadian dollars is 85 cents in United States currency. It is apparent that apples moved into the United States and sold, payment being received in United States money, the difference in the exchange offsets the duty of the fruit into this country. In other words, at the present time there is no duty from a practical standpoint on apples from Canada into the United States, but the Canadian duty is 60 cents plus the exchange depreciation.

Another inequality to be considered is the fact that the fruit being sold in British Columbia is sold on a delivered basis, payment being received in United States currency. The freight rate, however, is paid in Canadian currency at a depreciation of 15 percent, making another inequality which is permitted by the State Department under the present Canadian treaty.

From the beginning of the present season up to October 27, 485 cars of Canadian apples were imported into the United States. At 756 boxes each, the standard load to the car, this amounts to 366,660 boxes already shipped into this country to compete with apples grown in the United States. This is approximately three times the amount of apples shipped into the United States from Canada during all of last season. This competition is affecting prices of apples grown in this country, particularly those grown in the Pacific Northwest. The apples shipped from British Columbia are packed in standard boxes such as are used in this territory and are selected to meet the requirements of the United States markets.

The Surplus Marketing Administration, a division of the Department of Agriculture, has adopted a policy of buying part of the surplus crops of the United States to support the price level at a figure which will tend to insure to the growers of this country the cost of production for the fruit.

To illustrate what is taking place, we would cite the report of the Department of Agriculture issued under date of October 21 for the arrivals of apples in Chicago. These included arrivals over the week end not covered in the previous report. The report showed the arrival of 68 cars of apples, including 25 cars trucked in from Michigan and Wisconsin. The arrivals included shipments from the States of Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Maryland, Michigan, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. The arrivals from British Columbia on this single day's report showed 33 cars, or almost half of the arrivals from all points in the United States. It is apparent that had the Chicago market been relieved of one-third of the arrivals of apples on that day that the price would have been considerably higher, just as it was before the market was depressed by these arrivals from the Province of British Columbia in Canada.

Washington announces under date of October 25 that the Surplus Marketing Administration had purchased 792 cars of apples up to that date. It is interesting to note that at the same time 485 cars of Canadian apples had come onto the market in this country, tending to nullify the actions of the Department of Agriculture in their purchasing program. In other words, approximately one-third of this purchase money collected from the taxpayers of the United States has been wasted in taking care of a part of the surplus-apple crop of Canada. This crop has already been subsidized by the Canadian Government, and this amount of apples is dumped on the American markets to the great injury of the American producer, and particularly to the fruit growers of the Pacific Northwest.

The attention of the Department of State and the Department of Agriculture has been repeatedly called to this critical situation. If these shipments continue and Canada is allowed to flood this country with apples subsidized by the Canadian Government, at the present rate of shipment at least 1,500 cars of Canadian apples will come into this country, nullifying absolutely all that the Surplus Marketing Administration has done up to the present time to stabilize the market for apples in this country. How long will the shipment of this Canadian subsidized apples be allowed to continue?

Mr. Speaker, this acute problem facing the apple growers of my district was discussed by Mr. John C. Duckwall, regional director for Oregon of the International Apple Association, in an article appearing in the Oregon Journal, November 23, 1940. The article is as follows:

PROBLEM FACED BY APPLE GROWERS

(By John C. Duckwall, regional director for Oregon of the International Apple Association)

I wish to call your attention to the excessive importation of Canadian apples into this country and the preference given these shipments in comparison to the sale of northwestern apples on our own domestic markets.

This is not a normal movement but one caused by the dislocation of world markets as a result of the war. Last year Canada shipped 150 cars of 756 boxes each into the United States during the entire season. This year, up until November 5, 607 cars have been shipped. It is estimated that 200 additional cars will come into this country in November. In one day in October (the 21st) the Chicago market alone received 33 cars of Canadian apples. Approximately one-third of the apples received that day were from Canada. Although a committee conferred in Ottawa recently, no limitation has been set on this movement from British Columbia.

BUY TO PEG PRICE

During this time the Surplus Marketing Administration of the Department of Agriculture, to support the price of apples, has purchased 3,650 cars for relief purposes. Between 15 and 20 percent of these purchases were in effect to allow a similar amount of apples from Canada to come into the domestic markets, to the detriment of the domestic growers. The British Columbia shippers have an advantage in freight rates as a result of the depreciated exchange, and also gain in the depreciation of exchange as their apples are paid for in American dollars based on delivered prices to our markets. The duty of 15 cents per box is canceled by the exchange depreciation. In comparison, the Canadian duty, including the dumping-protection duty, at this period in the seasons is approximately 61 cents per box.

THE ARGENTINA PROBLEM

The growers of the Northwest feel that a similar condition will soon take place in early 1941 when the shipments of pears from Argentina are imported into the United States.

A further threat is caused by the uneasiness on the part of the trade throughout the country as the result of the unknown factor as to how large a volume of apples will be shipped during the balance of the season and the amount of fruit going into cold storage at the present time. This has a direct and deciding influence on the present market.

Shippers and shippers' organizations in the districts of Wenatchee, Yakima, Hood River, and Medford have protested this abnormal movement. An embargo on these shipments is not being asked, but a limitation is requested in line with former average imports. The Departments of State and Agriculture have been contacted and the representatives in Congress have been advised of the situation. Messrs. MCNARY and HOLMAN in the Senate are working earnestly to secure definite action. Representative PIERCE, of the House Agricultural Committee, has presented this matter, assisted by Representatives MOTT and ANGELL. Governor Sprague has also been advised of the situation. The Portland Chamber of Commerce, we understand, is making a recommendation for limitation of shipments. The Oregon Farm Bureau and the Associated Marketers of Wanatchee have protested to Federal authorities.

Earlier in the season representatives from the State of Washington and Governor Martin repeatedly contacted the Department of State and the Department of Agriculture in protest against excessive shipments. Senator HARRY BYRD, of Virginia, and grower organizations in that district have made protest by letter.

THREE REMEDIES AT HAND

Remedies are available for this situation if action would be taken. First, a remedy is possible under the treaty with Canada whereby the duty would be raised as the Canadian currency depreciated. This action has not been taken, and is recommended. Second, the Tariff Commission should make an immediate investigation with the thought that continued importations are reasonably certain to interfere with the Government program under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act under sections 22 and 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. We recommend that global quotas be established and that Canada, for instance, be allotted the same importations which that country has had in the past over a period of years, total shipments to be approximately the total as the average for such a period. These quotas would apply not only this season but in succeeding years, which would give protection to the American produce and would be fair to foreign imports of agricultural products. This would apply not only to Canadian shipments of apples but Argentine imports of pears, which is sure to occur early in 1941 unless some definite action is taken. Third, we believe that added legislation should be enacted to protect the agricultural interests of this country under war emergency legislation. Such legislation would enable action to be taken quickly where our vital interests were affected.

FARMERS HARD HIT BY DECLINE IN AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS

The Department of Agriculture in its report (Foreign Crops and Markets, vol. 41, No. 19, November 12, 1940) shows that while exports of nonagricultural commodities increased by 42 percent over their level 12 months earlier exports of agricultural commodities declined 47 percent. The volume of exports of all farm commodities during September was the lowest for any month as far back as 1915, when the monthly volume index was begun. The 73-percent decline in the index of the volume of total farm exports was accompanied by a 70-percent decline in their value.

The farmer has not only been deprived of his foreign market but the bars have been let down permitting the flooding of the American market with competitive agricultural products. He is not placed on a parity basis with the industrial producer. The American farmer cannot prosper until parity prices are assured to him. America cannot prosper until the farmer prospers. The plight of the apple growers is similar to that of all farmers. Twenty-five percent of our population lives on farms but receives only 6.6 percent of the national income. The farmer receives for his labor only 5 to 20 cents per hour.

Mr. Speaker, I include as a part of my remarks an excerpt from the report of the Department of Agriculture to which I have referred. (Foreign Crops and Markets, vol. 41, No. 19, pp. 713–716, November 12, 1940.) It follows:

INTERNATIONAL TRADE—UNITED STATES FOREIGN TRADE IN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS, JULY TO SEPTEMBER 1940

United States foreign trade in agricultural products in the first quarter of the current fiscal year reflected the influence of the European war even more clearly than in preceding periods. Due to unusually heavy exports of industrial commodities (mostly war materials), exports of nonagricultural commodities increased by $254,000,000, or 42 percent, over their level 12 months earlier. Exports of agricultural commodities, on the other hand, in the face of rationing in the great European markets, declined about $70,000,000, or 47 percent.

Imports of nonagricultural commodities into the United States during the 3 months advanced approximately $47,000,000, or 17 percent, over those during the like period last year. Imports of agricultural products showed a somewhat smaller increase, but this was due entirely to heavy takings of complementary agricultural products. The import value of the supplementary group, the one of direct interest to American farmers, declined $18,000,000, or 13 percent.

EXPORTS

The volume of exports of all farm commodities during September was the lowest for any month as far back as 1915, when the monthly volume index begins. The 73-percent decline in the index of the volume of total farm exports was accompanied by a 70-percent decline in their value. As can be seen in the table on the following page, every one of the leading commodity groups involved shows an important decline from the level of September a year ago, as well as from the 10-year average (1929–38). Exports of cotton (including linters) scored the highest percentage decline (86 percent), while the lowest percentage decline (35 percent) occurred in exports of grain and grain products. Exports of each one of the 12 commodities listed in the table on pages 718 and 719 declined 60 percent or more from their September level of last year, with the one exception of oranges.

The decline in cotton exports is particularly striking. Shipments of cotton (including linters) during September were lower than in any month since August 1914. Since cotton generally accounts for about half of total domestic exports of agricultural products, the rapid decline that started last February has had an important adverse effect on the total figures. Prior to that, very heavy cotton shipments (not primarily due to the effects of the war) kept the farm export total high in spite of low exports of most other leading items. The value of cotton exports during January, which was the peak month for the year, amounted to more than 60 percent of the total value of all agricultural exports. By August it had fallen to a little less than 15 percent of the total. Viewed in another light, the value of cotton exports during August shows a 94-percent decrease from the January level, while for the same 2 months the decline in the export value of all agricultural commodities except cotton was 39 percent.

IMPORTS

Imports of agricultural products, like imports of nonagricultural products, continued to show gains over last year. Improved domestic industrial activity and higher purchasing power have been largely responsible for this. The import value of farm commodities for the first 3 months of the current fiscal year was 11 percent above that for the corresponding period of 1939–40.

The most striking increases occurred in the complementary group of imports. Crude-rubber imports rose 114 percent in value, cocoa or cacao beans 113 percent, drugs 70 percent, and vegetable fibers 46 percent. The entire complementary group rose by $49,000,000, or approximately 36 percent.

The supplementary group, on the other hand, declined by $18,000,000, or 13 percent. The decline in supplementary imports was largely due to the unusually heavy decline scored in imports of sugar, although imports of a few other products (such as flaxseed, meats, cheese, milk, cattle, and some vegetables) also declined considerably.

This comparison with the July-September quarter a year ago fails to bring out a decline that took place between July and September of the current year. As a general rule, the trend of imports into the United States tends to follow that of domestic industrial activity. The decline in imports during this period, however, was accompanied by a rise in the Federal Reserve Board index of industrial production.

The import decline affected both agricultural and industrial groups, as is shown in the table on page 717. Moreover, among the leading supplementary agricultural imports the decline was fairly general. Of the 12 leading commodities listed in the table on pages 720 and 721, all except wool show a decrease from the July level. It should be noted, however, that only a few of the declines were of significant proportions. Vegetable oils and oil seeds and sugar accounted for the bulk of it.

United States imports of tung oil during September fell off, at least partly as a result of the interruption of transportation caused by war in the Orient. The importation of some of the other oils, particularly olive oil, was made difficult by the effect of similar developments in the Mediterranean area. On the other hand, large United States production of oil seeds also tended to discourage imports.

Sugar imports appear to have been affected primarily by the low prices that prevailed during the first quarter of the current fiscal year. Cuba supplies the bulk of this commodity and, because of geographic proximity, is in a position to withhold shipments during periods of relatively low prices in anticipation of more favorable marketing conditions. Moreover, since sugar imports are rigidly controlled by a quota based on calendar-year consumption, it is highly improbable that the monthly fluctuations will have any appreciable effect on the annual total.

Imports of wool into the United States during September advanced 5,000,000 pounds, or about 49 percent, over the July level. This was associated with a 27-percent rise in apparel-wool consumption in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Conference of the House, of which I am a member, in discussing the farmer, said (H. Doc. 850, 76th Cong., 3d sess., pp. 6, 7):

That while the national income during the last 30 years has increased 250 percent, from $26,415,000,000 to $67,608,000,000, the farmers' cash income in 1939 was practically the same as it was in 1909, and instead of being 16.4 percent of the total, as in 1909, the farmers' cash income from the sale of their crops had dropped to 6.6 percent. That means that 25 percent of our total population must try to live on only 6.6 percent of the total national income. Do you wonder that they leave the farm as quickly as they can get away?

That, at the same time, the small percent of the national income which the farmers receive will today buy less than it would in 1909.

* * * * * * *

Your committee is thoroughly convinced that unemployment cannot be solved, that prosperous conditions cannot be realized, merely by increasing industrial wages or merely by seeking to restore more prosperous conditions in the cities and industrial centers. Our investigation goes back over 100 years, and it appears, without exception, that whenever wages or conditions improve in the towns and cities there is an immediate and substantial rush from farm to city. That is but the human, the natural thing. Today the farmer is receiving for his crops a price which returns him a wage for his labor of from 5 to 20 cents an hour. Any man who seeks to improve his condition, who has any respect for his wife, who wants an education and decent clothing for his children, will move where he is guaranteed at least 30 cents an hour and can have the benefits of unemployment insurance and old-age security.

On the other hand, your committee is convinced that the greatest potential market in the world today is the American farmer, and that, if given a proper return for his crops, if given the purchasing power, he will go into the markets of this Nation and will make necessary the employment of millions of additional workers in our manufacturing and industrial plants. Agriculture is the foundation of all civilization; it is the rock upon which all true progress and prosperity must build; it provides the raw materials which are the basis of all industrial employment; it is the key to many of our present-day problems, including unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, aside from national defense, the Congress is faced with no greater problem than that of bringing permanent relief to the American farmer. By solving the farm problem we will in a great measure find a solution for unemployment, and we will provide markets for industrial America. We can make a start by protecting the markets for our apple growers, who constitute a large segment of the farm population. While regular channels of foreign commerce in agricultural products have been closed by the war, we should at all hazards preserve our American markets for American farmers.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include excepts from letters I have received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] stated he would vote for any legislation which would accomplish the purpose toward which he was directing his remarks. The gentleman is present and I want to ask if he has introduced any legislation of that kind.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have introduced legislation which the Rules Committee refuses to report.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Has the gentleman filed a petition with the Clerk?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I intended to file it, but it would be useless. I hope to continue fighting after January 3 next year.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman says it is useless. Is that because he doubts the intelligence and patriotism of the Members of the House, or why?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not put it that way. I have the highest regard for all Members of the House, including members of the Dies committee as far as they go as Members of the House. I am willing to go as far as the gentleman or any man in this House to rid the country of undesirables if I am given the opportunity to do it.

The Rules Committee should vote out this proposed legislation, as we asked them to do. This legislation is sponsored not only by myself but by both the Republican and Democratic members of the committee.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman think that if his legislation is good there is intelligence and patriotism enough in the House to get it out for a vote?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If we brought in a bill to do something with regard to ridding this country of the so-called "fifth column," and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] brought in a resolution, whose resolution does the gentleman think would be adopted, honestly speaking?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not speak any other way, nor do I speak other than frankly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I know it. That is why I am asking the gentleman that question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think, in view of the remarks the gentleman has made so many times and his indication of lack of faith and confidence in Members of the House, that probably, having in mind the vote on the Dies resolution at various times, they would vote for the legislation of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] if it had equal merit.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If that is so, why does not the gentleman from Texas bring it up? I will vote for it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The one matter I wanted to talk about today was an article which appeared in the Washington Evening Star recently. But before proceeding with that let me make some preliminary statements.

AID AND COMFORT TO THE ENEMY—PATRIOTISM ON BORROWED MONEY

Billions of dollars have been appropriated for national defense—all of it borrowed. For a hundred years and more, future generations will be working to make payment of the interest and principal of this debt.

A million and more young men are to be taken from their homes; conscripted for national defense—all this because, we are told, shortly a foreign enemy will be knocking at our doors, seeking to invade our land, destroy our homes, overthrow our Government.

Yet every day, as we sit here idle, an administration which proclaims the danger, whose duty it is to prepare to meet it, by its inaction gives aid and comfort to this enemy. This it does in two ways—by raising the cost of our national defense and by permitting active interference with the program for national defense.

TOO INDIFFERENT OR AFRAID TO ACT

Let us speak of the latter first. Monday, last, four Members of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], members of the majority party, rose on the floor of the House and in no unmistakable terms and in all sincerity denounced the strikes which have occurred in industries, the continuous and efficient operation of which are essential if we are to adequately prepare to meet the threatened invasion.

HALFWAY ACTION

Following that irrepressible outburst of patriotic indignation, the Judiciary Committee of the House met, and, according to the press, asked the executive department of the Government if new legislation was necessary to prevent or to end these strikes which were delaying the production of munitions of war and at least one of which, according to Attorney General Jackson, was caused and prolonged by Communists.

Forced to take notice of the fact that the Congress would no longer submit to this treasonable conduct, the executive department forthwith, through its representative, who flew to Downey, Calif., forced a settlement of the Vultee strike, but gave the credit for bringing about the settlement to a C. I. O. union official. In truth and in fact, the settlement of that strike was forced by the action of the members of the majority party, who, on Monday, served notice upon the administration that the public was fed up with its coddling of Communists and subversive groups.

FUTURE PROTECTION NOT GUARANTEED

But the settlement of this one strike does not insure noninterference with our defense program, nor does it restore to the American citizen his constitutional and his God-given right to work. When man was thrown out of the Garden of Eden there was at least a tacit promise that, instead of starving to death, he might have the right to earn his own livelihood. And down through the ages, never a tyrant, until the present day, has been foolish enough, presumptuous enough, cruel enough, to deny that right, for even the slave must eat.

Until the advent of the present "new order," the slave was permitted to take from what he produced enough to keep body and soul together, and the wiser masters permitted him enough to maintain his strength so that he might labor the longer.

But today, although men are drafted to train and fight for the preservation of our Nation, they are denied, until they have paid tribute to the modern bloodsucker and parasite disguised as a union organizer or official, the right to work for the preservation of that Nation, for the food which maintains life in their bodies so that they may serve their country.

RIGHT TO WORK STILL DENIED

Since Monday, an Executive frown settled the Vultee strike. But we have no word from the executive department, no action, which indicates that the constitutional right of the American citizen to earn his livelihood without the payment of tribute is to be restored to him.

Long years ago one Chief Executive of our Nation sent our warships to teach the Barbary pirates that they could not levy tribute upon our people. Today another Executive ignores the racketeering, the criminal acts which take from the worker a portion of his pay check as a prerequisite to rendering a needed service to his country.

Apparently, by adjourning from Monday to Thursday to Monday, and by refusing to consider proposed legislation, the Congress intends to let this procedure continue while hundreds of thousands—yes, millions—of dollars are collected from the wage earners.

This administration has often proclaimed its desire to aid the American worker. Today not only is it permitting the American worker to be exploited, a part of his pay check to be taken from him without an adequate return, but by its inaction it is hindering and delaying the prompt carrying out of our preparations to meet the enemy, who, it has told us, is shortly to invade our land, and the cost of defense skyrocketed.

To this administration let me commend the words of Emerson, who wrote—

Go put your creed into your deed; nor speak with double tongue.

WASHINGTON STAR RETRACTS

In the Washington Evening Star of November 20, the Star's reporter, Robert Bruskin, gave an account of how he obtained a carpenter's job at Fort George G. Meade, Md., where the wage is $1.25 per hour. The substance of the story was that, by agreeing to pay $57.50 to a union, he was enabled to obtain a job as a carpenter, even though he had no experience in that trade.

In a subsequent issue, the Star, at the demand of Henry W. Blumenberg, general representative of the union, retracted that portion of the story which stated that the job was obtained without a statement as to the reporter's qualifications for his job.

It appears that the reporter signed a questionnaire in which he declared that he had had 4 years' experience as a carpenter and that then he was given a temporary, rather than a permanent, union card.

Assuming that the reporter did sign a questionnaire in which it was stated that he had had 4 years' experience, it is quite evident that it was signed as a matter of routine and that the union made a practice of accepting the applicant's statement as to his qualifications, at least for a temporary job.

Perhaps one of the reasons for this willingness to accept the applicant's statement is found in the following application permit issued to Mr. Bruskin. It reads as follows:

Local No. 101, U. B. of C. and J. of A.
Application permit
Baltimore and vicinity. Phone Vernon 2814.
715 N. Eutaw St.
2299
Nov. 18, 1940.

This is to certify that Mr. Robert Bruskin has paid the amount of $——— on his application for membership in the above local union and permission for him to work at carpenter work or any of its branches is hereby granted from Nov. 18, 1940, to Nov. 29, 1940.

Balance due $57.50.

----------, Fin. Secretary.
JOHN J. MOLLOY, Bus. Agent.

Note the statement, "Balance due, $57.50." From a subsequent statement, purporting to be made by a union official and published in the local press, it appears that, under these permits, the applicant was permitted to work 3 days. If, at the end of 3 days, he was found to be incompetent, he was discharged. Under this procedure, it was stated that a thousand workers had been discharged for incompetency, although apparently granted cards by the union.

That certainly is a wasteful and expensive method of selecting workers. The thousand incompetent workers, if they received the usual pay, were entitled to $1.25 an hour, which, for an 8-hour day—and there is time and a half for overtime and double time for holidays—would mean $10 per day, or, for the thousand, $30,000 for the 3 days' work—an added burden to the taxpayer and all for inefficient service.

In the first place, why should the union be charged with the responsibility or given permission to issue permits to work on a Government job, especially when that procedure in this one instance alone, according to the statements of the union official, resulted in an unnecessary cost to the Government of $30,000 for 3 days' work on one job?

When we consider the number of jobs and the number of workmen employed throughout the country on defense work, it is evidence that there should be some more efficient method of employing those who are to receive Government wages.

NO RETRACTION ON THE VITAL ISSUE

Moreover, the real point in Mr. Bruskin's whole story is that before a man can work on a Government job he must either agree to pay or pay a fee to a union official.

Just who is this man Blumenberg? Just what sort of an organization does he represent which justifies him or it in saying to an American citizen that before he can assist in the Nation's defense program he must sign an agreement to pay or pay $57.50?

As stated in the Star's retraction of a portion of its story, "The card obtained by Bruskin is merely a temporary permit to work." Why should Bruskin or anyone else be required to obtain a temporary permit to work? Let the Star answer that question. Let this House answer it.

The Star, in its partial retraction, further states:

In actual practice, it was explained today by union representatives, an agreement between the union, construction contractor, and the Quartermaster Corps has been reached under which all applicants who appear to fill the qualifications are issued temporary permits and put to work for 3 days without collection of any union fees.

Neither a union nor its officials has the moral or the legal right to determine who shall and who shall not work in aid of the national defense. It is only because the laws of the States, of the Federal Government, and the provisions of the constitutions of States and the Nation are disregarded and strong-arm methods permitted that this practice continues.

Men who do not belong to a union are not exempt from conscription. American citizens who do not belong to the union are not exempt from taxation. Union men are not the only ones who are subject to conscription, who pay taxes. Until members of a union are willing to take over and monopolize the duty of fighting for the country, of paying the taxes which support it, there is no justification for their attempting to create a monopoly as to jobs, the right to draw a wage from the Federal Treasury.

Let the Star, the Quartermaster Corps, or the union official explain just how, if citizens who do not belong to unions are to be deprived of jobs in Federal industry on the defense program, they are to pay their share of the tax which pays the wage of the union worker.

FURTHER INTERFERENCE WITH OUR DEFENSE PROGRAM IS INTENDED

There are two significant news items in the current press. One, made by the organizer of the C. I. O., is to the effect that a drive will be put on to force southern California aircraft factories, which have some $800,000,000 worth of orders for military aircraft for the United States and Great Britain, and which employ 45,000 workers, to "raise pay * * * up to automobile wage rates."

This means that aid to Great Britain is to be hindered, the cost of the domestic defense program skyrocketed, in order that these particular men may receive a higher wage. It means that a special class of wage earners working on a defense program is to be created.

What, may I ask, is to be the wage of the white-collar worker in store, in factory, in small business, throughout this land? What, may I inquire, is to be the wage of the farmer, upon whose efforts the feeding of all of these workers is dependent?

It is all very well for the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] to say on the floor, as he said the other day, that the Vultee strike was justified because of low wages. But what about the other workers in the United States? Are the farmers throughout this land of ours to work, as many of them do work, for 10 cents or less an hour so that those in the motor industry, in the aircraft industry, may receive a minimum of 62½ or 80 cents per hour?

If the farmers of this Nation adopted the same theory and employed the same methods that some of these union officials and their supporters advocate and employ, those working in the motor industry and in the aircraft industry would find eggs costing 25 cents each and butter $2 a pound.

Let us have a little reasonableness, a little fairness, a little equality, in our program. Talk about princes of special privilege, economic royalists. Compare, if you will, the less than 15 cents an hour wage of the agricultural worker in the United States with the more than 80 cents an hour wage in the motor industry. Compare the wage received in the motor industry, in the aircraft industry, with the compensation given the conscripted man, the individual who serves his country in the ranks.

I am not talking about cutting wages. I am talking about equality of wages, and I will be glad to hear something from the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] along that line.

FURTHER SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

The other statement carried by the press, which is significant and alarming, is to the effect that a drive is to be made to organize Ford, Bethlehem Steel, and other key industries.

What is the purpose of this drive, and by whom is it instigated? Under the National Labor Relations Act as it exists today there is no doubt whatever but that any group of employees can organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. If the workers at the Ford Motor Co., at Bethlehem Steel, or in any other industry do not choose to avail themselves of the type of organization sponsored by the C. I. O., or to yield submission to the officials of that organization, why should that organization be permitted to force their views upon those hundreds of thousands of men who are now satisfied with their jobs and with their labor organizations?

Is the C. I. O. but waiting the inauguration of the Democratic Governor in Michigan in order to again invade that State, as it did in the General Motors sit-down strikes, which began with the inauguration of Governor Murphy? Is Michigan again to have an era of lawlessness, of the seizure of private property, the driving of men from their jobs, so that union officials can collect hundreds of thousands of dollars by way of dues and special assessments?

Are we to sit here idle day after day when we see plans maturing to close the plant of the Ford Motor Co., which has millions of dollars worth of orders, the execution of which is necessary for national defense? And do not forget that by labor itself—yes; by members of the C. I. O.—Ford was designated as the man who had done the most for labor in this country.

Are we to remain silent day after day while plans go forward to compel American taxpayers to give up a part of their earnings to an organization which seems to be interested only, not in national defense, not in the welfare of the country as a whole, but in obtaining for its members special privileges, compensation over and above that given to any other group?

Is the cost of our whole national-defense program to be doubled and the added burden thrown upon the shoulders of the taxpayer, who is deprived of an opportunity to serve his Government until he has paid tribute?

Is there back of this drive against Ford, against Bethlehem Steel, a deeper purpose, a purpose to cripple and render ineffective our whole defense program? Is one of the objectives aid and comfort to Hitler by the slowing up of our industries? [Applause.]

That taxpayers and citizens generally are awakening to what is happening, let me quote from just a few typical letters out of many received since Monday and which refer to H. R. 10698—the right-to-work bill. For obvious reasons the names of the writers are omitted. Quoting from these letters does not indicate that I either approve or disapprove of the writers' sentiments.

Here is one from Detroit, Mich.:

> Why don't you make the bill to cover all instead of defense programs You know there are a lot of us that are getting tired of paying the New Deal unions for the right to work. Enclosed find clipping which states that the Tennessee men are allowed to work if they can dig up $10. We in the automobile industry can work if we pay the damn New Deal C. I. O. each month. I wish you would show this letter and clipping to the President and tell him we call this New Dealisms and wish you good luck in your work.
>
> Yours truly,
> X DEMOCRAT.

The clipping is headed "Tallahoma, Tenn., November 8." It states, among other things, that more than 7,000 workmen are now employed on the Camp Peay Army cantonment project; that the weekly pay roll is expected to approximate $150,000. The initial fee for common labor has been reduced to $10 for this project, and the workmen are permitted to make this payment within 2 weeks from date of employment. The union office for skilled workmen has been forced to move three times on account of their business interfering with traffic. Seven thousand workmen, if only common labor, at $10 each, means $70,000 for the union—tribute exacted for the privilege of working on a national-defense program.

Here is one from a New York City bricklayer, who was transferred from one W. P. A. job to another. He writes:

> I was told by the bricklayer foreman that I would have to knock off because I was not a member of the bricklayers' union.

He made complaint; carried his appeal to the National Labor Relations Board; to the field officer; to the Army officer in charge; but he learned that even though he was on W. P. A. work in connection with an airport, a part of the national-defense program, he could not work unless he joined the union.

We have given many blank authorizations to the President of the United States. From what source do the union officials get their authority? Congress did not grant it to them. Did the President give it to them? Or do they just exercise it, while Congress and the executive department by their silence condone it?

Jacksonville, Fla.:

> Congratulations from a lifelong Democrat of three generations. If you can keep those disloyal ——— from their un-American principles in this day of need, I promise you I will never vote anything but the Republican ticket from this day and forever.

Baltimore, Md.:

> It certainly is time that some Member of Congress has awakened to the fact that unless we do something about these conditions very promptly and stop the present racketeering leadership, which is no doubt backed by some foreign power, this country will never be prepared for anything, regardless of the fact that we are spending billions for preparedness. There seems to be a peculiar silence in Washington.

Lynbrook, N. Y.:

> I am surely in favor of men securing a fair compensation for their labor and good working conditions, but I think that it is a disgrace for our politicians to be so controlled by labor's votes that they are afraid to come out into the open and expose the labor racket.
>
> Recently on Government work on Long Island a man had to be either a union man or make an application to join the union, pay a part of the initiation fee, and agree to pay part of each week's wages until the full amount due would be paid. Others could not get a job.
> I have served 7½ years in Government service—am one of those that joined the service and learned a trade. Do you think I could get a job without paying union tribute?
>
> In conclusion, let me state that there are thousands of men desirous of being free men in this country and feel that they should not be hampered by any organization in their right to work or forced to pay tribute to some group that they might join in labors that will uphold their principles and be of service to their country.

Montpelier, Vt.:

> A friend of mine and myself, both in our early twenties, just returned from a job-hunting expedition along the Atlantic coast. We visited Portsmouth, N. H., where they are constructing 600 houses and numerous other places, and couldn't obtain employment because we did not have the $25 to buy a union card in order to get a job.

Pittsburgh, Pa.:

> We all have to share in taxpaying and our husbands should be given a chance, at least, to show if he is able to work. A man of 50 to 55 is as able to work as a man of 40.

Oakmont, Pa.:

> I realize that some of the labor legislation now on the statute books of America has done a lot of good, but there is an urgent need for some balancing to be done.
>
> No man can tell me that because I differ with another workman in my ideas that he should have the right to stand at the entrance to my factory where we both work and prevent me from going to my job, if I choose, by threatening me or my family with a club or other deadly weapon, and not only threaten me but carry out his threats and get away with it. If he can persuade me to see his viewpoint and get my support, all well and good, but when it comes to forcing me that is not what I believe true Americanism.
> Now, then, there is the forced collection of dues to unions that claim a majority. * * * Rackets have become so prevalent in the union movement that a man that once belongs has nothing to say in a great many cases. He works on and does what he is told for fear of bodily harm. * * * The only thing I object to in your resolution, Mr. HOFFMAN, is that it only covers defense industries.

Kent, Ohio:

The Federal Government came to locate one of their shell-loading arsenals about 12 miles east of here and selected some 21,000 acres for the reservation. * * *

Applying for work, I found a notice nailed on the door of the farmhouse they were using for temporary headquarters that "only members in good standing in the American Federation of Labor would be employed."

I was told that all carpenters must pay $100 into the A. F. of L. for membership union dues besides the monthly dues before being hired, and common laborers tamping ballast under ties on the trackage being put down to service the many buildings must pay $15 and monthly dues of $2 before they go to work. No one is hired outright but works on probation for first few weeks, and if let off after a few weeks of employment, as some 40 carpenters were the other day, then the A. F. of L. is ahead $4,000.

I have no quarrel with any union * * * but I think that these Federal jobs are paid for from the taxes of our American citizens for the defense of America and that any of us should be able to be free to apply and, if found competent, should be able to find ready employment without the membership in any organization being brought into the picture. * * * I have paid hundreds, probably thousands of dollars, in taxes but must be idle.

Battle Creek, Mich.:

Positively you cannot work on the construction work at Fort Custer unless your dues are paid in full up to date. * * * I'll furnish evidence to this statement. Also you won't need to be surprised if you find the United States Employment Bureau linked in with the union, for it is; also you will find one of the heads of the union was at one time eating off welfare and picketing a job being done for the Salvation Army. I am not guessing at that either. You will easily find that many of these men who have to pay to the union need the cash to keep body and soul together. I know several laid off by the union to make room for men who were not union men yet and started in with $5 paid down, so much next pay day, and so on, until paid in full, and one fellow paid $25 union dues and earned $28 and he was out, and really, Mr. HOFFMAN, he borrowed the $25. * * * Now, how do I know all this? I am foreman for constructing quartermaster.

Tampa, Fla.:

Do you know at Tampa, Fla., months before they laid the keel of the first boats, organizers opened up an office in Tampa. The shipyard management would say, "You must go to see the union as we can't hire you." So the racketeers would then charge common labor $30 to join, then $2 a month dues. Mechanics had to pay much more.

Rockford, Ill.:

They are working the same racket, $30 for laborers to work on the job, then dues every month. Carpenters, etc., have to pay $100. Who gives these men the power to charge such a price for a man to work?

Pittsburgh, Pa.:

I am willing to take oath that every word I say is absolutely true and did happen to me. I was employed at the J. & I. Steel Corporation. This plant was and still is rolling steel for the Government. I was handed an application to join the C. I. O. with the expression that they thought I would do, provided I pay $4. I cannot go into details of my expense at that time, but hospital and doctor records will bear me out that I could not afford this amount and the additional $1 per month dues. I refused to join the C. I. O. and then the picket line was formed. I managed to get through the line three nights, but on the third night, six of these hoodlums were waiting for me outside the gate. * * * then they proceeded to freeze me out; they would not allow me to work in the mill under any circumstances. They refused to allow any of their members to speak to me or give me any line-up on jobs to be welded.

I went to the Labor Board about this, but they claim they could do nothing about it. I ask the foreman for help and he said I or the company could do nothing. I am only one of several hundred who were forced to join the C. I. O. or quit.

If it meant anything to join this outfit I would of joined but I got 99 cents per hour as a nonunion welder and the union rate in the mill is 94 to 96 cents per hour.

My forefathers fought to fill this country, and to settle this grand country and I sure do feel pretty sore that foreigners and "reds" can come and dictate to me, when I am a born citizen.

Berkeley, Calif.:

During the last World War I worked in an emergency shipyard where the selfish tyrannical unionized element virtually controlled the yard and compelled a closed shop in that wartime, when 5 good godly ship carpenters and a good foreman were compelled to leave their employment by being laid off to please the union that threatened to strike because I refused to join their organization. * * * It was a shame or a crime against national defense then as all good ship carpenters were needed then building wooden vessels. Yes, sir; at the very time, the best of that town had volunteered and gone to serve as soldiers at $1 a day wages. * * * The heroes were fighting to protect their country, and the stay-at-home union slackers or shirkers and agitators were demanding closed-shop conditions at high wages and even had an orchestra-band organized to play at the lunch room hour for their unionized enjoyment.

Also in today's mail came a newspaper clipping stating that on the Logan Heights cantonment nonunion carpenters who came from distant places to work on the Government job were stranded in El Paso:

The nonunion carpenters are unable to get jobs despite an impending shortage of carpenters—

They said.

One union carpenter wrote the press:

I have been here nearly 3 weeks, and I know several more that have been here just as long as I have, and I have never worked an hour; neither have the others I speak of.

When I first came here, the natural thing to do was to go out to the job to see when I could go to work. On the job I was told to go to the Texas State employment-service office. There I was told to report to the carpenters' local union and get a permit and not to go to the job until the union called me.

Every few days I have either called the union or went out there in person to try to find out when I could go to work, but I do not know any more about it than I did when I first came here. After I had done everything that I was told to, I figured I would go right to work, so I spent the most of my ready cash replenishing my tool chest of tools I was short on. Now I am in debt for my board and room and can't very well leave; yet I can't stay unless I go to work.

I know of men who have come from as far away as Los Angeles long after I came here, yet they are working. The reason for that is they had union cards, and a lot of the rest of us didn't. That's all right; I have no quarrel with the union. I have paid almost $200 in initiation fees myself, but don't have a card now.

BERKELEY, CALIF.

Here is one from a commanding lieutenant colonel, Inactive Reserve, Ordnance, United States Army:

On behalf of a man who was desirous of having employment in a national-defense industry, I called up the employment office of Moore Drydock Co., Oakland, whose executive officers are known to me. The employment office informed me that they—Moore's—being fully unionized, could only hire men sent to them by the unions.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the previous special orders for today I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, in this morning's Washington Post the leading editorial is a very apt and timely one, very well written, and has a great deal of meat and merit in it. At the same time, however, I think there is one generalization, or two, in the editorial that are unfortunate. Commenting upon the decision of the Supreme Court just handed down in a case arising in Harris County, Tex., it treats the practice condemned in Texas as though it were prevalent all over the South.

I quote:

By this means the Court is bringing very real pressure upon the Southern States to modify practices which all too frequently have mocked the concept 'equal justice under law.'

This may be true as to some States, but I am of opinion that there are several southern States in which there are no such practices to modify. In this opinion I may be mistaken; but even if I be, what good is done by condemning unheard States whose conduct in administering their jury laws is utterly dehors the record of the case under discussion? Does not the foregoing quotation show an error into which estimable gentlemen of the press sometimes fall by generalizing too broadly from a narrow base of one instance?

I am persuaded that there is no State—north, east, south, or west—that does not respect and seek to uphold the Constitution of the United States and every guaranty of it. When one fails in some respect, is it not sufficient to point the moral if the comment be limited to the offender? I simply rise today to call attention to the fact that where there is only one case in which the decision of the Supreme Court has recently held that the guaranty of the fourteenth amendment has been denied in one county, in one southern State, a great editor immediately condemns the whole South for such practices.

Having the honor to represent a portion of one State in the South, I feel it my duty and esteem it a privilege to call attention to the fact that the State of Alabama and many other southern States have written into their jury laws guaranties that make absolutely certain respect for every guaranty contained in the Federal Constitution.

I am not going to take up the time of the House to go into detail, because that is not of particular interest. I wish to make it clear that I subscribe very cordially to many of the expressions in this editorial. But the cap that may fit the jury commissioners of 1 county out of the 254 counties of Texas may not fit elsewhere in Texas. It may not fit the State of Texas nor any other State. I do not think there is anything in the decision of the Supreme Court which, rightly interpreted, criticizes or condemns the law of Texas, except in one respect, and that is that the law of Texas which is quoted as a footnote to the opinion leaves almost unlimited discretion to the jury commissioners, and the Supreme Court says in this case that that discretion was abused in Harris County. It may be that the discretion is too wide and deep in the Texas statute.

That is not true in Alabama and, I think, in other southern States. Our law in Alabama, which has been considered a model, and which in my deliberate judgment, after a careful study of the jury systems of every nation on earth, is the best jury law ever devised by man, specifically requires a nonpartisan, nonpolitical jury commission the members of which can have no other office and who cannot be employed in any other public office, to place in the jury box and on the jury roll for jury service, both grand and petit, every male adult who possesses the qualifications there specified, to wit, that he is a man of character and intelligence, esteemed throughout his community for his honesty, intelligence, sound judgment, and high character.

It is the precursor of "the blue ribbon jury law" of New York which is admittedly accomplishing most beneficent results in the administration of justice in that great State.

Every man who possesses those qualifications is a juror; wholly without regard to race or color. Our jury commissioners sit as a court, oath-bound, and charged with the single duty of keeping the springs of justice pure. There is no discretion in our jury commissioners. The law prescribes the qualifications of those who are to sit in judgment on their fellows. Any man who meets the fixed qualifications must be listed for jury service. Some commissioners may have been recreant to their trust. I know of no such case. But, if so, neither Alabama, nor the South, should be held accountable.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including in them the editorial, the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Edgar Smith, petitioner, against the State of Texas, and pertinent parts of the Alabama jury law.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matters referred to are as follows:

EQUAL JUSTICE

Justice in the South is being greatly strengthened by Supreme Court decisions requiring the States to grant their citizens "the equal protection of the laws." A consistent line of opinions from the high bench has invalidated convictions or indictment of Negroes by juries from which members of that race have been systematically excluded. Now the Court has gone a step further by reversing the conviction of a Negro youth in Harris County, Tex., because the local officials made only a pretense at including Negroes in grand juries.

The reasoning of the Court, as outlined by Justice Black, is unassailable. "The fact that the written words of a State's laws hold out a promise that no such discrimination will be practiced is not enough," he writes. "The fourteenth amendment requires that equal protection to all must be given—not merely promised. * * * If there has been discrimination, whether accomplished ingeniously or ingenuously, the conviction cannot stand." An essential element of "equal protection" is indictment or trial by a jury selected without prejudice against the defendant. Where Negroes are excluded from juries, or granted only token representation, the danger of unjust convictions becomes very real.

In effect the States have been put on notice that enforcement of their laws, so far as Negroes are concerned, can be attained only by systematic avoidance of racial discrimination in jury service. It is now crystal clear, thanks to the forthright stand the Supreme Court has taken, that convictions will not be upheld if any element of a fair and unprejudiced trial is omitted. By this means the Court is bringing very real pressure upon the Southern States to modify practices which all too frequently have mocked the concept "equal justice under law."

There is cause for general satisfaction every time the Constitution is thus invoked to protect minority rights. By this means the principles of democracy can be ever more firmly rooted in our political thought and practice. By this means State law-enforcement systems will be improved at their weakest points; nor should we overlook the fact that the constructive method by which the Supreme Court is dealing with this difficult problem is precisely the opposite from that prescribed by the unconstitutional anti-lynching bill. By such decisions the Court throws back upon the States full responsibility for correcting defects in their law-enforcement systems instead of breaking down that responsibility, as the antilynching bill would tend to do.

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 33. October term, 1940. Edgar Smith, petitioner v. The State of Texas. On writ of certiorari to the Court of Criminal Appeals of the State of Texas. November 25, 1940]

Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court.

In Harris County, Tex., where petitioner, a Negro, was indicted and convicted of rape, Negroes constitute over 20 percent of the population and almost 10 percent of the poll-tax payers; a minimum of from three to six thousand of them measure up to the qualifications prescribed by Texas statutes for grand-jury service. The court clerk, called as a State witness and testifying from court records covering the years 1931 through 1938, showed that only 5 of the 384 grand jurors who served during that period were Negroes; that of 512 persons summoned for grand-jury duty, only 18 were Negroes; that of these 18, the names of 13 appeared as the last name on the 16-man jury list, the custom being to select the 12-man grand jury in the order that the names appeared on the list; that of the 5 Negroes summoned for grand-jury service who were not given the number 16, 4 were given numbers between 13 and 16 and 1 was numbered 6; that the result of this numbering was that of the 18 Negroes summoned, only 5 ever served, whereas 379 of the 494 white men summoned actually served; that of 32 grand juries empanelled, only 5 had Negro members, while 27 had none; that of these 5, the same individual served 3 times, so that only 3 individual Negroes served at all; that there had been no Negroes on any of the grand juries in 1938, the year petitioner was indicted; that there had been none on any of the grand juries in 1937; that the service of Negroes by years had been: 1931, 1; 1932, 2; 1933, 1; 1934, 1; 1935, none; 1936, 1; 1937, none; 1938, none.

It is petitioner's contention that his conviction was based on an indictment obtained in violation of the provision of the fourteenth amendment that "No State shall * * * deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." And the contention that equal protection was denied him rests on a charge that Negroes were in 1938 and long prior thereto intentionally and systematically excluded from grand-jury service solely on account of their race and color. That a conviction based upon an indictment returned by a jury so selected is a denial of equal protection is well settled [1] and is not challenged by the State. But both the trial court and the Texas Criminal Court of Appeals were of opinion that the evidence failed to support the charge of racial discrimination. For that reason the appellate court approved the trial court's action in denying petitioner's timely motion to quash the indictment.[2] But the question decided rested upon a charge of denial of equal protection, a basic right protected by the Federal Constitution. And it is therefore our responsibility to appraise the evidence as it relates to this constitutional right.[3]

It is part of the established tradition in the use of juries as instruments of public justice that the jury be a body truly representative of the community. For racial discrimination to result in the exclusion from jury service of otherwise qualified groups not only violates our Constitution and the laws enacted under it,[4] but is at war with our basic concepts of a democratic society and a representative government. We must consider this record in the light of these important principles. The fact that the written words of a State's laws hold out a promise that no such discrimination will be practiced is not enough. The fourteenth amendment requires that equal protection to all must be given—not merely promised.

[4] "No citizen possessing all other qualifications * * * shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude * * *." 18 Stat. 336, 8 U. S. C., sec. 44.

Here the Texas statutory scheme is not in itself unfair; it is capable of being carried out with no racial discrimination whatsoever.[5] But by reason of the wide discretion permissible in the various steps of the plan, it is equally capable of being applied in such a manner as practically to prescribe any group thought by the law's administrators to be undesirable. And from the record before us the conclusion is inescapable that it is the latter application that has prevailed in Harris County. Chance and accident alone could hardly have brought about the listing for grand-jury service of so few Negroes from among the thousands shown by the undisputed evidence to possess the legal qualifications for jury service. Nor could chance and accident have been responsible for the combination of circumstances under which a Negro's name, when listed at all, almost invariably appeared as No. 16, and under which No. 16 was never called for service unless it proved impossible to obtain the required jurors from the first 15 names on the list.

The State argues that the testimony of the commissioners themselves shows that there was no arbitrary or systematic exclusion. And it is true that 2 of the 3 commissioners who drew the September 1938 panel testified to that effect. Both of them admitted that they did not select any Negroes, although the subject was discussed, but both categorically denied that they intentionally, arbitrarily, or systematically discriminated against Negro jurors as such. One said that their failure to select Negroes was because they did not know the names of any who were qualified and the other said that he was not personally acquainted with any member of the Negro race. This is, at best, the testimony of 2 individuals who participated in drawing 1 out of the 32 jury panels discussed in the record. But even if their testimony were given the greatest possible effect, and their situation considered typical of that of the 94 commissioners who did not testify, we would still feel compelled to reverse the decision below. What the fourteenth amendment prohibits is racial discrimination in the selection of grand juries. Where jury commissioners limit those from whom grand juries are selected to their own personal acquaintance, discrimination can arise from commissioners who know no Negroes as well as from commissioners who know but eliminate them. If there has been discrimination, whether accomplished ingeniously or ingenuously, the conviction cannot stand.

Reversed.

SECTIONS 8603 AND 8605 OF THE CODE OF ALABAMA

8603. Qualifications of persons placed on jury roll and in jury box: The jury commission shall place on the jury roll and in the jury box the names of all male citizens of the county who are generally reputed to be honest and intelligent men, and are esteemed in the community for their integrity, good character, and sound judgment; but no person must be selected who is under 21 or over 65 years of age, or who is an habitual drunkard, or who, being afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness, is unfit to discharge the duties of a juror, or who cannot read English, or who has ever been convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude. If a person cannot read English, and has all the other qualifications prescribed herein and is a freeholder or householder, his name may be placed on the jury roll and in the jury box (act of 1909, p. 305).

8605. Persons exempt from jury duty: The following persons are hereby exempt from jury duty, unless by their own consent: Judges of the several courts; attorneys at law during the time they practice their profession; officers of the United States; officers of the executive departments of the State government; sheriffs and their deputies; clerks of the courts and county commissioners; regularly licensed and practicing physicians, dentists, or pharmacists; teachers of public or private schools while actively engaged in their profession; officers and regularly licensed engineers of any boat plying the waters of this State; train dispatchers, railroad station agents, telegraph operators when actually engaged and in charge of any office; regularly licensed embalmers while actually engaged in their profession; and rural and city or town mail carriers while engaged in their work (act of 1909, as amended, 1923 and 1927).

Mr. HOBBS. In conclusion, may I not appeal to the membership of the House and to the general public, especially our friends of the fourth estate: Give us a chance. Visit upon us condemnation for our sins whenever blame is due, but be not hasty with generalizations that would bring into condemnation those who deserve none. Generalizations are not always fair, and I am sure the press always desires to be fair.

In that faith, I have the temerity to make this plea. [Applause.]

[5] The statutory scheme is set out in the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure, arts. 333–350. At each term of court, 3 grand-jury commissioners are appointed; at the time they are sworn in the judge instructs them as to their duties; they are required to take an oath not knowingly to select a grand juror whom they believe unfit or unqualified; they must then retire to a room in the courthouse, taking the county assessment roll with them; while in that room they must select a grand jury of 16 men from different parts of the county; they must next seal in an envelope the list of the 16 names selected; 30 days before court meets the clerk is required to make a copy of the list and deliver it to the sheriff; thereupon the sheriff must summon the jurors.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order heretofore entered the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

THE WALTER-LOGAN BILL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this morning following the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. SUMNERS], I stated that the bill providing for a review of administrative decisions by Federal courts was born in the mind of an enemy of this administration, a man who wanted to see the progressive laws that we have enacted destroyed. I did not at the time mention this man's name. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] challenged my statement as he did when the bill was under consideration in the House. He declined to yield to me so that I could tell him the name of the man. The name of that man is O. R. Maguire, a former attorney in the General Accounting Office. He took the original bill to the late Senator Logan, of Kentucky, and Senator Logan introduced the bill. If he was not the first, he was one of the first witnesses to appear before the Judiciary Committee of the House in support of the bill, as the hearings will show.

Mr. Maguire sold his idea to the American Bar Association. He traveled around the country making speeches in support of his idea and in my own State——

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not just now. After I have concluded my statement I will yield if I have time. He was in my own State. A scheme of propaganda seldom equalled, in my long experience in Congress, was devised to put this measure over. First the letters came to us from lawyers throughout the United States. Then the lawyers had their clients, businessmen, write us in behalf of this legislation. I received letters the same as you did. When some of the letters came from businessmen, friends of mine, I wrote them and asked them what they knew about the legislation, and invariably I received the same reply "I know nothing about it. I was asked to write the letter by our attorney."

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] stated that Senator NORRIS advocated legislation of this character. It is true that years ago Senator NORRIS expressed the idea that there should be some appeal from some administrative decisions. Senator NORRIS' idea was carried out by the Congress of the United States when the Congress itself provided for appeals to the Federal courts in reference to some administrative decisions. Those laws are still on the statute books as you are aware. I can speak with authority, because since the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] made his statement about Senator NORRIS, I have checked up, and I can say now without fear of contradiction that Senator NORRIS opposed the original Walter-Logan bill, he opposed the bill as it passed the House and he opposes the bill as it passed the Senate with the amendments the other day that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] desires to agree to.

It is not the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] who is so anxious to have this bill passed. It is the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the one who but recently changed his party affiliation from Democrat to Republican, who wants this bill passed. So far as I am concerned, I am going to scrutinize with extreme care any legislation advocated by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BRUKE] which affects New Deal legislation.

To prove my statement that Mr. Maguire is an enemy of this administration, let me say that during the 1932 campaign he went among the civil-service employees of the General Accounting Office and collected money from them for the Republican National Committee to assist in the election of Mr. Hoover. When this information reached the Civil Service Commission—it is a matter of record, I am not making these charges myself—the Commission called Mr. Maguire before them and required Mr. Maguire to return every dollar of that money to those civil-service employees. When he did they agreed to close the case, but they wrote a letter to the then Comptroller General, Mr. McCarl, himself a Republican, and instructed Mr. McCarl to advise Mr. Maguire that he should familiarize himself with the law and the rules and regulations and not again violate them, because if he did, he would be removed from the service. He remained in the service under Mr. McCarl, but when former Senator Brown was made Acting Comptroller General it was not long until Mr. Maguire resigned.

Now, what is the situation before us? We find that the Senate calls up a bill with approximately 3½ pages of amendments, pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and passes the bill without one word of explanation in reference to a single one of the amendments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Senate, remember, passed that bill without one word of explanation in the Senate by any one Senator as to the changes made in the House bill. The bill was passed after Senator BARKLEY made a statement as to why he thought it was not sound business to consider the bill at this time. It comes to us messaged over this morning, and immediately the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] asked to concur in the Senate amendments. But who knows what is in the Senate amendments? Not many Members who were here this morning knew what the Senate amendments were. Still they were ready to agree by supporting the request of the gentleman from Texas.

I realize I am in the minority. I was in the minority when I opposed this bill on the floor of the House. There are times when those in the minority are right.

I have followed the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] time and again when I thought he was right, but I did not hesitate to oppose him when I thought he was wrong; and I say now in my opinion he is wrong today when he attempts to put legislation of such vast importance through this body without due consideration and without waiting for the report of the committee which was appointed by the Attorney General at the request of the President of the United States to consider this very subject. You have not had such legislation in over 150 years. A month or two delay now surely will do no harm.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] said this special committee appointed by the Attorney General has held only one meeting. He does not know what he is talking about, nor does he know anything about Mr. Walter Gellhorn. He attacked Mr. Gellhorn when this bill was under consideration in the House. It so happens that I never met the gentleman in my life, but he did come from my home city, St. Louis. I know his mother and I know his father. He, however, has the reputation of being one of the outstanding professors of Columbia University, where he occupies a chair and where he is today. He secured a leave of absence to come to Washington to help make this investigation for the committee headed by Dean Acheson. Mr. Gellhorn has been meeting with this committee. He has been the director, I think. I say this committee has been meeting. It has met several times this month. It met during October. It met in September. It met in August. How do I know? Because since Mr. WALTER made the statement I checked up and found that it has been meeting. It has another meeting set for next week and will soon submit its report to the Attorney General.

I have checked up on the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] that Judge Pecora resigned from the Lawyers' Guild after Mr. Gellhorn had made a speech. I find it is true that Mr. Gellhorn did make a speech before the Lawyers' Guild, but I also find that it was a technical analysis of what is needed in connection with administration law. Consult those who know Mr. Gellhorn, and they will tell you he ranks among the foremost professors of administration law in the United States. One gentleman who heard that speech said he was confident if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] had heard it, he would have considered it an argument for legislation of this character, but, of course, Mr. Gellhorn at the time did not refer to this or any other bill. He addressed himself to the subject. It so happens the relations between Judge Pecora and Mr. Gellhorn are excellent, according to the information I received. Look over the high caliber of the men who make up this committee, leave Mr. Gellhorn out if you desire, and then find someone who will attack that committee. You just cannot find anyone.

The committee is now preparing its report. It was not Mr. Gellhorn's speech that caused Judge Pecora to resign. When that report is ready, of course, it will come to the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Would it not be better for us to wait until January and get the report of this committee, find out what they think should be in a law of this character, and then consider it, or go ahead and agree to three and one-half pages of Senate amendments without knowing what is in the Senate amendments and the effects they will have?

I stated that if the gentleman from Texas exercises his right on Monday, which he said he proposed to do, and asked that this House agree to the Senate amendments, I would ask that a quorum be present. I meant what I said then and I mean it now, but I urge the gentleman from Texas not to require me to embarrass so many of our colleagues who are not here by asking for a quorum on Monday. I hope that he will come here on Monday and ask that this bill be sent to conference. That is the proper procedure. Why should it not be sent to conference? The Senate, after the passage of the bill, requested a conference with the House. It was granted by the Senate. Senate conferees have been appointed and are ready to go into conference with the House. The conferees might be able to bring back some agreement that we could accept without feeling it was going to destroy progressive legislation that has been placed on the statute books in the last 8 years. One of the laws which our distinguished Speaker was responsible for—the Securities and Exchange Act—would be affected by this legislation as it stands today.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Texas will follow the usual procedure of this House in handling important legislation and on Monday ask that this bill go to conference. I am perfectly willing for the bill to go to conference. I will wait to see what is brought back here before I arrive at a decision.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. I know the gentleman wants to be fair. He made a statement awhile ago that Mr. Maguire sold his ideas to the American Bar Association. I do not know Mr. Maguire, but I do not believe the gentleman meant to say that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Of course, I did not mean he received a monetary consideration for his idea.

Mr. CHURCH. You did not mean to imply anything dishonest to the American Bar Association or to any of its members?

Mr. COCHRAN. Certainly not. When I said "sold" I did not mean to infer that he received anything. He convinced them his idea was worth supporting. By no means did I attack Mr. Maguire's integrity by that statement. Of that the gentleman from Illinois can be assured, and I thank him for calling my attention to my remark.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman opposed this bill when it was before the House?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman did so with all the might he had?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And the House passed the bill by 282 to 97.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has been here a long time, he is a very distinguished Member, he knows how to get legislation through the House, and he knows also how to kill legislation. As a matter of fact, the gentleman knows, does he not, that the very purpose of sending this bill to conference—if it goes to conference—is to kill the bill? That is what the gentleman, along with his 96 colleagues out of a membership of 435, wants to do?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will be honest with the gentleman. I would be most pleased if I could find a way to kill the bill. Let the conferees bring back a bill that is not so objectionable, one that we may be able to improve on in the future, one that will not be so obnoxious as this one, one not so drastic, and I probably would not make a point of no quorum, but I am not going to agree to two or three pages of Senate amendments that no one today knows what they are.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman wants to be fair and he is distinguished for his tolerance. He says he will be honest with me. The House required no such assurance from the gentleman from Missouri. It would be impossible for him to be otherwise now, when he realizes that 282 Members thought one way and he and a few others thought the other way about this bill. Is there not a possibility that the gentleman from Missouri and his few colleagues might be in error? Could that not have happened?

Mr. COCHRAN. There might be a possibility also that the 282 were influenced by the letters received from lawyers and businessmen, while I was not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns next Monday it adjourn to meet on the following Thursday.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a table discussed in the remarks.

SENATE

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, creator and preserver of all mankind, giver of all spiritual grace, author of everlasting life: As again Thou has folded back the mantle of night to clothe the world in the golden glory of the day, do Thou drive away all gloomy thoughts and make us glad with the brightness of hope shed abroad in our hearts by the indwelling of Thy blessed spirit. Grant that we may effectively aspire to those hitherto unattained virtues which alone can mellow our judgment and enable our lives to enforce the well-tempered utterances of our lips.

From the depths of our understanding hearts we beseech Thee to comfort and sustain, in these hours of tragic sorrow, our beloved friend and colleague and those nearest and dearest to him. May the sacrament of our sympathy be the earnest and pledge of Thy tender love as revealed in Him who bears our grief and carries our sorrows, even Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

STATEMENT OF EMERGENCY PEACE CONFERENCE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a statement of the purpose of the emergency peace conference, which met recently in Washington. The conference was sponsored by O. K. Armstrong, of Springfield, Mo., and other members of the American Legion, and was called for the purpose of organizing a vigorous Nation-wide no-foreign-war campaign.

I desire to state that I am in hearty agreement with the purposes of the conference, as set forth in their statement, and propose to do all in my power to further such a program.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is our common purpose to keep our country from involvement in war.

We call upon all patriotic American citizens to unite in an immediate Nation-wide campaign to halt our steady drift toward war.

We demand that no American boys be sent to fight in wars in Europe or Asia.

We propose to expose and combat with all our ability and vigor all propaganda designed to lead us into war and all forces seeking to foster conflict between the United States and other countries.

We call upon our Government to declare what is the geographical extent of our defense.

We insist that all who are in places of responsibility in our Government refrain from utterances and acts designed to create hostility and conflict, and that our defenses be not used to increase the danger of our participation in war.

We oppose all forms of dictatorship and seek to conserve democracy in the United States, to solve our domestic problems, and to promote peace and good will among men and nations.

O. K. Armstrong, Springfield, Mo., was elected chairman. Dr. Charles F. Boss, Jr., of Chicago, executive secretary of the Commission on Peace of the Methodist Church; Mrs. Mildred S. LETTER FROM PETER TRACY ON PENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have received from Mr. Peter Tracy, secretary of the International Association of Machinists, at Hartford, Conn., who is well known for his independence of thought and action. He writes an excellent letter expressing his views with reference to the Walter-Logan bill and other pending legislation.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS,
CAPITOL CITY LODGE, No. 354,
Hartford, Conn., November 25, 1940.

Hon. JOHN A. DANAHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We understand the Senate will have before it this week amendments to the National Labor Relations Act and the Walter-Logan bill.

We believe the National Labor Relations Act might well be amended to protect the bargaining rights of craft unions, but rather than have the act weakened by detrimental amendments we would prefer to have the law remain as it is.

We consider the Walter-Logan bill a subtle attempt to tie up by court action labor and social legislation, and we are opposed to its passage.

In our daily lives as workers our task must be completed to a reasonable degree or we are paid off. Would it not be better for the Congress to follow the same plan with commissioners or administrators who fail to follow the intent and purpose of enacted law rather than lower the high plane of social and labor legislation to the level of unsatisfactory enforcement.

We know William Green has spoken in favor of changes in the N. L. R. A., and with this stand of his we disagree.

Very truly yours,

PETER TRACY, Secretary.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROADS, HOLDING COMPANIES, AND AFFILIATED COMPANIES

Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. WHEELER and Mr. TRUMAN), from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, authorizing an investigation of interstate railroads and affiliates with respect to financing, reorganizations, mergers, and certain other matters, submitted an additional report on the Pennroad Corporation—formation and initial financing, which was ordered to be printed as part 24 of Report No. 25.

CIVIL LIABILITIES OF CERTAIN PERSONS IN THE ARMED FORCES—AMENDMENT OF ACT OF CONGRESS

Mr. SHEPPARD. I introduce a joint resolution correcting a clerical error in the printing of the Civil Liabilities Act which substitutes the word "insurer" for "insured," and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 305) to amend Public, No. 861, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved October 17, 1940, an act to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 413 of the act entitled "An act to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard," Public, No. 861, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved October 17, 1940, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "insured" where it first occurs in the second line and substituting in lieu thereof the word "insurer," so that section 413 shall read as follows: "This article shall not apply to any policy which is void or which may at the option of the insurer be voidable, if the insured is in military service, either in this country or abroad, nor to any policy which as a result of being in military service, either in this country or abroad, provides for the payment of any sum less than the face thereof or for the payment of an additional amount as premium."

The joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASES OF OIL AND GAS BY THE NAVY

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 335), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Whereas reports have been currently circulated through the public press and through other publicity media that the Navy Department has accepted bids and negotiated contracts under such bids for the purchase of fuel oil for Navy use where the accepted bids were higher than competitive bids filed by other responsible bidders; and

Whereas such current reports ascribe the rejection of lower bids to the reason that such bids covered the purchase of fuel oil from wells which are owned by the Mexican Government and expropriated from former United States owners and that such alleged facts are untrue; and

Whereas, if the reports reflect true facts, the refusal of the Navy Department to accept the lower bids adds unnecessarily to the cost of preparation for national defense; and

Whereas, if such reports are true, such refusal to consider lower bids would be in effect a partial embargo against Mexican oil effected by the Navy Department without the authorization of law and would seriously endanger our efforts to foster amity, friendship, and cooperation with our neghbors of the Western Hemisphere: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to submit a report to the Senate showing in detail the specific bids and awards in all Navy Department purchases of fuel oil, Diesel oil, aviation gas, gasoline, and other petroleum products since July 1, 1940.

THE PROCESSES OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT (S. DOC. NO. 314)

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an article by Dr. Denys P. Myers entitled "The Processes of Constitutional Amendment."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POINTS OF HISTORIC INTEREST IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL (S. DOC. NO. 313)

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, it was Ordered, That a revised edition of Senate Document No. 4, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, entitled "Points of Historic Interest in the National Capital," be printed, with illustrations, as a Senate document, and that 15,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate Document Room.

RULES AND REGULATIONS AFFECTING NETWORK BROADCASTING

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I notice in this morning's Washington Post a story relating that the Federal Communications Commission has issued proposed rules and regulations affecting the established practices of the operation of network broadcasting in this country, and on which oral argument is to be held by the Commission December 2 and 3.

I have obtained the published notice of the Commission announcing its procedure for the oral argument on the network-inquiry report. In fairness to the Commission, it should be stated that the proposed regulations have not yet received the approval of the Commission.

However, the proposed regulations are based on the report of a committee of the Commission, which report was involved in the confirmation hearings of Thad H. Brown before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee. That report was severely criticized and generally discredited because of its inaccuracy and demonstrable bias. Now the Commission has proposed rules flowing from this inaccurate and biased report. The proposed rules would strangle, if not impose a death sentence, upon the established networks, which render such outstanding broadcasting service to the people of the country, and which, in fact, are the backbone of all broadcasting service.

What is our country coming to when a commission proposes regulations in excess of its authority, though it has made no finding of abuses? To the contrary, the public appreciation of the service rendered by the networks is probably greater and more widespread than the public appreciation for any other industry.

How does the Commission, in proposing these rules, square its thinking with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States given in the Sanders Brothers case only a year ago, in which it said:

> But the act does not essay to regulate the business of the licensee. The Commission is given no supervisory control of the progress of business management or of policy.

And how does the Commission square its thinking with the statement it made in its brief in the Supreme Court case I have just mentioned, when it said:

> But the act confers on the Commission no jurisdiction whatsoever on the business in connection with which the transmitting equipment is used.

How does the Commission square its proposals with the further statement of the President of the United States in his letter of only last Tuesday to the broadcasting industry congratulating it on its twentieth anniversary? In that letter the President said:

> Your Government has no wish to interfere or hinder the continued development of the American system of broadcasting. Radio was born and developed in the real American way, and its future must continue on that basis.

Out in the West we use the expression "loco" to characterize such actions. If the Commission adopts these rules and thus strangles the service of broadcasting to the American people, it surely will have gone loco. Apparently some of its members have eaten the loco weed and have construed its strange effects as giving the Commission power far in excess of that actually bestowed upon it by Congress.

Perhaps the only cure would be a complete investigation of the Commission by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

So that all members of the Senate may know of the extreme nature of the proposals, I wish to offer for the RECORD the complete text of the Commission's public notice, No. 45189, issued yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the notice will be printed in the RECORD.

The notice referred to is as follows:

PROCEDURE FOR ORAL ARGUMENT ON NETWORK INQUIRY REPORT

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., November 28, 1940.

The Federal Communications Commission today announced procedure for the oral argument on the committee network inquiry report, made public June 12, 1940.

The hearing is scheduled for Monday and Tuesday, December 2 and 3, in Hearing Room A, Interstate Commerce Commission building, starting at 10:30 a. m.

Each party will be allowed a maximum of 1 hour of argument on the issues of fact and policy raised in the committee report. The order of argument will be as follows:

National Broadcasting Co.
Columbia Broadcasting System.
Independent Radio Network Affiliates, Inc.
Mutual Broadcasting System.
Rock Island Broadcasting Co. (WHBF).
Voice of Longview (KFRO).
World Broadcasting System, Inc.
Association of Radio Transcription Producers of Hollywood, Inc.
American Federation of Musicians.
Independent Artists' Representatives.
Associated Music Publishers, Inc.

In order to facilitate the oral argument, counsel are requested to consider the advisability and effect of the promulgation by the Commission of the following special regulations with respect to chain broadcasting. In several instances these suggestions are in the alternative, and the Commission desires to hear argument on the advisability and effect of alternative suggestions. It is to be understood that the regulations have not received the approval of the Commission, and are to be taken as suggestions by the Commission intended to focus the attention of counsel upon the issues raised in the report. It should also be understood that counsel are not in any way limited to a discussion of these regulations but may address themselves to any of the issues of fact or policy raised by the report of the chain broadcasting committee.

1–A. No licensee of a standard broadcast station shall enter into any contractual arrangement, express or implied, with a network organization which provides for or has the effect of establishing an exclusive affiliation with the network organization; or

1–B. No licensee of a standard broadcast station shall enter into any contractual arrangement, express or implied, with a network organization which provides for or has the effect of establishing an exclusive affiliation with the network organization: Provided, That such restriction shall not apply to licensees of stations located in or rendering primary service to cities receiving adequate primary service from five or more full-time stations.

2. No licensee of a standard broadcast station shall enter into any contractual arrangement, express or implied, with any network organization which gives the network organization an option on the hours of operation of the licensee's station for the broadcasting of commercial programs (a) for more than 30 percent of the converted hours of operation in any city receiving adequate primary service from three full-time stations with comparable facilities; (b) for more than 20 percent of the converted hours of operation in any city receiving adequate primary service from two full-time stations with comparable facilities; (c) for more than 10 percent of the converted hours of operation in any city receiving adequate primary service from one full-time station; (d) for a total number of converted hours exceeding by more than 25 percent the converted hours during which such licensee has broadcast commercial programs transmitted to the licensee by the network organization during the 6 months preceding the effective date of the contract.

3–A. No licensee of a standard broadcast station shall enter into any contractual arrangement, express or implied, with any network organization the terms of which exceed in duration the effective period of the license granted by this Commission. For the purposes of this section, an agreement shall be considered as exceeding in duration the effective period of the license if the agreement gives either party an option to extend the contract beyond the termination of the license: Provided, That this restriction shall not be construed as preventing a licensee from entering into a contract with a network organization a reasonable period of time, not to exceed 30 days, in advance of the expiration date of the existing contract; or

3–B. No licensee of a standard broadcast station shall enter into any contractual arrangement, express or implied, with a network organization which gives the network organization any rights with respect to the renewal or cancelation of such contractual arrangement not given to the licensee; or

4. 5. No licensee of a standard broadcast station shall enter into any contractual arrangement, express or implied, with a network organization which has the effect of or will result in the broadcasting of the programs of one network company by two or more standard broadcast stations rendering adequate primary service to the same city.

6–A. After January 1, 1942, no licensee of a standard broadcast station shall, directly or indirectly, own or be owned by, or be under common control with or have any interests in a chain or network organization: Provided, That the Commission will grant reasonable extensions of time in the event that the licensee is unable to meet the requirements of this restriction before its effective date; or

6–B. No person engaged in network broadcasting shall be licensed to operate more than two clear channel stations or more than three standard broadcast stations of all classes; or 6–C. No person engaged in network broadcasting shall be licensed to operate any standard broadcast station located in a city receiving adequate primary service from less than five full-time standard broadcast stations.

7. No licensee of a standard broadcast station shall enter into any contractual arrangement, express or implied, which prevents the licensee from rejecting, for reasonable cause, any program offered by the network organization. The contracts between station licensees and network organizations shall expressly guarantee the right of program rejection by the licensee, and the judgment of such licensee shall be prima facie evidence of the reasonableness of rejection claims.

Mr. GURNEY. I also offer for the RECORD the letter of the President of the United States to the National Association of Broadcasters, dated November 25, 1940.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT FELICITATING AMERICAN RADIO ON ITS TWENTIETH BIRTHDAY

NOVEMBER 25, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. MILLER: On the occasion of the twentieth birthday of broadcasting, I wish to extend, through you, my congratulations and best wishes to the industry. The growth of broadcasting as we know it in America has been one of the outstanding achievements of this generation. Since the days of 20 years ago, when attic experimenters tinkered with crystal sets and the reception of a distant signal was a mere novelty, the modern receiver has become a necessity in the American household.

With this fine record of technical achievement, the radio industry also has rendered excellent public service. It has brought information and entertainment of quality to the millions of American homes which otherwise could not have enjoyed such benefits. In fact, it might be said that radio has erased the old boundaries of time and space. As millions of American families gather each day about their receivers, we become neighbors in a new and true sense.

Today the need is greater than ever that broadcasting should perform its function as a medium of public information. Factual and accurate news made available to all of our people is a basic essential of democracy. Radio has done its job well in this field. Elsewhere radio and the press are instruments of the state—used by dictators without regard for truth or justice. I reaffirm to you my belief that democracy will not tolerate any attempts at domination or control by government at the free and open avenues of public information. The best assurance that this will continue to be so is the proper discharge of the public responsibilities by those who operate these media.

The nations of this hemisphere are engaged in a cooperative undertaking to keep war and aggression from our shores. It is my hope that radio will increase and continue its efforts to create a broader understanding among the people of this hemisphere. The exchange of programs among the broadcasting stations of the Americas and the origination of special broadcasts from and to our neighbors serve to strengthen the common purpose which unites us at home.

Again I felicitate the radio industry on its twentieth birthday. You have reached an amazing maturity for one so young. Your Government has no wish to interfere or hinder the continued development of the American system of broadcasting. Radio was born and developed in the real American way and its future must continue on that basis.

Sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, and to show that radio is appreciated by others than the President of the United States, I offer for the RECORD a letter written by Wendell L. Willkie, also addressed to the National Association of Broadcasters, November 26, 1940.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

LETTER FROM WENDELL L. WILLKIE FELICITATING AMERICAN RADIO ON ITS TWENTIETH BIRTHDAY

NOVEMBER 25, 1940.

DEAR MR. MILLER: Through you I would like to congratulate American radio broadcasting on its twentieth birthday and all those men and women who have achieved such a splendid and outstanding performance in bringing this medium of communication and entertainment to its present level of perfection.

Those closely associated with radio broadcasting in this country can take pride in this achievement, as well as in the fact that they have kept the ether waves clear for free expressions of all shades of thought. As one who has just come through a national political campaign as a major participant, I can bear testimony to the fairness and high sense of responsibility of those in control of our radio facilities. May it ever be so. A free radio, along with a free press, constitutes the cornerstone of a system of free men.

With very best wishes for the future of American radio, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WENDELL L. WILLKIE.

PERSONAL STATEMENT—CHICAGO TRIBUNE EDITORIAL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the Chicago Tribune which I desire to read, and upon which I desire to make some brief comments.

I have no purpose to try to rehash the recent election in the United States, nor the more remote election held in the State of Kentucky; but I am going to read this editorial in order that I may characterize it for what it is.

The heading is:

SENATOR BARKLEY'S RESERVATION

When WAYLAND BROOKS took his oath as Senator from Illinois, Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky, asserted that he was reserving the right to object later. His action was obviously based on the hope that Senator Slattery, whom Senator BROOKS defeated, will start some sort of a contest.

If there were any doubt as to the validity of Senator BROOKS' election, which there is not, Senator BARKLEY is the last man any honest Democrat would choose to dispute it. The country has not forgotten that BARKLEY'S own renomination and election to the Senate were procured by shameless bribery of the voters of Kentucky with Federal funds. It was a use of money which President Roosevelt not only condoned but brazenly recommended in his statement reminding Kentuckians of the grants that he had been pleased to bestow on his "yes man," and it was so flagrant that it aroused the indignation of a Senate investigating committee, the majority of whose members were of BARKLEY'S own party.

There is not enough partisan greed in the Senate of the United States to make successful any move to unseat Senator BROOKS for such a character as Strongbox Slattery. Slattery bears a double stigma, that of the strongbox and that of the disgraceful secret deal to keep him in office, by which a few renegade Republicans were persuaded to attempt at the last minute to knife the nominee of their own party.

In any event, the grand jury is still sitting at Springfield. It is entirely possible that Strongbox will be too busy there as a defendant to appear in Washington as a plaintiff.

Mr. President, I realize how futile it probably is for any man in public life to take notice of all the scurrilous and unvarnished lies that are printed about him; but I desire to brand this editorial, insofar as it applies to me, as an unvarnished, unmitigated, premeditated, malicious lie, and to brand the Chicago Tribune, whose editorial it is, as a malicious, hide-bound, bitter partisan liar. If I can make my language any stronger than that, I will accept suggestions from any of my colleagues.

I shall not go into the history of the election in my State to which this contemptible editorial refers. There is nothing in my public life in Washington for which I have any apology to make to anybody, and especially the Chicago Tribune. There is nothing in the conduct of my campaign 2 years ago, or at any other time, insofar as I was connected with it, for which I have any apology to make. I shall not go into that subject. It has been discussed on the floor of the Senate before and I shall not rehash it here.

The very first statement made in this editorial is a falsehood, and could have been known to be if the editor, whoever he is—whom I do not know and whose name I do not know—had taken the time and the opportunity and the trouble to investigate. The trouble with the Chicago Tribune is that it does not want the truth, and, if it ascertains it, it never uses it, and would not publish it if another course would do injustice to some Democrat.

Here is what occurred with respect to the Senator from Illinois: When he was presented in the Senate to be sworn in I rose and made this statement, which I not only had the right to do but which it was my duty to do; and I could not have done anything less in view of the statements that had been made to me. I did not say that I reserved the right later to object to his admission to the Senate. I did state—and I will read what I stated:

Mr. President, I wish simply to state that I have been informed informally that there may be some question raised with respect to this matter; in which event, of course, the Senate would not waive any of its rights with respect to the election by having Mr. BROOKS take the oath of office, as I understand. So, under the circumstances, I shall not object.

There is nothing there which intimated that I ever had any intention later to object to the seating of the Senator from Illinois. I merely wished by that remark to state to those who had brought to me informally some question about the conduct of the election in Illinois that the seating of the Senator from Illinois did not in any way militate against the Senate taking action in the future if there should be any occasion to take it. I do not know that there is any occasion; I do not know that there will be; and, so far as I am concerned, I certainly have no intention, and had no intention then, to object to the Senator from Illinois being seated, unless from other sources there should be presented here evidence that would justify the Senate in taking up the matter for investigation. So the very first statement made by this editorial in the Chicago Tribune was a falsehood, and it could have been known to be a falsehood if the editor had taken the trouble to read in the RECORD what I said.

But the Chicago Tribune takes up these observations of mine in the Senate—which were proper, I think, as will be agreed to by any Senator, under the circumstances—in order to hang on them its hat of malicious, blind, partisan, bitter criticism of me, and incidentally of the President, or vice versa, as the case may be.

Of course, I realize that it has been so long since the Chicago Tribune supported any candidate for President or any administration that did anything for the American people that it has either forgotten or ignored the technique of any candidate or any party laying before the people what he or it has done in their behalf.

In the recent campaign in the United States the Chicago Tribune, I think, will be recognized and acknowledged as the most bitter, the most ruthless, and the most unrelenting newspaper in the United States against President Roosevelt. It had the most vicious and the most scandalous and scurrilous cartoons that were published in any newspaper in the United States. The Chicago Tribune has a wide circulation in the Middle West. It has more in Illinois than it has elsewhere; and yet it has so little influence in Illinois and in its own city of Chicago, where it is published, that notwithstanding three times it has opposed the election or reelection of President Roosevelt, the State of Illinois has gone overwhelmingly in his behalf. Notwithstanding that in three campaigns it has maliciously and bitterly and scandalously opposed him, the very city in which it is published has gone in all those campaigns overwhelmingly in behalf of Mr. Roosevelt. Notwithstanding its vicious and bitter attacks upon city administrations in Chicago and its opposition to them, the same result has occurred in Chicago, where it is published; and the most thunderous applause that any speaker in Chicago can obtain, no matter what subject he is discussing, is to denounce the Chicago Tribune in the very city in which it is published.

I have no knowledge about the campaign in Illinois, and nothing that I say here is intended as in any way a reflection upon the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS]. I hope that he and I, so long as we are both Senators, shall be friends, and that we shall have in and for each other the mutual confidence and respect that ought to prevail among Senators. But I cannot, Mr. President, ignore this contemptible editorial in the Chicago Tribune and the basis of it. All my life I have been fighting, in public and private life, for honest and clean elections and against corruption; and I have been more consistently active in that behalf than have all those who have been connected with the Chicago Tribune ever since I have known anything about it.

I do not wish to make any unnecessary statements about the recent election in which President Roosevelt and Mr. Willkie were involved, but it is a matter of common knowledge that more money, collected from more devious sources, was spent in more different ways to defeat Mr. Roosevelt during the last campaign than was ever expended or collected in the history of the United States in any previous campaign. If Mark Hanna's spirit broods over the affairs of our country and the details of the actions of men, and takes any interest now in the elections held in this country, it will become green with envy over what happened last year; and it might be interesting to know to what extent the Chicago Tribune or those who are connected with it participated in the collection and expenditure of the enormous campaign fund which was expended. It was impossible to travel anywhere in the United States without seeing evidences of it.

Mr. President, in behalf of the very political purity and decency for which the United States Senate stands, and for which I believe every Senator here stands, I hope some way will be found to ascertain the amount that was really collected and expended in the recent campaign and the sources of its collection.

I served in the Senate with the former Senator from Illinois, Mr. Slattery. I entertained for him—and I believe I can say truthfully that every Member of the Senate of the United States entertained for him—the highest admiration and respect. I think he had the confidence and the respect of Members of this body on both sides, and I believe that I can truthfully state that as a result of his conduct and demeanor, his bearing, and his demonstrated ability, during his short service in this body, no man attained a position commanding more unanimous respect and confidence of the Members with whom he served than did Senator Slattery. I feel that that statement is due him from me, and I believe that I but express the views of every Member of this body, without regard to politics.

I have no knowledge concerning the things about which this editorial comments maliciously. It seems to gloat over the fact that the grand jury is still in session in Springfield, and it gloated over it during the campaign. It may be that its gloating, connected with the operations of the grand jury about a personal matter, contributed to the defeat of Senator Slattery. I do not know about that. I do know that some publicity was given to the fact that the grand jury was in session. It might be interesting to know why these matters were aired only on the eve of an election in which he was involved.

The editorial refers to some mysterious secret deal in which an effort was being made to reelect Senator Slattery. I venture the suggestion that there is not the slightest foundation in fact for the assertion that there was any secret deal or any other kind of deal to elect Mr. Slattery to the Senate. Of course, the editorial refers to the attitude of the Chicago Daily News, which is owned and operated by the present Secretary of the Navy, Col. Frank Knox, who, although a Republican, and although he supported Mr. Willkie and his paper supported Mr. Willkie, came out in an editorial a week or 10 days before the election in behalf of Senator Slattery as against his opponent. And because he did that he is denounced in this editorial as a renegade Republican.

Mr. President, in the opinion of the Chicago Tribune, any Republican who votes for a Democrat becomes immediately and automatically a renegade Republican, but if any Democrat deserts his own party and votes the Republican ticket, the paper takes him to its arms, and on the front pages holds him up as a patriot, and as a paragon of all virtues. It is a bad rule that does not work both ways.

Mr. President, I do not like to use the term "renegade" with respect to anyone. Colonel Knox is an honored man. He was a Republican candidate for Vice President, and he made a dignified and clean race for that office. He was handicapped by his running mate at the time, and by the conditions then existing which resulted in the overwhelming reelection of President Roosevelt. He was patriotic enough, in the present crisis of our Nation's history, to abandon his partisanship, to the extent that he accepted a Cabinet place under Mr. Roosevelt, but announced when he did so that he was not surrendering his political views; that he was doing it in order to serve his country. He is serving his country eminently, and to the satisfaction of the American people.

If Colonel Knox and those who are associated with him in the operation of the Chicago Daily News became renegades, disgraceful, and contemptible, beneath the notice of great patriots such as the Chicago Tribune, because they supported Mr. Slattery for the Senate, I wonder if the Chicago Tribune would publish a list of the prominent Democrats in the United States who supported Mr. Willkie, and write editorials condemning them, or denouncing them as renegade Democrats who were welcomed during the campaign in the cloisters of the Republican candidate for President.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. As the Senator knows, I happen to live in the State adjoining Illinois, where the Chicago Tribune is published in Chicago. I do not think the Senator should concern himself much about what the venal, mendacious, low-lived, racketeering Chicago Tribune has to say about anyone. No one in that section of the country pays any attention to it. In the election just held we carried Lake County, which lies immediately adjoining Chicago in Indiana, by a larger majority than at any other time except once in all its history. I carried it by 5,353 in 1934 and I carried it by almost 27,000 in the recent election. So the people who reside in Lake County, Ind., next door to Chicago, know the Chicago Tribune for what it is, and no one in that section ever pays any attention to the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that, and I stated a while ago that it had so little influence that it could not carry either its State or its city against the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I think we find ourselves in a situation and in a posture in this country when men in public life cannot completely ignore the malicious efforts of those who are bitterly opposed to them, and those who do not represent or speak the truth, to poison the minds of the American people concerning those attempting to serve them in public office. I have always been a believer in the freedom of the press. I have fought all my life not only for the freedom of the press, but for the freedom of assembly and the freedom of speech, and I would be the last man to vote for any legislation which would handicap or in any way hinder freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly, of worship, or any other of the freedoms which we enjoy in the United States. But there is no greater disservice, there is no more contemptible disservice, than that rendered in the United States by that part of the press which seeks deliberately, consistently, and habitually to break down the confidence of the people of the United States in those whom they have trusted and those who are attempting to serve them.

I am not making these remarks by reason of any personal feeling. I do not care what the Chicago Tribune thinks of me. I wanted to have the editorial printed in the RECORD to show what it thinks of me in order that I might say what I think of it. Having said what I think of it, I now, as is said in the Federal Trade Commission, for the time being cease and desist. I thank the Chair and the Senate for the courtesy with which they have listened to my remarks.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph Warren Madden, of Pennsylvania, to be a judge of the United States Court of Claims, vice Green, retired.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of William L. Galloway to be postmaster at Arcadia, La., in place of W. L. Galloway.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report certain nominations in the Army, and later in the present session I shall ask for their consideration.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably without amendment Executive Q, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, a supplementary extradition convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Colombia signed at Bogota on September 9, 1940, and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 14) thereon.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations I submit a favorable report on the nomination of Admiral William D. Leahy, of Georgia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to France, vice William C. Bullitt, resigned.

I also submit a favorable report from the same committee on the nomination of John Campbell White, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1, serving as diplomatic agent and consul general at Tangier, Morocco, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Haiti.

I ask that the reports be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the calendar.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ernest Muster, to be postmaster at East Bernstadt, Ky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that for some time there has been a vacancy in the postmastership the nomination for which has just been confirmed, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified of the confirmation.

That concludes the calendar.

JOSEPH WARREN MADDEN

Mr. MILLER. From the Committee on the Judiciary I have today reported favorably the nomination of Joseph Warren Madden to be a judge of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BARKLEY. That report is not on the calendar. It is understood that it was submitted today by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so understood by the Chair. Unless request is made for immediate consideration of the nomination, and the request is granted, the nomination automatically goes to the calendar.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to submit the request that the nomination be now presently considered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The report will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, how far I should be heard and tolerated at this juncture I am not competent to judge, and I confess to some embarrassment in speaking now. It will not be forgotten that 84 Senators, in fact, all Senators in Washington at that time, signed a petition, without my knowledge or consent, asking that I be appointed a judge of the United States Court of Claims. The President, for good reason, reason which I approve, did not see fit to make that nomination, but has sent in the nomination of Mr. Madden, and I am perfectly reconciled. What little disappointment I could have felt—and I felt none—is swallowed up by the circumstance that the nominee, Mr. Madden, is a gentleman of capability, experience, courage, and high character; and I wish, politely and respectfully, of course, to express the hope that Mr. Madden's nomination will be confirmed at an early date. It would be the gracious thing for the Senate to do. Whatever private or official views Mr. Madden may have entertained in another duty or another place would not influence him in the performance of his duties as a judicial officer. I have much faith in his competency, in his character, and in his courage. I trust that at the appropriate time, if it may not be done today, the nomination of Mr. Madden to this judgeship of the Court of Claims will be confirmed.

I now take the opportunity to thank the Senators—and they embrace all those who were in the city at that time—who signed the petition asking that I be appointed a judge of the Court of Claims. My gratitude to them is very real, but I know that they would wish me to do the gracious thing. Why not, therefore, confirm the nomination of this gentleman, since there is nothing against his character or his attainments? He is a man of good repute. If confirmation may not be had today, I urge that it be had at an early date. Mr. Madden's nomination was referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. It was there considered by a subcommittee of five Senators. They held a meeting and considered the nomination. It has been reported favorably by a majority of the committee—by all those members who could be contacted.

Before I sit down let me say that I am affected by the memories clustering about this Chamber—the old Senate Chamber. I listened with attention to the speech of the Senator from Kentucky. I hope he will not take too much to heart statements which may be made in publications. History is opulent with irony, but probably the startling irony of American history is that one of the most gentle, one of the most polite, and one of the most pacific of all Vice Presidents who ever served—Martin Van Buren—was required to preside for some weeks over the Senate in this old Chamber with a brace of pistols in his pockets.

These are better days than the bygone ones. Harsh things are said in print and on the stump, but the Vice President of the United States is not required to sit in the Senate Chamber with a brace of pistols in his pockets.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I can assure my very dear friend the senior Senator from Arizona that not only have I never for a moment carried upon my person such a weapon but that I have never even been the owner of one, and can visualize no future exigency which would require a change in this course of conduct.

JOSEPH D. NUNAN, JR.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, for the chairman of the Finance Committee, I submit a favorable report on the nomination of Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., of Douglaston, Queens County, N. Y., to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of New York, vice Almon G. Rasquin, deceased.

Because of the fact that there has been a vacancy in this office of some weeks standing. I submit a unanimous-consent request for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., of Douglaston, Queens County, N. Y., to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of New York, vice Almon G. Rasquin, deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Nunan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

IN THE ARMY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the routine Army nominations which I reported earlier today be considered and confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Army will be confirmed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the Army nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE—WILLIAM D. LEAHY

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nomination of Admiral William D. Leahy to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to France.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in this instance I have no objection. On the contrary, I think the appointment is admirable and that the nomination should have immediate attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

MINISTER TO HAITI—JOHN CAMPBELL WHITE

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination of Mr. John Campbell White to be Minister to Haiti.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

SENATE

MONDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, whose love reacheth to the ends of the world, who art always long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth: We stand in Thy presence, and because of our unworthiness we know not how to speak; yet from our contrite hearts we pray that by Thy grace we may cast away the works of darkness and put upon us the armor of light in these days of testing and of judgment in the world. And as once more we dedicate ourselves to the highest, holiest things in life, so do we dedicate the country Thou hast given us to a purer, nobler patriotism and a deeper, finer loyalty to the kingship of Thy well-beloved Son. And if there be among us those who are cast down amid the ruins of their happiness or of their integrity, give them the courage to rise up and to rebuild the holy places, in the name and by the methods of Him who by His tender love toward mankind hath become for us the true and living way that leads to the city of our God, even Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

NATIONAL REPRESENTATION FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on numerous occasions I have called the attention of the Senate to the great injustice being done the people of the District of Columbia through the continued denial to them of those fundamental rights of representation in our Government enjoyed by all other Americans. Now, of all times, when representative democratic government has been banished from so many countries and we are claiming to hold high the banner of democracy, there appears to me to be special need for us to remove this serious blot from our own democracy. The first step to accomplish this is to amend the Constitution so as to make possible the participation by the people of the District of Columbia, through their duly elected representatives, in the councils of this great Nation.

It was my hope, after our Democratic friends put a District of Columbia suffrage plank in their national Democratic platform, that the long fight of these good Americans of the District would be ended shortly so far as the initial steps by Congress were concerned. With the reporting by the House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary of the Sumners proposed amendment to the Constitution (H. J. Res. 257–S. J. Res. 288) and the support of that proposition announced by the leaders of both of the major parties in the House and Senate, there was promise of immediate favorable action. I thought that surely the Congress by two-thirds vote of each House would send the proposed amendment on to the several State legislatures for ratification. I entertained the hope that this would be done before the national election, but in this I have been disappointed.

This act of simple justice must be performed early in the Seventy-seventh Congress. The people of the District desire and are entitled to have these privileges. No sound American reason can be given for longer denying them. Congress can no longer afford to continue so un-American a condition to exist at the Nation's Capital, unless it is willing to confess unbelief and faith in a representative democratic form of government.

I notice that at a recent meeting of the Society of Native-Born Washingtonians resolutions were adopted indicating a determination to press this proposal before the Seventy-seventh Congress. As these resolutions are of timely interest, I submit them for publication in the RECORD and for proper reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolutions will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to which measures proposing a constitutional amendment for the purpose indicated have been referred.

The resolutions presented by Mr. CAPPER and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary are as follows:

Whereas the Society of Natives of the District of Columbia has, from the day of the organization, supported the proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to empower the Congress to grant to the people of the District of Columbia voting representation in the Senate and House of Representatives and among the electors of President and Vice President, as well as the right to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States; and

Whereas the Democratic National Convention at Chicago included in its 1940 national party platform the following plank: "We also favor the extension of the right of suffrage to the people of the District of Columbia"; and

Whereas the party leaders and many members of both parties in both the Senate and House of Representatives have, through interviews in the press and by other means, declared their support of these proposals to Americanize the Washingtonians and thus permit them to participate with other Americans in the councils of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Society of Natives of the District of Columbia in meeting assembled this 25th day of November 1940:

1. That we congratulate the members of the District delegation to the Democratic National Convention for their success in obtaining the adoption of the District suffrage plank in the 1940 platform—the first time any such plank was inserted in the national platform of any political party—and to express to them the sincere hope that the local Democratic organization will see to it that this platform pledge is kept.

2. That we call on the leaders of both the Democratic and Republican Parties in both Houses of Congress to take early and favorable action on the proposed constitutional amendment in the approaching session of the Seventy-seventh Congress, so that it may be submitted to the States and ratified and the people of the District of Columbia be enabled to vote in the next national election.

3. That we favor the proposal known as the Sumners amendment (H. J. Res. 257, 76th Cong., in its original form) and pledge to the Citizens' Joint Committee on District of Columbia National Representation, of which our honored member, Theodore W. Noyes, is chairman, our continued and hearty support in favor of that proposal.

Resolved further, That the President of this society be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to, in the name of the society, petition the House and Senate of the Seventy-seventh Congress for the passage of the Sumners resolution, and that such petition be filed as soon as it shall be reintroduced.

Adopted by unanimous vote.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

A bill and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

S. 4434. A bill to expedite the fulfillment of the national-defense program by providing a method for the settlement of labor disputes in defense industries without resort to strikes and lock-outs; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

S. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ECONOMIC DEFENSE BOARD

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to create the economic defense board of the United States.

It is predicated on the unescapable fact that, regardless of the trends of military war, we face an inevitable international economic war which will be just as ruthless and, in its economic aspects, just as deadly as the military war, regardless of the outcome of the latter. Indeed, we are in it already.

But we have no adequate national instrumentality through which to cope with this economic war. We have no concentrated responsibility anywhere in the Government to plan and execute our essential international protections in this vital economic field.

Our foreign-trade controls are scattered through the Tariff Commission, which still theoretically administers the flexible tariff; the State Department, which still theoretically administers reciprocal tariffs on an unconditional most-favored-nation basis, which obviously is no longer possible and cannot be in a world at economic war; the Export-Import Bank; the R. F. C.; the White House; the Department of Commerce—a final total of at least 30 agencies dealing with this uncoordinated and therefore ineffectual undertaking.

This bill proposes to bring this total effort into one united undertaking where the whole problem can be met as circumstances may require from time to time. It abolishes the Tariff Commission and transfers its functions to the new economic defense board. It transfers reciprocal-trade agreements from the State Department to the new economic board, and thus, incidentally, distinguishes between the foreign commercial and financial activities of the United States, on the one hand, and its diplomatic and political activities, upon the other. It creates an instrumentality clothed with authority to combat barters with barters, if desirable, and to deal realistically with all of the other economic devices which are now used, far more often than tariffs, to dominate and channel foreign trade. It reasserts the constitutional responsibility of the Congress, yet does not hamper realistic results. In a word, it is an essential part of the national defense which should no longer be left to pell-mell expediency or to fortuitous circumstance.

Mr. President, I hasten to say that a subject of this magnitude cannot be reduced to adequate or appropriate legislative pattern by any one man or set of men. I disclaim any notion that there is finality in a single word or phrase of this proposal. It is simply a conscientious effort to personify and dramatize a problem. Its sole hope is that it may raise a concrete issue and invite its effectual study.

This bill follows the general lines of an original proposal which I introduced last spring. It was refined in a proposal submitted by Representative WOODRUFF of Michigan in the House last October after many mutual consultations. It is here further refined and presented as a text for exploration and advice by all the American people, in and out of the Government, who deal with these interrelated problems of foreign and domestic trade. It asks parity protection for American agriculture, preservation of American industrial wage and living standards and price levels, and every possible aid to American export. It asks national, economic defense.

I ask that the bill be referred to the Finance Committee, and that it may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that we may invite the broadest possible discussion and advice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received, referred as requested, and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4435) to provide for the economic defense of the United States, and for the protection of American price and wage levels and American standards of living against destructive foreign competition, and for the protection and promotion of American foreign trade, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Economic Defense Act of 1940."

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress—

(a) To promote effective policies and to provide efficient administrative machinery for the economic defense of the United States;

(b) To protect American agriculture, labor, and industry from unfair and destructive foreign competition in the home market, and thereby to maintain American price and wage levels, working conditions, and living standards against competition from countries employing low-wage or forced labor or having depreciated currencies;

(c) To provide the United States with the means of effectively preserving and developing its export trade in the face of disturbed world conditions, present and prospective, and in competition with state-controlled foreign economies;

(d) To encourage the exchange of products between the United States and foreign nations on a mutually advantageous basis, having due regard for the interests of American producers and consumers and for the general welfare of the United States;

(e) To provide adequate governmental assistance in facilitating and in financing exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the United States and other nations or the agencies or nationals thereof;

(f) To restore to the Congress its constitutional control over the regulation of foreign commerce and the adjustment of tariff duties, and to require that all governmental activities with respect to the foreign trade of the United States shall be administered in accordance with policies and legislative standards established by the Congress;

(g) To promote policies with respect to the foreign commercial and financial activities of the United States that will supplement and conform to national domestic policies;

(h) To provide for separate and unified administration of the foreign commercial and financial activities of the United States (as distinguished from the diplomatic and political activities thereof);

(i) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort and to reduce expenditures in the administration of foreign commercial and financial activities of the United States;

(j) To maintain uniform, accurate, and current records of the commercial and financial relations of the United States with each individual foreign country.

ECONOMIC DEFENSE BOARD

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby established an agency of the Government to be known as the Economic Defense Board (hereinafter referred to as the Board). The Board shall be composed of six members, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and one of whom the President shall designate as chairman and one as vice chairman. The members of the Board shall be so selected as to afford the broadest possible representation to agriculture, industry, labor, finance, commerce, and transportation, through the appointment of persons duly qualified and experienced in one or more of each of the fields named, and so as to afford representation of each of the principal geographic regions of the country. Not more than three members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. Each member shall devote his full time to the business of the Board. Each of the members of the Board shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per annum. Any member of the Board may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.

(b) Terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of the enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of each of the first 6 years after the date of the enactment of this act. The term of office of a successor to any such member shall expire 6 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

(c) The Board is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, and to make such expenditures, as may be necessary for carrying out its functions, in the same manner as is now provided by law for the United States Tariff Commission. The Board may delegate any of its functions to such of its officers and employees as it may designate.

(d) The Board may, with the consent of any Government agency, including any field service thereof, avail itself of the services of the officials, employees, and facilities thereof, and secure any information necessary for the carrying out of its functions. All such agencies shall make available to the Board (upon request, and wherever practicable in the form requested) any information, statistics, and data they may have available pertaining to world trade or other matters relating to the functions of the Board: Provided, That any such information, statistics, or data may be made available in confidence, if, in the judgment of the President, it is incompatible with the public interest to have them made public.

(e) The chairman of the Board shall be chairman ex officio of the board of trustees of the Export-Import Bank of Washington.

TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS OF TARIFF COMMISSION

SEC. 4. (a) The United States Tariff Commission is hereby abolished, and all of its functions are transferred to the Board. All provisions of law applicable to the United States Tariff Commission shall, insofar as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, be applicable in the same manner and to the same extent to the Board.

(b) All officers and employees (except the Commissioners), and all property (including office equipment and official records) of the United States Tariff Commission, and such officers and employees and such property (including office equipment and official records) of the Department of State as the President shall determine to have been employed or used in the exercise of the functions transferred by section 10 and shall specify by Executive order, are transferred to the Board. The transfer of such personnel shall be without reduction in classification or compensation, except that this requirement shall not operate after the end of the fiscal year during which such transfer is made to prevent the adjustment of classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which such transferred personnel may be assigned. Such of the personnel so transferred as do not already possess a classified civil-service status shall not acquire such status by reason of such transfer except (1) upon recommendation of the Board within 1 year after such personnel have been so transferred and certification within such period by the Board to the Civil Service Commission that such personnel have served with merit for not less than 6 months prior to the transfer, and (2) upon passing such suitable noncompetitive examinations as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe.

(c) All unexpended balances of appropriations available for use by the United States Tariff Commission, and such unexpended balances of appropriations as the President shall determine to have been available for expenditure by the Department of State in the exercise of the functions transferred by section 10 and shall specify by Executive order, are transferred to the Board and shall be available for expenditure by it in the exercise of its functions.

MODIFICATION OF EXISTING DUTIES OR OTHER IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 5. (a) In order to maintain at all times duties and other import restrictions which conform to the policy of Congress by this act intended, and to provide for the prompt and scientific readjustment thereof in accordance with such policy, the Board (1) upon request of the President, or (2) upon resolution of either or both Houses of Congress, or (3) upon its own motion, or (4) when in the judgment of the Board there is good and sufficient reason therefor, upon the application of any interested party, shall investigate the conditions of competition in the domestic market between any domestic product and like or similar foreign products. In the course of its investigation the Board shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings. The Board is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. The Board shall report to the President the results of its investigation and its findings with respect to such conditions of competition. If the Board finds it shown by the investigation that the existing duties or other import restrictions do not equalize the difference in the American selling price of the domestic article and the import price of the like or similar foreign article, the Board shall specify in its report such increases or decreases as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such difference.

(b) The President shall by proclamation approve the increase or decrease in duties or other import restrictions specified in any report of the Board under this section, if in his judgment such changes are shown by such investigation of the Board to be necessary to equalize such difference in price between the domestic article and the like or similar foreign article.

(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed to allow the increase or decrease of any existing duty or import restriction by more than 50 percent of the statutory rate established by act of Congress; but the Board may recommend, and the President may proclaim, transfers from the dutiable list to the free list or from the free list to the dutiable list, provided that such transfers shall not take effect for 90 days in which time a resolution by either or both branches of Congress shall suspend and nullify the transfer. Where the Board finds that the limitations imposed by this subsection operate to restrict the changes which it would otherwise specify in its report to the President, it shall make a report of such fact to the Congress and recommend for appropriate action by the Congress such further changes as it deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

(d) Commencing 30 days after the date of any Presidential proclamation of approval, the changes in duties or other import restrictions specified in the report of the Board shall take effect.

(e) Any increased or decreased duty or other import restriction which has taken effect as provided in this section may be modified or terminated in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations as is provided in this section in the case of original changes.

(f) The President is authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for carrying out his functions under the provisions of this section.

(g) For the purposes of this section—

(1) the term "domestic article" means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States; and the term "foreign article" means an article wholly or in part the growth or product of a foreign country;

(2) the term "United States" includes the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia;

(3) the term "foreign country" means any empire, country, dominion, colony, or protectorate, or any subdivision or subdivisions thereof (other than the United States and its possessions);

(4) the term "duties and other import restrictions" includes (1) rate and form of import duties and classifications or articles, and (2) limitations, prohibitions, charges, and exactions other than duties, imposed on importation or imposed for the regulation of imports;

(5) the term "existing" as applied to duties and other import restrictions means duties and import restrictions in effect at the time of the enactment of this act;

(6) the term "American selling price" means the price, including the cost of all containers and coverings of whatever nature and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition packed ready for delivery, at which a domestic article is freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal market of the United States, in the ordinary course of trade and in the usual wholesale quantities in such market, or the price that the manufacturer, producer, or owner would have received or was willing to receive for such merchandise when sold in the ordinary course of trade and in the usual wholesale quantities, at the time of exportation of the like or similar imported article: Provided, That in the case of agricultural commodities, the American selling price shall not be deemed to be less than the parity price therefor, as defined in paragraph (7) of this subsection;

(7) the term "parity price" as applied to agricultural products means (A) the price that will give the domestic agricultural product the same purchasing power, with respect to nonagricultural products, as such product had during the period August 1909 to July 1914, as ascertained from the latest available statistics of the Department of Agriculture by the Secretary of Agriculture, except that (B) in the case of any product with respect to which the Secretary of Agriculture has ascertained the fair exchange value or parity price under any agricultural adjustment or conservation program in effect since September 31, 1932, the parity price shall be the latest price so ascertained; and

(8) the "import price" means the price paid for an imported article by the person by whom or for whom it is imported, plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings, transportation (not including transportation within the United States), and all other costs, charges, and expenses (except import duties and other import restrictions) incident to the delivery of such goods in the United States.

(h) Section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (flexible tariff provision), is hereby repealed.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

SEC. 6. (a) For the purpose of expanding the foreign trade of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to enter into negotiations with any foreign government or instrumentality thereof with a view to the arrangement of trade agreements wherein reciprocal and mutually advantageous concessions may be secured; but such trade agreements shall not become effective for 90 days in which time a resolution by either or both branches of Congress shall suspend and nullify the trade agreement. The President shall consult with the Board in connection with the negotiation of such trade agreements, and it shall be the duty of the Board to recommend to the President such concessions on the part of the United States as the Board deems may be made without injury to any substantial branch of domestic agriculture, labor, or industry, and the President shall make no concession on the part of the United States which is not approved by the Board. No existing duty or other import restriction shall be reduced under the provisions of this subsection by more than 50 percent of the statutory rate established by act of Congress. Before any trade agreement is negotiated with any foreign government or instrumentality thereof under the provisions of this subsection, the President shall give reasonable notice of the intention to negotiate an agreement with such foreign government or instrumentality, and any interested person shall have a reasonable opportunity to present his views to the Board, either orally or in writing. The concessions on the part of the United States made under any such trade agreement may be extended by proclamation of the President to any other countries if, after investigation and report to him by the Board, he finds as a fact that through the extension of such concessions to another or to other countries concessions or benefits of comparable value will be extended to the United States by such other country or countries.

(b) The authority of the President to enter into foreign trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby terminated.

(c) Each foreign trade agreement heretofore entered into under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, shall be terminated by the President on the earliest date on which it is possible to terminate such agreement (whether for cause or otherwise) without violating the terms thereof.

EXCHANGE OF COMMODITIES

SEC. 7. (a) For the purpose of promoting the foreign trade of the United States, extending the foreign markets of the United States, or advantageously disposing of surplus commodities of the United States in export markets, the Board, by and with the advice and consent of the President, is authorized to negotiate and conclude with foreign countries or their nationals agreements or arrangements (1) for transactions providing for the exchange of articles grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States for articles grown, produced, or manufactured in foreign countries, and (2) fixing the terms and conditions of such exchange. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize any change in the rate of import duties applicable with respect to any article involved in such exchange.

(b) Any such agreement or arrangement may provide for the disposal of any commodities owned or held by any Government agency, and such agency may, with the approval of the President, dispose of such commodities in the manner and for the purposes provided for by such agreement or arrangement, without regard to any other provision of law relating to the disposal of such commodities. Any Government agency may acquire any commodities in the manner provided for by any such agreement, and may use or dispose of such commodities in any way authorized by law or may hold and store such commodities until their disposition shall be provided for by law.

GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 8. In order to effectuate the policy of this act, the Board shall, in addition to carrying on the functions transferred to or conferred upon it by other provisions of this act—

(a) Coordinate the foreign commercial and financial policies and activities of the Government;

(b) Obtain, review, and coordinate the information, statistics, and data pertaining to foreign trade and financial activities collected or prepared by any Government agency, or elsewhere;

(c) Advise the President and the Congress, from time to time or upon request, on all matters affecting the foreign commercial or financial policies and activities of the United States, and recommend such additional measures for the economic defense of the United States as it may deem necessary or advisable;

(d) Approve, forbid, or modify any specific foreign-trade or financial transaction in which any Government agency participates as a party, whether a financing transaction, barter transaction, or in any other form. No Government agency shall conclude any such transaction without the approval of the Board;

(e) Carry on negotiations with respect to specific trade transactions with any individual, corporation, association, group, or business agency interested in obtaining assistance from the Government with respect to (1) financing transactions, (2) barter transactions, or (3) any other form of foreign-trade transactions. The Board shall bring such proposals with respect to these transactions as it deems necessary to the attention of any other Government agency affected by, or having an interest therein, for appropriate action, and shall keep the President advised concerning the action proposed by such other agency. If any Government agency authorized to participate in any such transaction refuses to participate in such manner as may be recommended to it by the Board, the Board shall make a special report to the President and to the Congress concerning such refusal; and

(f) Assist the President in the preparation of commercial, trade, and financial agreements or treaties with foreign countries by making such investigations, conducting such negotiations, and holding such hearings as the President may prescribe, and by making recommendations to the President in connection therewith.

REPORTS ON CERTAIN FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 9. Whenever the Board finds as a fact, on the basis of information obtained by it and after such further investigation as it deems necessary that any foreign country is discriminating against citizens of the United States in the payment of obligations contracted by it or by its nationals, either as to the manner or amount of such payments, or is unnecessarily withholding or delaying such payments to citizens of the United States, it shall report to the Congress and to the President its findings and recommendations.

FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED FROM DEPARTMENT OF STATE

SEC. 10. The functions transferred to or vested in the Secretary of State and the Department of State by subsections (a) and (b) (relating to the functions of the Foreign Commerce Service of the United States and the Foreign Agricultural Service of the United States) of section 1 of Reorganization Plan No. II, submitted to the Congress on May 9, 1939, are transferred to and shall be exercised by the Board.

FURTHER REORGANIZATION BY THE PRESIDENT

SEC. 11. (a) The President shall investigate the present organization of all Government agencies which deal directly or indirectly with the foreign commercial and financial activities of the United States and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish any of the following purposes:

(1) To separate the administration of foreign commercial and financial activities of the United States from the administration of diplomatic and political activities thereof;

(2) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort; and

(3) To reduce expenditures in the administration of foreign commercial and financial activities to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government.

(b) After such investigation, the President may transmit to the Congress, under the provisions of the Reorganization Act of 1939, a reorganization plan affecting such agencies insofar as their functions relate to such foreign commercial and financial activities. The provisions of section 3 (b) and section 12 of the Reorganization Act of 1939 shall not be applicable with respect to such plan, but the plan shall not take effect unless it is transmitted to the Congress within 2 years after the date of enactment of this act.

PENDING PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 12. (a) All orders, rules, regulations, permits, or other privileges made, issued, or granted by or in respect of any Government agency or function transferred to the Board under the provisions of this act, and in effect at the time of the transfer, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred, until modified, superseded, or repealed.

(b) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any such agency or any officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to his discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of any transfer of authority, power, and duties to the Board or any officer thereof under the provisions of this act, but the court, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the Board of any officer thereof to whom the authority, powers, and duties are transferred.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 13. The Board, in addition to making other reports required of it, shall made a report to the Congress at the beginning of each regular session containing a statement of its expenditures during the past fiscal year, a summary of its activities, and such recommendations as it may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the board and the purposes of this act.

DEFINITION

SEC. 14. When used in this act, the term "Government agency" means any executive department, commission, independent establishment, corporation owned or controlled by the United States, board, bureau, division, service, office, authority, or administration in the executive branch of the Government.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 15. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 16. The provisions of section 3 of this act shall take effect upon the date of its enactment; and the provisions of all other sections of this act shall take effect upon the sixtieth day after the date of its enactment.

BILL RECOMMITTED

On motion of Mr. KING, the bill (H. R. 10418) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Peter Florey was taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. GILLETTE. I submit a resolution, which I ask may lie on the desk.

The Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, under the terms of its organization, is to report on the first day of the next term of Congress. In the course of our work we have been investigating the expenditure of large sums of money throughout the Nation, and to enable us to secure a complete picture we have to have the reports from the various State central committees. Many of these committees are not required to report until 30 days subsequent to the election; as a result many of them have not yet filed their reports and will not have to do so before the 5th day of December. Because of that, we have not the material, and it may well be that, with the Christmas season intervening, we will not have the report ready to file on the first day of the opening of the next Congress.

The resolution I have submitted, which may be necessary, merely proposes to extend the time for filing a report to the 20th of January, and, if necessary, a member of the committee will call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 336) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 212, agreed to February 9, 1940, authorizing a Special Committee to Investigate the Campaign Expenditures of Presidential, Vice Presidential, and Senatorial Candidates in 1940, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the committee shall submit its final report, which shall not be later than January 20, 1941.

RECONCENTRATION OR REWAREHOUSING OF COTTON

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and myself, I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read, and then I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 337) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Department of Agriculture be, and they are hereby, requested not to ask for, or, if already asked for, not to receive bids or make contracts for the reconcentration or rewarehousing of cotton in the Southern Cotton States until the matter can be taken up and considered by the Congress at its ensuing January session.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation of the resolution.

Recently the Commodity Credit Corporation asked for bids for rewarehousing the Government cotton which is now warehoused largely in the interior warehouses of the southern part of the country. It seems that one or two of the larger cotton dealers who have heretofore used warehouses of their own, built by them for their own business, in view of the fact that their business has fallen off on account of the war in Europe, have earnestly insisted that the cotton be taken out of the interior warehouses and sent to their warehouses along the coast.

The entire southern delegation, so far as the Senator from Georgia and I have been able to find out—and a considerable number of them were here last week—are protesting in person against the rewarehousing of this cotton right in the middle of the year, without any real reason therefor. I have also taken the trouble to advise by telegram with certain southern Senators who are away, and I now desire to read a few telegrams to show exactly how they feel about the matter. In other words, so far as we have been able to ascertain, the southern Senators and Representatives from the cotton districts are a unit in not desiring this cotton to be rewarehoused, or reconcentrated, as it is frequently called, at this time.

Here is a telegram from Montgomery, Ala.:

Your telegram. Agree fully with you and Senator GEORGE reference cotton warehousement and reconcentration of cotton. Please speak for me. Regards.

LISTER HILL.

Another telegram from Jackson, Miss.:

Re tel.: I am greatly opposed to the proposal of the Commodity Credit Corporation to reconcentrate and rewarehouse all Government-owned cotton in the Southern States, and I wish to join you and Senator GEORGE in a Senate resolution requesting the Secretary of Agriculture not to accept bids for reconcentration until the matter can be brought before Congress. It is my idea that the reconcentration of Government-owned cotton as proposed would bring about an added expense to the Government and would cause the warehouses to materially increase their present rates on individually owned cotton.

THEODORE G. BILBO.

The following telegram is from Winder, Ga.:

Heartily approve any action necessary to prevent reconcentration of cotton. Will strongly support resolution. Please advise if you think it necessary for me to return to Washington immediately.

RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
United States Senator.

JASPER, ALA.

Re tel.: I favor resolution requesting Secretary of Agriculture not to accept bids for reconcentration of cotton until the matter can be brought up before Congress. Who is handling matter in the Department? Is it Wickard or Appleby? I want to get in touch with him. I want to do anything I can without coming back to Washington, and you are authorized to speak for me. Notify Senator GEORGE.

J. H. BANKHEAD.

LYNCHBURG, S. C.

Telegram received. I am with you in your fight against reconcentration.

E. D. SMITH.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

Re tel.: Will favor resolution as suggested.

ELMER THOMAS, U. S. S.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Telegram from yourself and Senator GEORGE received. Please sign my name to resolution requesting the Secretary of Agriculture not to accept bids for reconcentration until matter can be considered by Congress .

MORRIS SHEPPARD.

KANSAS CITY, MO., December 2.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.:

I am with you on your proposed resolution regarding the concentration of warehouse cotton. Will be glad to join you in the resolution or to support it.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think the Senator should add that in addition to personal appearance by a large number of Senators and a great many Representatives at the Agricultural Department the other day, a very representative delegation of outstanding cotton farmers from the South made a separate appearance that afternoon before Dr. Robbins, of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and that the farmers rather than the warehousemen are the principal parties in interest.

Mr. MCKELLAR. What the Senator from Missouri says is entirely true. On last Friday a large number of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives called on Secretary Wickard and on Dr. Robbins, and urged that no action be taken on the matter at this time. It was urged, among other things, that so far as we were able to ascertain the farmers are a unit about it. Naturally, the interior warehousemen are a unit in opposition to the proposed action. In addition to that, we had an experience along this line in 1935, as I recall the year, when it cost an enormous sum of money to rewarehouse and reconcentrate the Government-owned cotton.

The only excuse given by the Department for the proposed action was that there are some 92,000 bales of cotton, I think, in western Texas which are not adequately warehoused. Every one of us urged very strongly that that cotton could be taken care of without undertaking to readjust and to change the entire cotton warehousing of the country in order to accomplish it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MCKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky in a moment.

The Department was to let us know what was decided upon. They have not let us know, and I understand that the bids are to come in tomorrow. As there is such unanimity among the Senators and Representatives from the South, it seems to me that a resolution such as this could well be adopted, simply requesting the Department not to receive bids about the matter until the Congress can look into it.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this matter is new to me, and I am asking simply for information. As I understand, the cotton which is held by the Government is now located in numerous warehouses throughout the country.

Mr. MCKELLAR. It is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know how many warehouses there are?

Mr. MCKELLAR. There are, I believe, six and a half million bales, and I understand they are in several hundred warehouses all told.

Mr. BARKLEY. The cotton has been warehoused very largely in the sections of the country where it was produced?

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is true, very largely; and so far as all of the country except a small portion of western Texas is concerned, the present warehousing is entirely satisfactory, so far as we know.

Mr. BARKLEY. The cotton is now in warehouses under contracts that exist between the Government and the warehousemen?

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the law require that it shall be reshuffled now, or not?

Mr. MCKELLAR. It does not; quite the contrary. These contracts having been made in good faith, we believe that they ought to be carried out for this year. There was a great deal of argument about the matter when we were down there, and only two practical reasons were given for the action which the Department contemplated. One was that there are 92,000 bales of cotton in Texas which are not properly warehoused.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can that quantity be rewarehoused without affecting the remainder of the cotton?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Certainly. Rewarehousing that cotton has nothing in the world to do with the remainder of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There are plenty of warehouses in Texas to take care of that cotton.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes; there are plenty of warehouses in Texas to take care of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. So, if I correctly understand the situation, the operation would result either in removing the cotton from where it now is, or in entering into new contracts with the present warehouseman?

Mr. MCKELLAR. No; it would not require new contracts with the present warehouseman. The contracts would continue just as they are now. The Department claims that it is possible that they may save some money by this operation, if they receive lower bids, and that may be true. I do not know; but the cost of the reconcentration in 1935 is easily ascertainable from the records. As I remember the year, it was either 1935 or 1936. The records of that time show that to reconcentrate all the Government-owned cotton and move it down to the coast, and then perhaps move it back when it is sold, would cost a great deal more than would be saved by securing a lower price for the warehousing. The farmers, however, take the position—and it is a very strong position—that if the Government-owned cotton is taken away from the interior warehouses the interior warehousemen will have to raise their rates, and the cotton farmers will have to pay the bill; and there is not any question that that is correct.

Under those circumstances it seems to me that we might delay the proposed action until it can be looked into more thoroughly than it apparently has been looked into by the Department.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do the present contracts run indefinitely, or do they expire at a given time?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator from Georgia to answer that question. I cannot do so. My recollection is that they are indefinite.

Mr. GEORGE. No; they were made for a specific time. My understanding is—and I think it is correct—that the contracts have expired, or else the Commodity Credit Corporation had a right to call for new contracts and make new contracts November 1; and on or about the 19th of November they did ask for bids. They decided to let contracts on a competitive-bidding basis, and they asked for bids to be submitted by the 22d of November. A group of Senators and Representatives, together with warehousemen and farmers, went to see the Secretary of Agriculture and found him absent; but they took up the matter with Under Secretary Appleby and Mr. Rathell, the Director of the Cotton Division of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The President of the Commodity Credit Corporation, Dr. Robbins, also was out of the city.

The bids were referred until December 3; that is, the date for the reception of the bids was merely deferred until tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume that where contracts have expired, or are about to expire, there would be no objection to entering into a new contract with the same warehouse for the storage of the cotton there if any saving were possible. What the protestants object to, as I understand, is the concentration of the cotton in one section of the country, the cost of which they ultimately will have to bear.

Mr. McKELLAR. Paying the freight, and the cost of resampling the cotton.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that even if a new contract were required, and could be obtained at a lower rate, there would be no objection to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. GEORGE. They are quite willing to make new contracts. They do not want to have them on a competitive bidding basis, for the reason that there would be an undue advantage to the large cotton shippers who have warehouse facilities in the ports, for which they have little use, the export of cotton having, of course, declined very rapidly, and practically come to an end, as the result of the war in Europe and in the east. They feel that the shippers with these large facilities could so far underbid them that they would be compelled to let the cotton go.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any fear on the part of the growers or others that if the market for cotton should be reopened, the cotton now held by the Government being close to the shipping facilities would have some advantage over cotton grown in the interior?

Mr. McKELLAR. That was not suggested. That was not the reason given. This is the first time bids have ever been asked, although the law has been on the books during all the time the Government has handled part of the cotton of the country. This is the first time bids have ever been asked, and it is generally believed that the motive in asking for them at this time is in order to take advantage of the empty warehouses along the coast which formerly were used by those dealing in export cotton.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there is no contention anywhere that the rates charged by the small warehouses in the interior are exorbitant. Those rates of storage have gone down from about 30 or 35 cents a bale a month to 12½ cents. That covers the handling and keeping of the cotton, the insurance, and all the other charges; so that if anything is to be paid to the warehouseman at all for handling cotton, the present rates are certainly very low.

At this particular juncture, with empty warehouses in the ports, it is quite likely that such warehouses would bid below 12½ cents a bale a month. But that is a temporary condition, due largely to the fact, if not entirely, that the war has prevented the export of cotton, and these warehousemen or the cotton merchants can afford to take cotton at the ports with no charges whatever, because they handle cotton as merchants. They are interested in four or five different transactions, whereas the interior warehouses, in the communities where the cotton is grown, small warehouses, often owned by the farmers themselves, handle it only as bailees; that is to say, they take possession of the cotton and handle it only for storage purposes. They perform all the primary duties and assume all the primary obligations to the farmer. They receive the cotton, concentrate it, go down at night and let the farmers in, and perform services of that kind. They receive cotton even on Sunday, if the cotton should not be delivered from the gins until Sunday, after the week's work is ended; and after the cotton is concentrated in large warehouses they can, of course, offer very advantageous terms for lots of cotton, say, thousand-bale lots, move it into the warehouses at the ports or elsewhere, and carry it at a very low charge. The farmers are not protesting the rates paid at present. They are directly and immediately interested in keeping the cotton in the local communities at their own points of production.

It is perfectly obvious at this time that most of the American-grown cotton must be used by American mills. Movement to the ports practically in all instances merely is a removal of the cotton a longer distance from the point where it actually will be consumed. In a few instances that is not so, where cotton may move coastwise to particular plants, but cotton-textile manufacturing plants, with a few exceptions in the East, are not located at the ports.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In view of what seems to be the unanimity of the Senators representing the cotton-producing area, I do not understand why the Department of Agriculture would persist in this program, unless it thought it had a good reason. What does the Senator say is the attitude of the Department on the subject to justify its refusal to surrender its view even temporarily to the united southern point of view?

Mr. GEORGE. The Department's position first was that there was some cotton that was not in storage, cotton exposed to the weather. On inquiry that condition was discovered to exist only in west Texas, whereupon it was readily agreed that that cotton might be moved anywhere, to any port warehouse or any other warehouse.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They have authority under the law to do that.

Mr. GEORGE. They have authority under the law to do that, and there is no request that any cotton improperly stored anywhere be left at that point. It is only that the cotton that is properly cared for in warehouses be left there, or that the Department abandon its request for competitive bidding, because obviously the small cotton warehouses all over the Cotton Belt would be at a very great disadvantage in bidding competitively against a few large shippers with very ample and, in fact, idle warehouse facilities at this time.

If the rates were not proper, or if they were deemed to be high, the Commodity Credit Corporation would have the right to offer the cotton for storage at whatever rates it thinks proper, and on our first visit we insisted that they offer to leave the cotton in storage upon a rate named by the Commodity Credit Corporation. They, of course, objected to that, because they said that so many factors entered into what was a proper carrying charge for the warehousing of cotton they did not wish to assume the responsibility of naming the rate.

The only other reason given is that it is believed that by the end of this season the Government stock of cotton will be heavy, which, of course, is true, and that it will be necessary or might be necessary to move portions of this cotton into vacant warehouses, empty warehouses, in order to prevent the inducements which might prevail on the local people in the inland territory to build additional storage facilities in order to get Government contracts. That, however, is not even a possibility, though the Commodity Credit Corporation advanced it as a reason.

The only possible saving on the storage as a result of moving the cotton would be the gross saving of the difference between 12½ cents a month and what might be bid below that. Even if it should be bid down to a basis of 7 or 8 cents a bale a month, which would be below the actual cost of carrying the cotton in small inland warehouses, in 90 percent of all cases, in my judgment, the gross saving to the Government, or to the Commodity Credit Corporation, would not amount to more than two or three million dollars, from which there would necessarily come tremendously high costs or charges for the concentration of the cotton, including freights, and including the general supervision of the warehousing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the practical working of the system of reconcentration in the middle of the year, as demonstrated in 1935. It appeared in the evidence that a colored man had one bale of cotton stored in the warehouse at Holly Springs, which was re-stored in New Orleans, and he had difficulty in finding it. When he finally found it, that bale of cotton had to pay the freight from Holly Springs, which is in the northern part of Mississippi, down to New Orleans, and then the cotton was hauled by the Illinois Central Railroad right back through Holly Springs to the point of delivery where it had been sold, somewhere in Ohio. The result was that the poor colored farmer had to pay additional freight, and an additional amount for sampling the cotton.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not profess to be an expert on cotton, although cotton is the greatest cash-money crop in my State. I live about 250 miles from the Cotton Belt in Missouri, but since I have been in the Senate I have been diligently trying to familiarize myself with the cotton situation. I may say, however, that without professing to be an expert on cotton, I know a good deal more about it than some of the bureaucrats in the Department of Agriculture because I am at least willing to listen to those who do know—which many of the bureaucrats are not. I have conferred with a great many growers and dealers in cotton in southeastern Missouri, and in this situation I have been particularly impressed, not only with the unanimity of opinion among those interested in cotton in my State but with the unanimity of opinion among the Senators and Representatives and the farmers from the great cotton-growing States of the South, that it would be a very great blow to the farmers, and to the cotton industry in the United States as a whole, to permit the proposed concentration of cotton in the port warehouses.

There was no difference of opinion expressed at the meeting held the other day at the Department of Agriculture. I think there were 10 Senators from the Southern States present at the meeting. There were 15 or 20 Representatives present. There were most impressive delegations of farmers present. They were men who said they did not have any ownership or interest in any warehouses or any compresses, and had no interest whatever in the cotton business except as farmers, and their contention was that the proposed step would be the greatest blow that has ever been struck at the cotton industry in the United States. One reason for this was that it would inevitably raise prices for storage on the farmer's own cotton. Another was that it would put the farmer's cotton where he could not profitably dispose of it.

I am not putting too fine a point on the matter. The only effect of the concentration of cotton in the ports will be to strengthen a monopoly, to strengthen the hand of the great monopolistic house of Anderson, Clayton & Co., who are not only warehousemen, but who are cotton merchants, cotton producers. They have even gone down to South America and produced a great deal of cotton there in competition with our own cotton. They have these great warehouses which are used in ordinary times for export trade. Now that the export trade has been hampered by the conflict abroad, they are undertaking to hamstring the cotton industry of the interior, both with respect to the farmers and the warehousemen, by concentrating cotton at the warehouses at the ports which are empty because of this particular exigency.

The firm of Anderson, Clayton & Co. can afford to take this cotton for 1 cent a pound. They can afford to take it for nothing. The proof of that lies in the fact that last Thursday night at midnight they proceeded to purchase a big warehouse at Mobile, which happened to be empty, for about one-third or one-fourth of its value, for the anticipated purpose of storing this cotton, for which they intended to underbid interior warehousemen, and to concentrate this cotton at the ports.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has said, the local warehouseman performs a function and renders a service in season and out of season, day by day, and hour by hour. He runs his warehouse Saturday nights and Sundays in the cotton season. The warehousemen collect the cotton; they render the farmers service, and under the Wage and Hour Act they have to pay overtime for every bit of extra service they render the farmers.

Now it is proposed to move that cotton from the local warehouses. Anderson, Clayton & Co. make seven or eight different profits out of their business. The profits are perfectly legitimate profits. I do not mean to cast any reflections on the legitimacy of what they do, but it is not of record that any cotton which has been stored in any of the Anderson, Clayton & Co.'s warehouses has ever been purchased by anyone other than Anderson, Clayton & Co. Whoever goes down that winding stair will never come back again. The proposed action can only have the effect of giving the firm of Anderson, Clayton & Co., or anyone they happen to be associated with, a strangle hold both on the farmer and on the local warehouse.

The farmers of Missouri, who had a bad year last year, were able to sell their cotton at the local warehouses at $30 and $40 a bale. If it had gone into Anderson, Clayton & Co.'s warehouses at the ports, the farmers would not have gotten anything for their cotton, because the charges would have eaten up the value of the cotton.

At the meeting held at the Department of Agriculture the other day Representative COOPER testified that in the immediate cotton-growing section in which he lived there are four or five large cotton mills. The action proposed to be taken by the Department would entail shipping cotton from that particular district in Tennessee, perhaps to New Orleans or Houston or Savannah, and then possibly shipping it back to the very district in Tennessee in which it was produced, in order to have it milled.

It was also testified at the meeting the other day by a Representative from the Delta country in Mississippi that a few years ago they took their cotton and concentrated it in New Orleans, but afterward shipped it back through Greenwood, Miss., to the mill, but in the meantime had divested it of a particular value that certain cotton has by being shipped from Delta points.

I am not casting any aspersions on anybody in the Department, but it seems to me to be singular that every 4 or 5 months in the last couple of years all the Senators and all the Representatives from the cotton-growing States and all the representatives of the farmers from the cotton-growing areas have been forced to turn out in order to repeal incursions by the firm of Anderson, Clayton & Co.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 337) was considered and agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to send a copy of the resolution which was just agreed to to the Honorable Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, and to Dr. Carl B. Robbins, President of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the resolution just passed, I have been asked to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] take the same position as do the other Senators to whom I have referred.

AMERICA AND THE WAR

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, a very interesting article appears in this morning's Times-Herald of Washington, D. C., which bears the headline Most Officers See United States Going to War Soon—Believe They'll Lead American Soldiers on Foreign Battlefields.

I wish to read three significant paragraphs from this article, because the officers in question are the men who know what the United States is planning to do. It is not what the President says we are going to do, it is what the plans indicate. Let me read these three significant paragraphs:

A majority of the officers of the United States Army feel this country will enter the war some time next year and believe they will lead American soldiers into action on foreign battlefields.

This was indicated by a casual poll taken by this correspondent during an 8-day inspection tour of national-defense progress at various military establishments, undertaken with 16 other newspapermen at the invitation of Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff.

Then the article proceeds to say:

They declared that already the British are making the first move to bring this country in as an ally by initiating a campaign for credits. These officers were confident the quest for funds will be successful. After we send money, we will have to send men, they said.

Then the article goes on to outline the fact that they have actually discussed the military possibility of landing troops in Portugal, Greece, and many other countries.

I shall now read the last few paragraphs, which are very important. I say they are important because these officers know what is happening on the inside. They know that some are planning for an overseas war, regardless of what is said by them about peace.

Let me read the last two paragraphs:

Many officers said they were not convinced this country would enter the war until the defense program got under way. Only when they saw camps mushrooming, training time stepped up, and hustle and bustle of preparation did they feel American entry into the war is a certainty.

"What are we building an army of 1,200,000 men for, if we don't intend to get into the war?" one officer asked. "We don't need that big an army to defend us when the nearest two possible enemies is more than 3,000 miles away."

I think the article is very interesting. It is not startling to me, because for a long time I have been saying what the article says. I say that these individuals in charge of our foreign affairs have hypocritically been preaching peace while planning for war; that they have attempted from the very first day of this war to get America into it, no matter what they say now, no matter whether or not they say it is an overseas war and that we will not enter it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the article in question printed at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of December 2, 1940]

MOST OFFICERS SEE UNITED STATES GOING TO WAR SOON—BELIEVE THEY'LL LEAD AMERICAN SOLDIERS ON FOREIGN BATTLEFIELDS

(By Walter Trohon)

A majority of the officers of the United States Army feel this country will enter the war some time next year and believe they will lead American soldiers into action on foreign battlefields.

This was indicated by a casual poll taken by this correspondent during an 8-day inspection tour of national-defense progress at various military establishments undertaken with 16 other newspapermen at the invitation of Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff.

POLL IS CASUAL

During the 8 days the war sentiments of 183 officers from generals to the youngest lieutenants were sounded out. The officers were not told they were being polled but were asked casually during conversations how they felt about the possible entrance of this country into the conflict.

Here is how they responded:

America will enter the war, 149.

America will not enter the war, 23.

No expression, 11.

The vast majority of officers are convinced America is already economically in the struggle and will enter the war as a combatant because this country cannot see England go down to defeat. If this appears imminent, the American public will demand war, they said.

SEE BRITISH DRIVE UNDER WAY

They declared that already the British are making the first move to bring this country in as an ally by initiating a campaign for credits. These officers were confident the quest for funds will be successful. After we send money we will have to send men, they said.

Many of the officers who said America will not enter the war believe Britain has more than enough manpower, and needs machines and munitions, money and food more than men from this country.

Officers were divided in opinion as to when this country may enter the war, but most of them felt the declaration will come by spring as a step to bolster British morale. Naval cooperation, they said, would be immediate, while Army cooperation would not come for some months.

GREEK STAMINA CALLED THE KEY

They were also uncertain as to where they might lead troops on foreign soil. Many officers were following the Italian-Greek clash with interest, saying if the Greeks could hold out it would be highly possible that theater of war would become the road toward Berlin, either through the Balkans, where Yugoslavia might be expected to join the Allies, or through Bulgaria and Rumania, where Turkish help could be counted upon. Another route would be through Italy herself, conducting landing operations on the heels of crumbling Italian morale which would follow Greek victories.

Most officers felt America will fight on the battlefields of the first World War. They expressed the belief that if England gained mastery of the air the United States will be called upon to conduct landing operations with British forces on the French coast and move toward Berlin along familiar roads.

PORTUGAL GOOD SPRINGBOARD

Some pointed to Portugal, England's traditional ally, as an excellent avenue of operations. From Portuguese bases, they said, offensive armies could conduct operations across Spain and upward into France in French areas where they could count upon help from the inhabitants and outflank Nazi coastal positions.

At the same time other armies could drive toward Italy and sever the Rome-Berlin Axis, these officers argued. They said Portugal offers an ideal road to war.

Many officers said they were not convinced this country would enter the war until the defense program got under way. Only when they saw camps mushrooming, training time stepped up, and hustle and bustle of preparation did they feel American entry into the war is a certainty.

"What are we building an Army of 1,200,000 men for, if we don't intend to get into the war?" one officer asked. "We don't need that big an army to defend us when the nearest of two possible enemies is more than 3,000 miles away."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I think time will verify what is said in this article. I wish to say that the blood of many an American boy will be on the hands of many individuals in this country who are planning for war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the article give the names of any of the officers who are quoted in it?

Mr. HOLT. No; it does not. However, that is natural, because under the present political control of the Army, the best way for an Army officer to get into trouble would be to give his name in connection with such a statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not read the article, and I do not know how reliable it is. Is it a signed article?

Mr. HOLT. It is signed by Walter Trohon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who is Mr. Trohon?

Mr. HOLT. I do not know him personally. It is a signed article published in the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the article say that General Marshall had authorized the taking of a poll by this correspondent?

Mr. HOLT. No; but the article says that General Marshall invited and authorized him and 16 other newspapermen to go on a national 8-day inspection tour of national-defense progress at various military establishments, and while making this tour he discussed the question with various Army officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. The article does not say that General Marshall authorized the correspondent to take a poll of these different officers with respect to whether they believed the United States would enter the war?

Mr. HOLT. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. It simply says that General Marshall authorized these correspondents to make an inspection tour?

Mr. HOLT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not object to the article being placed in the RECORD, as the Senator has requested, but I do not think the statements of a few Army officers, who some enterprising newspaper correspondent asks what they think about the United States getting into war, are to be taken in any way as seriously reflecting the policy of this Government.

We all knew before we passed the draft act that there would have to be mushroom camps and cantonments erected in order to train these men. The article does not disclose that these officers of the Army have given to the country information or facts which we did not know in advance of the enactment of the law itself.

It seems to me that Army officers would be better serving the country by doing their duties at these various posts than by giving their opinion as to whether the Congress of the United States is going to declare war against some country, or whether anybody connected with the Government is secretly designing to carry out some war program. If there is no other service that this article can render, it certainly ought to teach the Army officers some caution in being quoted, even though anonymously, by everyone who comes along to gather information. Their opinion as to whether we are going to war is not worth any more than the opinion of the same number of men in any other vocation.

Mr. HOLT. I think their opinion is worth much more, because they are on the inside and know what the plans are. I have been told by Army officers that an army is being equipped for an overseas war and that certain equipment which is unnecessary for a defensive war is being built for an overseas war. No one can tell me that men on the inside do not know more about what is going on than men on the outside. Army officers know what they have been training soldiers to do. They are training them for an overseas war.

One hundred and forty-nine of the officers interviewed said we would enter the war; 23 said we would not; and from 11 there was no expression. I do not agree with the Senator from Kentucky when he says that the officers are not doing their duty. It would require only a few seconds to answer that question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not imputing to them any lack of diligence in the performance of their duties; but certainly it is not one of their duties to be interviewed by newspaper reporters. I asked the Senator who Mr. Trohon is. I am advised that he is one of the correspondents of the Chicago Tribune. I think the Senator will agree that it is not one of the duties of Army officers to answer questions as to whether we are going into the war.

Mr. HOLT. I thoroughly agree that that is not part of their duty.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know how difficult it is for men who are not experienced in being asked questions by enterprising and skillful reporters to refuse to answer, or to give answers which are not subject to misinterpretation. But certainly an Army officer who is possessed of any degree of responsibility ought to know, without anybody telling him, that it is not part of his duty to be interviewed or quoted, even anonymously, on whether we are going to war.

I will say further that I seriously doubt whether the Congress of the United States would consult any Army officer who had been interviewed or approached, or any other Army officer, as to whether we should declare war on any other nation.

Mr. HOLT. I will say again to the Senator from Kentucky that I do not say now, nor did I say, that it is their duty to be interviewed by newspapermen. However, I do not believe it is un-American for an Army officer to answer the question of a newspaperman. Army officers know that going on behind the scenes is a drive for war, and they know that it is a premeditated drive for war. They are familiar with the propaganda which is being put out and its effect.

Mr. White was in Washington during the past few days in an effort to drive home a little more propaganda for our entrance into the war. Of course, we may brush it aside and say that it does not mean anything. I say that it does mean something. Army officers know what it means.

DANIEL WEBSTER—HISTORIC INTEREST OF TEMPORARY SENATE CHAMBER

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I count it a very interesting experience to be privileged to sit as a Member of the Senate in this historic Chamber, so rich in associations and memories of the past.

As I have sat here for the past 15 minutes I confess that I have indulged in reminiscences of some of the noted men who have sat in this Chamber, and also their remarks. Of the many great leaders of the past who have fearlessly enunciated their theories of government and their principles and convictions in this historic Chamber, one such comes to my mind at the present time. He was a native of my State of New Hampshire, and a graduate of Dartmouth College. He became a great Senator from the State of Massachusetts. I refer to the immortal Daniel Webster, eloquent and powerful defender of the Constitution. In this room he made many important speeches, an excerpt from one of which I wish to bring home to the Senate today, for I believe it most timely.

Speaking in this historic Chamber in the first half of the nineteenth century, in a time of crisis in our Nation's affairs, Webster said:

> Other misfortunes may be borne and their effects overcome. If disastrous wars shall sweep our commerce from the ocean, another generation will renew it. If they exhaust our Treasury, future industry will replenish it. If they desolate and lay waste our fields, still, under a new cultivation, they will grow green again and ripen unto future harvests. But who can reconstruct the fabric of demolished government? Who can raise again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who can frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with State rights, individual security and public prosperity?
> No—

Webster thundered:

> If these columns fall, they will be raised not again.

Mr. President, Webster being dead, yet speaketh to the American Nation today. In my judgment, the purposes of the Senate can rise to no greater heights, and no greater privilege is ours, than to see to it, as United States Senators, regardless of party, race, or creed, that these columns of constitutional government shall not be impaired in our land, but that we shall still carry on a Government of laws, and not of men, and that in the heart of every citizen there shall be established the great affirmative conviction and belief that only through obedience to law shall come liberty. In so doing we shall pass on unsullied to those who come after us the great heritage which came down to us from the fathers.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Joseph Warren Madden to be judge of the United States Court of Claims.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, at the last meeting of the Senate, this nomination went over on my objection. I wish to make a brief statement about it.

Some of us are not convinced of Mr. Madden's judicial eligibility, and wish at least to have a full hearing on the subject before the Senate. Others of us feel that the Madden nomination is one of those matters of major controversy which fall outside the agreement which was entered into in connection with 3-day recesses of the Senate.

This morning I received from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] a telegram which reads, in part, as follows:

> Expected to be in Washington today, but cannot because of funeral of close, personal friend. In my opinion Madden confirmation is matter of major controversy, and I desire to present argument to a full Senate. Therefore I ask that a quorum be assembled before any action is taken.

Under the circumstances, while I have no parliamentary right to object to the consideration of the nomination, I express the hope that it may not be pressed, because if it is, I shall have to ask for a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to urge this matter if the Senator has any objection to the nomination being considered. Under the circumstances it probably will be necessary that the matter go over until the next session of Congress, because it was not contemplated a few days ago, when we entered into the arrangement for 3-day recesses, that the Senate would be called back for the purpose of considering a nomination, however important it might be. It will be unfortunate if this nomination cannot be acted upon before January. Does the Senator from Michigan feel that under those circumstances it would be proper for the nomination to be postponed from day to day until the next session?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has successfully explored the prospectus which, in my opinion, is involved. I see no possibility, without the presence of a quorum, of considering the matter of the nomination at the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the nomination is passed over.

POSTMASTER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William L. Galloway to be postmaster at Arcadia, La.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATOR NOMINATION REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report favorably the nomination of Harry E. Harman, Jr., of Georgia, to be Work Projects administrator for Georgia, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state it.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harry E. Harman, Jr., of Georgia, to be Work Projects administrator for Georgia.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that the nomination is endorsed by the two Senators from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified immediately of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Harman. He is acting administrator, the former administrator having been appointed regional director, and it is proper that the President be given immediate notice of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified, as requested.

POST-OFFICE NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report favorably a number of post-office nominations which have been submitted to the Senators from the several States for which the postmasters are appointed. I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration en bloc of the nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

TREATIES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask for the consideration of two treaties on the calendar. I refer to Calendar Nos. 7 and 32. Calendar Nos. 2, 4, and 6 are all treaties that cannot be disposed of at this time, because certain Senators are opposed to one or the other of those treaties. But Calendar Nos. 7 and 32 may, I think, be considered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, with reference to the treaty known as Calendar No. 7, I objected to the treaty. My objection is now withdrawn, and I agree with the Senator from Georgia that both treaties to which he has referred justify ratification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the treaties indicated.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive D (74th Cong., 2d sess.), a convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, providing for the transfer to Panama of two naval radio stations, signed at Washintgon on March 2, 1936, which was read the second time, as follows:

Article VI

The operation of the aforementioned stations will be in accordance with the provisions of the Convention for the Regulation of Radio Communications, signed today, it being understood that the Government of the Republic of Panama remains at liberty to operate the said stations or to abandon them or to change their location, as it may find convenient.

Article VII

The present Convention shall be ratified in accordance with the constitutional methods of the High Contracting Parties and shall take effect immediately on the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Washington.

[SEAL]	CORDELL HULL.
[SEAL]	SUMNER WELLES.
[SEAL]	R. J. ALFARO.
[SEAL]	NARCIS GARAY.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will say in connection with this convention that the Navy has abandoned the radio stations and has removed all apparatus. The convention, being one of a number entered into simultaneously or at about the same time, simply authorizes the transfer of the stations without their equipment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The convention is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive D, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, a convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, providing for the transfer to Panama of two naval radio stations, signed at Washington on March 2, 1936.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification [putting the question]. Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRADITION CONVENTION WITH COLOMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the convention, Executive Q (76th Cong., 3d sess.), a supplementary extradition convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Colombia, signed at Bogota on September 9, 1940, which was read the second time, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

All hail to the Lord's anointed! Thy name shall stand forever, giving hope and peace through all the aching, human years, wider than the world, longer than the ages. Thou who art the miracle and the might of our Heavenly Father upon earth, forbid that we should obscure Thy truth, for it is the power of God unto salvation. Teach us to submit ourselves to Thee, O Christ, for Thou art rich in mercy, love, and pity. Within the sweep of Thy redeeming power, grant that all drooping spirits may be inspired by the life hopeful and the life courageous. We humbly pray for the presence of humanity's Lord and King that He may arrest all passion and prejudice and lift man to the heights from which he is being struck down. Dark though the day may be, we entreat Thee to make our faith unwithering, unwasting, and commensurate with our needs and appeals. Heavenly Father, hear us for this burdened world, threatened with moral and spiritual paralysis, for its countless hosts whose names shall never be graven on a stone, and for all languishing hearts that give no sign. Thou art the one God and the one man our souls can follow through all the future, widening years. In the urgency of these days, we pray Thee that Thy strength, vision, and wisdom may be given our President, our Speaker, and the Congress. In our Saviour's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, November 28, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 305. Joint resolution to amend Public Law No. 861, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved October 17, 1940, an act to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 305. Joint resolution to amend Public Law No. 861, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved October 17, 1940, an act to promote and strengthen the national defense by suspending enforcement of certain civil liabilities of certain persons serving in the Military and Naval Establishments, including the Coast Guard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

NOVEMBER 29, 1940.

The Honorable SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Will you kindly accept my resignation from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to be effective December 1, 1940?

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT G. ALLEN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 640

Resolved, That HERMAN P. EBERHARTER, of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Foreign Affairs.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, permission was given me on Thursday to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include certain material. This material takes up a little more than two pages of the RECORD. I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and submit with it an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an article by Mr. Victor Schoffelmayer, agricultural editor of the Dallas News, which appeared in the Gilmer Weekly Mirror November 28, 1940. This article concerns the significance and importance of the sweetpotato crop to the farmers of east Texas, and, therefore, to the farmers in the Third Congressional District, the district I represent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Here is a letter dated November 29, from Washington, D. C. It is one of many; some from members of unions; some from those who do not belong to any labor organization. All protest against the un-American procedure of requiring a man who contributes to the support of the Government to pay an individual or an organization either a so-called initiation fee, membership dues, or special assessments, before the constitutional right to work, which is the heritage of every American citizen, can be exercised.

Let me quote from this letter:

I am a labor foreman at Fort Belvoir, and work for Potts & Callahan Co. The Building Laborers Local No. 74, located here in Washington, has given me until tonight, Friday, November 29, as a deadline to join their union or be dismissed. The organizer told me Tuesday, Friday (today) would be my last day unless I joined. The cost of joining is $58.

I get $50 a week straight time now. The union scale is 92½ cents per hour, or $37 for a 40-hour week. By joining I leave myself open for a cut. So I am not joining even though I am dismissed.

They are after all the labor foremen. None of them I have talked to intend joining, or so they tell me. So they may all get let out if the union has the power to do it.

Hope you will look into this situation.

I am turning it over to the House.

This letter presents a fundamental issue. This man asks whether he must take a $13 a week cut or give up his job on a Government project.

That is the issue he presents in his letter. I am presenting that issue to the Congress. Has the Congress the courage to give this man the answer to which he is entitled?

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend any remarks I may make today and include therein some excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PROFIT SHARING IN DEFENSE INDUSTRY

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, the Vultee strike is over but the problem it presents is not solved. The Attorney General has rightly condemned the Communist interest in promoting such strikes in defense industries, and we here join him heartily in that condemnation. Yet condemnation does not solve a problem. This problem extends its roots in many directions, but the taproot is the "cost-plus" contract, an evil considered to be necessary in these times. The cost-plus contract leads labor to believe that increased wages are of little consequence to the manufacturer, and the manufacturer meantime knows that most all his profit will be taxed away from him as excess profits.

Common sense leads us to the knowledge that mounting costs of production including mounting wages when projected into future time of peace will place our industry and our labor in a most disadvantageous position in competitive foreign trade. Therefore, for the good of all, and in the best interest of our Government and its budget, I earnestly propose that both labor and industry consider sharing the plus in the cost-plus rather than raising the cost. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it has been well said that death loves a shining mark. Two of the most outstanding, distinguished, and beloved citizens of Alabama have, since the last meeting of this House, passed to the Great Beyond and to their eternal reward. Each was a brother of a Member of this House. Dr. Albert S. Steagall, of Abbeville, Ala., and Judge Matt Boykin, probate judge of Mobile County, Ala., beloved brothers, respectively, of our beloved colleagues, HENRY B. STEAGALL and FRANK W. BOYKIN, have gone from the scenes of their earthly activities to a well-earned rest, amid the plaudits of their fellow men, to receive the heavenly plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant," which will be theirs.

I know that every Member of this House will be distressed by this sad news, and that our hearts will go out in sympathy to our bereaved Members and to the other members of the stricken families.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an article from the Christian Science Monitor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests. First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution adopted by the Inglewood Realty Board, of Inglewood, Calif., in respect to the need for military protection for airplane plants working on production under the national-defense program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Further, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after all regular business has been completed today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects, and include in each some short articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the legislative program today and following any special orders heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I was given permission to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement of Herbert Hoover on feeding Europe. I find that it exceeds the limit slightly, and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent to include it regardless of that fact.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement addressed to the President relative to highways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the Sunday papers announce that there will probably be two budgets, a budget for the regular establishment and then one for the war emergency. I am reminded of 1933, when the regular Government expenses were reduced a little for a while and those items of the so-called economic emergency were considered separately, and soon they were made permanent, and then there was only one budget. What I am contending is there is no use in having two budgets. The war emergency is going to be made permanent, too, and last just as long as this administration lasts, and we might just as well accept that and have one budget now instead of two. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAHON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

APPOINTMENT OF UNDER SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4370) authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe the duties, and concur in the Senate amendment to House amendment No. 2.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment to the House amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the matter inserted by said House amendment insert the following: "The compensation of the Assistant Secretary of War shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain exactly what this amendment does and why it is necessary?

Mr. COSTELLO. The amendment merely sets forth the salary that is to be paid to the Assistant Secretary of War of $10,000, which is the amount that the Assistant Secretary of War is now receiving. The purpose of inserting it in the bill is to clarify the situation and make definite that this amount should be paid to him. At the present time he is receiving that amount of salary, but if the legislation passes without this provision being enacted, there might be some doubt as to whether he should or should not receive a salary at all.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, the bill that passed the House the other day created a new position of Under Secretary of War; and how much salary does that position carry?

Mr. COSTELLO. The bill carried a salary of $10,000 for the Under Secretary of War, but it did not mention the salary that was to be paid to the Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. MICHENER. And the real purpose of that bill is to create a new office in between the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War, so that this new officer will outrank the present Assistant Secretary of War. Is that correct?

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is quite correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Am I correct in this statement, that when the President appointed Secretary Stimson, as reported in the press, Mr. Stimson took the position with the understanding that he was to select his own Assistant Secretary of War, who would be responsible to him? Now under this proposed law, this Under Secretary of War will be appointed by the President and will be responsible directly to the President, and the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson, will be a figurehead, and the purpose of this amendment is to see that this figurehead continues to get $10,000 a year. Am I correct about that?

Mr. COSTELLO. The Under Secretary of War would be responsible to the Secretary.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, so that another body may have time to consider the Smith amendments, while we are thinking this over, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments, and I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House concur in the Senate amendments. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, the amendments, put in the bill by the Senate, that have just been read are principally clarifying amendments. However, there are several amendments that go to the substance of the bill. I shall direct my remarks to two of those amendments.

The Senate amended section 4 by striking out all of subsection (d). This was a section in which it was provided for the payment of damages where a person's property was taken without there being an adjudication or final determination of the matter in controversy and provided for the payment of pecuniary damage. That applied principally to orders of the Department of Agriculture, where, for example, a shipload of salmon was ordered destroyed without there being a hearing on the question of whether or not the entire shipload was contaminated. It applied to the destruction of orchards in Florida, where the Department of Agriculture ordered that certain sections be destroyed in order to eliminate the fly pest and similar other cases.

The Senate struck that out, which means, of course, that citizens will be relegated, in the event this bill becomes law, to the remedy that they have under existing law.

One of the other amendments that goes to the substance of the bill has to do with the setting aside of a decision of the administrative agency. The Senate struck out the provision that was in the bill as it passed the House, requiring the Court to set aside a decision where the findings of fact are clearly erroneous.

In the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary, that is not of great importance, because the Supreme Court in the case of the Appalachian Power Co. against National Labor Relations Board has laid down a rule with respect to substantial evidence that permits the Court to go as far in setting aside a decision as the majority of the members feel the Court should go. In that case the Supreme Court held that substantial evidence means such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion.

Probably the elimination of this one reason for the setting aside of a decision is a good thing at this time. I am not so certain. However, our committee has accepted that amendment as well as all of the others.

Now let me call attention to some recent decisions of the Supreme Court that offer conclusive proof that this legislation is needed, and is needed now.

The law of the land, the last pronouncement of that Court on this subject is the case of Federal Communications Commission against Pottsville Broadcasting Co., decided some time in the early spring of this year. In that case the Supreme Court said this:

> It is always easy to conjure up extreme and even oppressive possibilities in the exertion of authority. But courts are not charged with general guardianship against all potential mischief in the complicated tasks of government. The present case makes timely the reminder that "legislatures are the ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the court." (M., K. & T. Railway v. May, 194 U. S. 267–270.)
> Congress, which creates and sustains these agencies, must be trusted to correct whatever defects experience may reveal. Interference by the courts is not conducive to the development of habits of respectability in administrative agencies.

My friends, there is an engraved invitation from the Supreme Court of the United States to the Congress to enact legislation that will permit the courts to review the decisions of administrative agencies.

In that particular case the court said, in effect, that the agency was wrong in its decision; that the conclusions that were reached by the Federal Communications Commission were away beyond any authority given to that Commission by the Congress. But the Supreme Court said that that is a matter for the Congress to correct. So, I repeat, there in that decision is an engraved invitation for us to meet this situation.

This decision follows the decision in the case of Lukens against Perkins. All of you are acquainted with the so-called Walsh-Healey Act. In that act we provided for the payment of minimum prevailing rates of wages in localities in which work, and so forth, is to be done for the United States. The Labor Department found as a fact that 62½ cents an hour—a wage which, incidentally, is not enough—was the minimum rate of wages, when in fact it was the maximum. It was the rate paid by one of 64 steel companies in the eastern part of the United States. The Labor Department found that 62½ cents an hour was the prevailing rate, when it was the exceptional rate.

One of the so-called Little Steel companies took an appeal to the circuit court of appeals from the decision of the district court refusing to grant an injunction against the Secretary of Labor. The circuit court of appeals overruled the district court in a sound opinion that could not be honestly criticized. The case then went to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court said, in effect, that even though the decision of the Labor Department was erroneous, and it clearly was, Congress did not provide for a review of the decisions of that agency and therefore the aggrieved citizen was without a remedy. In its opinion the Court ignored entirely the very plainly expressed intent of Congress in its desire to pass on to the Congress the responsibility of compelling the agencies which we create to carry out their work in accordance with the law. These are only two of a great many instances of clear abuse of power which I could stand here and enumerate if I had the time and the inclination.

Since the turn of the century the courts have gradually departed from the old rules of providing for judicial review of decisions of administrative agencies and have come around to this final pronouncement. I say that it offers conclusive proof that we, the Representatives of the people, must insure to every citizen his day in court through the enactment of this bill or a similar one. A great deal of time—many months—has been spent in the consideration of this legislation, and I have yet to hear a valid argument against it. When the Senate had the bill under consideration it is very significant to note that no opposition to the merits of the bill was offered, and in that I am indeed disappointed, because I did want to know what could be said against the bill. To those who criticize the bill without advancing any reasons for their criticism except the bare statement that it will hamstring the agencies of government, let me point out the fact that there are provisions for court review of decisions of administrative agencies and those agencies are not prevented thereby from carrying out the functions they were created to perform. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, last week the chairman of the Judiciary Committee gave notice that on today the Committee would move to take from the Speaker's table the Walter-Logan bill, H. R. 6324, and seek to have concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Why is this House being asked to concur in the bill as it passed the Senate instead of sending the bill to conference so that the long list of Senate amendments can be thrashed out and explained? Could it be that the explanation for this unusual procedure is that the Senate amendments cannot stand analysis?

The circumstances under which the Senate made the amendments to the bill are most significant. The Committee on the Judiciary did not offer any explanation of the proposed amendments either by way of a committee report or on the floor of the Senate. On November 26, 1940, Senator BARKLEY, the majority leader, after stating his opposition to the measure and his belief that the Senate ought not to act upon the bill without the benefit of further information, informed the Senate that—

> If the proponents of the legislation are ready for a vote on it now, we are ready for a vote on it now. * * * Let the Senate declare itself, and let the country understand the circumstances under which the vote is taken.

The clerk thereupon proceeded to state the committee amendments, and the Senators were called upon to vote. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary offered 13 amendments to the bill. All of these were adopted summarily without the benefit of any debate upon their merits. Similarly, an amendment offered by Senator HATCH was agreed to without any discussion.

The House is now being asked to accept on faith alone these 14 amendments which were made in the Senate without debate or discussion. Among these amendments are an unconstitutional provision, an amendment deleting a provision which this House had voted to retain, and an amendment failing utterly to carry out its obvious purpose of reconciling this bill with the interests of national defense. An examination of only 5 of these 14 amendments to the bill will demonstrate the necessity of a thorough exploration of the purposes underlying them and of the adequacy of the language used to carry out the ends in view.

First. Section 2 (a) of the House bill provided that administrative rules shall be issued "only after publication of notice and public hearings." The Senate has amended this provision so as to require that all notices of hearing "shall set forth the language of the rules proposed to be adopted." Only the rule proposed, or that rule as amended, can be promulgated.

This amendment bears the earmarks of hasty, ill-considered action. We all know that many agencies, dealing with new problems, find it necessary to hold hearings in order to obtain information upon the basis of which regulations may be drafted. These are "informational hearings," whose purpose it is to discover whether, in the public interest, any regulation should be issued at all, and if so, what form the regulation should take. It would defeat the whole purpose of such a hearing if the agency had to issue in advance a proposed draft of a rule.

Now suppose as informational hearing is held without a proposed rule, and the agency has received full information and has given full opportunity for the expression of views by all interested parties. Even though the rule which the agency wants to put out is satisfactory to all concerned, there will have to be another hearing on the proposed rule before it can be made effective.

One looks in vain for some evidence that the Senate has considered the practical effect of this amendment upon the actual workings of the agencies. Is it not the obvious duty of the House to inquire more closely into the question before taking final action on the Senate amendment?

Second. Section 4 (d) of the House bill affords a full and fair hearing on any matter arising out of the activities of any independent agency. The Senate has amended this provision so as to strike out the word "matter" and substitute in its place the word "controversy."

Now this might seem, on casual inspection, to be a minor change not worthy of much attention. Yet, let us examine the amendment a little more closely. The word "controversy" is defined by section 1 (9) of the bill to mean "any dispute or disagreement concerning any claim, right, or obligation for or against the United States and any refusal to grant any license, permit, or other privilege." Suppose the Labor Board issues a complaint charging an employer with an unfair labor practice. This is a matter on which a hearing is now required. Yet is this a "controversy" within the meaning of the Senate amendment? Clearly not. It is not a dispute concerning a claim, right, or obligation for or against the United States, nor is it a refusal to grant any license, permit, or other privilege. Under the Senate amendment an employer may find himself without the right of hearing in such a case. Do the proponents of the bill in the House conceive this to be its purpose?

Similarly the Civil Aeronautics Administration now holds a hearing before issuing a certificate of public convenience and necessity. Such a proceeding does not fall within the definition of "controversy" and, consequently, under the Senate amendment, there is no right to a full and fair hearing.

Is the House going to accept an amendment with such peculiar consequences upon faith and faith alone?

Third. Section 5 (a) of the bill, as passed by the House, provided, in part, as follows:

> Any decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous; or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; or (3) that the decision is not supported by the findings of fact. * * *

The Senate adopted an amendment striking out "(1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous." This deletion of the provision for judicial review of findings of fact was made without explanation and apparently without any realization of what was being done.

This clause was the subject of considerable study and debate while the bill was before the House. For example, in the hearings held before the subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, several witnesses called attention to its importance. The gentleman from New York, Representative CELLER, in his minority report of the Judiciary Committee, emphasized the fundamental changes which would be accomplished by the provision:

> Section 5 (a) would permit the courts to review the weight of evidence and upset the findings of fact of administrative bodies and officers if the courts deemed them contrary to the weight of evidence. This far-reaching result is to be accomplished by the seemingly innocuous clause which would permit the court to reverse findings of fact if clearly erroneous. What constitutes "clearly erroneous" is, of course, a matter of opinion. These are the words of rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which have been construed as permitting the courts to review the findings of a trial court. There is, of course, a vast difference between the findings of a trial court and the findings of an administrative tribunal or officer. It is a principle that has been deeply imbedded in administrative law for a great many years that findings of the latter type should not be subject to appellate review, unless it appears that they are not supported by substantial evidence. The Supreme Court has recognized this principle in its decisions; the Congress has done so in legislation providing for court review in certain quasi-judicial matters. Finality in respect to findings of fact must reside somewhere if the operations of government are not to be constantly delayed and fettered.

In explaining the bill to the House, its sponsor, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Representative WALTER, stated (86 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4537):

> There is a serious question as to how far the courts may go in setting aside the decisions of any agency. The bill provides seven grounds for the reversal of a decision of an agency. The first ground is that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous. This is the rule of the Supreme Court of the United States, that applies when a circuit court passes on the judgment of a judge trying a case without a jury.

After considerable discussion of the merits of this clause authorizing the court to set aside an administrative order where the findings of fact upon which it is based are clearly erroneous—probably more discussion than on any other provision of the bill—the gentleman from Mississippi, Representative RANKIN, offered an amendment on April 17, 1940 (86 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4670), striking out this provision. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, agreed to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. Nevertheless, when the question was put to a vote, the House voted—by a teller vote of 106 to 70—to reject the amendment.

It is apparent, therefore, that the Senate, without any independent consideration of the merits or significance of its action, has amended the House bill so as to eliminate a provision which was regarded in the House as being of fundamental importance. After full consideration and debate, the House rejected the amendment which was made by the Senate without the benefit of any explanation whatever.

Is not this House entitled to an explanation why it is being asked to accept, without a conference, an amendment previously rejected?

Fourth. The Senate amended section 5 (b) of the act to provide for review by the Supreme Court of decisions of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals reviewing administrative rules under section 3 of the bill. This provision is clearly unconstitutional.

Section 3 of the bill, as passed by both the House and the Senate, provides that the District of Columbia Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine whether any administrative rule is "in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the statute under which issued." It is further provided that the court "shall have no power in the proceedings except to render a declaratory judgment holding such rule legal and valid or holding it contrary to law and invalid."

During the course of the debate in the House the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] called attention—86 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4538—to this provision and to the indisputable proposition of law that an advisory opinion on an administrative rule as provided for in section 3 of the bill does not come within the "case or controversy" requirement of article III of the Constitution, and, consequently, such advisory opinions could be rendered only by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, which is a so-called legislative court. Obviously, the Supreme Court cannot be vested with jurisdiction to render advisory opinions under section 3 of the bill—the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is limited to actual cases or controversies. This is a fundamental principle of constitutional law which has repeatedly been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court. As an example, I call your attention to the case of Keller v. Potomac Electric Power Co. (261 U. S. 428), at page 444.

In explaining the bill to the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] took notice of this elementary rule of constitutional law. He stated that the court of appeals' power to render advisory opinions under section 3 was final, and that this finality of decision was desirable because "we would not want the business of our Government * * * tied up through endless litigation; so the right to review lies in the circuit court of appeals and from that decision there is no further appeal."

The majority report of the House Committee on the Judiciary also referred to this question:

> It cannot be stated with certainty at this time whether the Supreme Court of the United States would review the decisions of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in the exercise of jurisdiction under section 3 of the bill. It is to be hoped that the Supreme Court will do so in proper cases, but even if it does not do so the individual will receive greater protection than he now has through the exercise of greater care on the part of the administrative agencies to make their rules conform to the terms of the law and through the subsequent review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

It is obvious that the Members of the House were aware of the constitutional prohibition against vesting the Supreme Court of the United States with so-called advisory jurisdiction to render abstract judgments with respect to the validity or invalidity of administrative rules.

Nevertheless, the Senate amended section 5 (b) of the bill to add the italic words:

> The judgments of the circuit courts of appeals under this section and section 3 of this act shall be final, except that they shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 244 of the Judicial Code as amended.

Under the Senate amendment, the advisory opinions of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals are subjected to review by the Supreme Court of the United States. This amendment flagrantly disregards the provisions of the Constitution and the decisions of the Supreme Court interpreting the Constitution. Any student who has taken even the most elementary course in constitutional law knows that the Senate amendment is unconstitutional. I am dismayed that the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee—known the length and breadth of this land as a profound scholar in the field of constitutional law—should ask this House to concur in such an amendment.

Fifth. At the last minute, Senator HATCH offered an amendment proposing to insert in section 7 (b) of the bill, which enumerates the agencies excepted from the provisions of the bill, the following: "Including the Council of National Defense and the advisory committee thereto, the priorities board, and any other agency or authority hereafter created to expedite military and naval defense." This amendment was agreed to without explanation or discussion.

This amendment is a legislative afterthought, hastily drawn and hastily enacted, designed to prevent the Walter-Logan bill from hampering the national-defense program. Yet, even superficial examination makes it clear that the amendment falls far short of accomplishing this purpose. For example, it is extremely debatable whether an agency set up to exercise the price controls which might be necessary in a period of national emergency would be considered an agency "created to expedite military and naval defense." If it were not so considered, its every action would be subject to the paralyzing provisions of the bill. It would not be difficult to name at least a dozen other agencies whose functions might be necessary to the successful operation of the national-defense program and as to which there would be grave doubt whether they were agencies "created to expedite military and naval defense."

Moreover, the exception covers, in addition to the agencies expressly named, only those defense agencies which are created hereafter. Yet, no one can deny that several existing agencies are performing functions which are indispensable to the workings of our defense program. In this connection, it is sufficient merely to refer to the functioning of the Defense Communications Board, which works in cooperation with the Federal Communications Commission, Army, Navy, and other government Departments. If the President found it necessary to delegate some of his emergency powers to an executive department or to any one of the great number of agencies which are subject to the provisions of this bill, this amendment would not achieve its purpose of freeing the defense program from the bill's restrictive provisions. It is extremely doubtful, moreover, whether the administration of the Selective Service Act is excepted from the provisions of the bill as amended by the Senate.

The House passed this bill before the fall of the French Republic, before our great national-defense effort got under way. The Senate had a chance to deal with the problem but it failed.

I say to you that the Senate amendment fails to take care of the needs of national defense. I say to you that the Walter-Logan bill, as it stands before you today, would throw a monkey wrench in our great defense effort. The House must see that this amendment is so written as to carry out its obvious purpose—or take the consequences.

These are 5 of the 14 amendments made by the Senate. Can there be any doubt that further study and conference is necessary before any action should be taken on these 5 amendments as well as the other changes made by the Senate? The passage of this bill, encumbered by these ill-conceived, hastily-drafted, never-explained Senate amendments, is an abuse of the legislative process far worse than any of the abuses charged to the administrative agencies by the proponents of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, why is there such a desire to rush this bill through this House? As I said the other day, we have gone along for over 150 years without legislation of this character. Is it going to be harmful for us to go along without it for another 2 or 3 months? I say to you in all sincerity that, in my judgment, the movement to send this bill to the White House today is not sound legislative procedure. No one knows this better than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] said on this floor the other day that the President's committee named by the Attorney General had held only 1 meeting. It has held 26 meetings—6 were public meetings—and it will hold another meeting this week. It has secured information from every Government agency. It is going along in a proper orderly way to bring before this Congress information that it needs in order to properly consider legislation of this character. We can all wait until this information comes to us. There seems to be no reason why this bill should be hurried along.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In a moment. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], who asked the other day: "Why make this a political question? This is not a political question." No; it should not be a political question; nor do I want to make it a political question. Let us think of the welfare of the people of our country and not of politics. But when you look at the vote in the House of Representatives on this bill and you find a solid Republican vote in favor of the bill, and then to the other side of the Capitol and find a solid Republican vote in favor of the bill, what conclusion must you draw as to who made it a political question? Surely it was not the Democrats.

I say to my colleagues who have stood on this floor and worked night and day in behalf of the progressive legislation we have enacted during the last 8 years: Here is an effort to destroy that legislation; here is an effort to take away from the masses of the people of this country all the benefits we have granted them. That was the issue in the last campaign. Do you want to keep your benefits, or do you want to let someone destroy them? The American public by a great majority said they wanted to retain those benefits. Here is an opportunity to retain them. Retain them by voting down the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important item of legislation. In the beginning I want to direct the attention of the House to one amendment referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], who has just spoken. This amendment and the provision of the bill of which it is amendatory is a thing in which everybody in the House is tremendously interested. They have to do with selective training, or what is popularly known as compulsory military service. if the conclusion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is sound—that the Senate amendments or the bill as amended would result in retarding the defensive efforts on the part of this country—then I agree the motion which I have made to concur ought to be defeated.

This bill was formulated in the Committee on the Judiciary when I was in the hospital last year, and I am not as familiar with the details of the bill as are other members of the committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], chairman of the subcommittee, has had major responsibility. But this particular amendment was called to my special attention and I have looked into it carefully. I am positive that my good friend's apprehensions are not well founded. Insofar as I know, that view is held by the membership of the committee. For the purpose of the record, I want to make a brief statement with regard to that amendment.

The question is, Does the language contained in the bill as amended in the Senate exempt the activities of the Selective Training and Service Act from the powers of this bill? This is the language of the applicable portion of the amended bill. I quote subsection (b), section 7, near the bottom of page 15:

> Nothing contained in this act shall apply to or affect any matter concerning or relating to the Military or Naval Establishments, including the Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission thereto, the Priorities Board, and any other agency or authority hereafter created to expedite military and naval defense.

It will be observed that the word "matter" is used, which is perhaps as broad a word as there is in the language.

I know of no broader word in the language—at least, no word of more general use or of broader meaning wherever appropriately used. It is not only broad in its whole scope, capable of covering the physical universe, litigation, and everything else that I know anything about, but it is broad particularly in the field of legislation, government, and judicial decisions.

The provision of the bill under examination is that "nothing contained in this act shall apply to or affect any matter concerning or relating to the Military or Naval Establishments." The word "matter" is used as a synonym to "thing" in this provision. It is broader, however, than "thing."

It will be observed from this language that the bill not only excludes from the operation of this bill the specific agencies that are having to do with the Army and the Navy, but it excludes whatever any other agency not excluded may do concerning or related to the Military or Naval Establishments; not merely the Army and Navy but more broadly to the "Military and Naval Establishments." It is perhaps broader than the authors intended it to be. It covers everything that may be done by any agency concerning or relating to the Military and Naval Establishments.

Certainly nobody will contend that the activities under the Selective Training and Service Act—I believe that is the title—or those who are operating the machinery established by the Selective Training and Service Act, are not doing a thing that is of "concern" to the Naval or Military Establishments or that "affects" them. They are providing for those establishments all their personnel that does not reach the Army and Navy by volunteer enlistment. There can be no controversy about that. It was largely for the specific purpose of exempting those activities that the Senate amendment was incorporated.

The next question is, Does the inclusion of the Council of National Defense, and so forth, in the Military and Naval Establishments by specific mention, under the rules of construction "the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another," bring the activities under the Selective Training and Service Act, done to provide Army and Navy personnel, within the provisions of the bill? It will be observed that the language "including the Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission thereto, the Priorities Board, and any other agency or authority hereafter created to expedite military and naval defense" broadens the normal definition of the Military and Naval Establishments. It brings these particular activities into the Military and Naval Establishments and is language of expansion of those establishments and not language of exclusion. When you come back to make an examination of the language to which I first directed your attention, you will find, as I have already indicated, that this language in its application is not at all limited to the Army and Navy Establishments, whether considered within their normal limits or as expanded by the provisions of this bill, but it goes far afield in the anxiety and purposes of everybody connected with this legislation that it do not interfere with the preparedness program, an important part of which is provided for in the Selective Training and Service Act. It has gone so far afield as to exempt acts done by any agency that concerns or is related to the Military or Naval Establishments.

Now may I say just a word with regard to this sort of legislation to which my friend is in opposition. He made some observations that we have gotten along for 150 years without this sort of legislation. That is true, but the plain fact is, and everybody knows it whether you approve of it or not, that in the last 10 years we have gone infinitely further in the direction away from which this bill would seek to turn our faces than we have gone in the remainder of the 150 years of that history. That is just the plain fact. Whether you approve it or disapprove it, that is so. This is another fact which cannot be controverted, the direction in which we are now traveling, with reference to individual rights and the allocation of governmental powers, whether you believe it necessary or not, it must be agreed, is in the opposite direction from that which we have believed we were traveling for over a thousand years of what we believed was democratic progress. We have gone so far and traveled so fast that if we are to turn back, we must now call upon the legislative genius of America and the administrative purposes of America to devise some plan, speaking specifically to the purposes of this bill, under which private citizens aggrieved by the determinations of these boards may have adjudication by a court, or else we have to abandon our system of government. There is no use trying to fool ourselves about that. [Applause.] I know it is difficult to reverse the trend. I am not sure how we are going to do it. I am not sure we have got the will to make the fight and pay the price in order to retain a government of laws and the necessary governmental machinery and the necessary distribution of powers of a democracy, but I am not willing to abandon the effort because it is difficult. It is certain we cannot do this job unless we try.

Speaking practically, I do not know now how we can reach the road we left. I know the general direction and I know where this road we are traveling now leads to, and I do not want to go there. I believe in the people and their capacity to govern themselves, but we have got to preserve democratic institutions and a democratic distribution of governmental powers if we are to preserve a democratic government. While millions of other peoples are risking their lives to preserve the possibility of such a government we are moving governmental powers into an appointed personnel and are fighting only whether we shall subject the exercise of those powers to a judicial review. Trying to turn back against the pressure of the present trend, of course, will be a difficult job. We are probably going to find out how to do it only by trying to do it, by working at it. It cannot be done in a partisan spirit. This is a job for all the people. There is no use in criticizing these administrative officers. They are trying to do their jobs. They are running true to form under the sort of government we are now operating. They do not want to be interfered with by some court. That is a natural attitude under the circumstances. That is an attitude associated with the kind of power they possess. I have heard people get up on the floor of the House and criticize this administrative officer or that administrative officer. Fundamentally considered the fault is not with them. Personally I like the ones I know. They are trying to do a good job. They do not want to give up any of their power. That is a natural thing. They do not want any court interfering with it. The greater their arbitrary power the less the disposition to submit its exercise to review. These things are basic in human nature, not personal.

I doubt if either Hitler or Mussolini would consent to have their acts reviewed by a court proceeding under the provisions of law and the rules of evidence. We cannot deal with the great problems of government by criticizing persons. It is a natural, established limitation of human nature that with the consciousness of great power there goes its oppressive exercise. That is the lash of nature punishing people who clothe officials with powers which cannot be questioned elsewhere. In a free government men are not supposed to exercise arbitrary power over other men. There is supposed to be some tribunal to examine the conduct of every human being, whether public official or private citizen, whose conduct affects any other human being. It is recognized that that ideal cannot be fully attained, but it is the objective toward which the people of a democracy should constantly struggle.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is not in criticism. It was stated recently on this floor that this bill is a reflection upon the President. It is not. We have got to get away from that attitude. There is only one big job in America, and that is preserving this, the greatest system of popular government that has even been evolved through the processes of the ages. [Applause.] That is not an easy job, but it is the big job, worthy of the supreme effort of a great people, who, unfortunately, have not been working much lately at the job of governing themselves. It is a job that challenges the supreme effort of as great a genius as was developed by any legislative body on earth. The question is, Can we make the grade? Every trend of these times is pushing us backward on what has been universally recognized as the road of progress of popular government. This does not mean we have to yield to that pressure any longer. That is where we make a mistake these days. We seem to assume that the way we should go is the easy way. The easier way is the way downhill. The way of progress is up hill. There is lots of sweating, straining, and effort. The fast way, the easy way, is the way downhill; it is the way that leads to the crash, to death and destruction. It takes a great people to climb the hill that is in front of us. Climbing the hill, surmounting the difficulties, make a great people. Only a great people can retain their freedom in times like these. A people who will surrender their great institutions and fundamental rights because it is difficult to operate the former and preserve the latter cannot win in times like these.

I recognize the difficulties in this situation. It is a job for all of us. I wish we could one day come on the floor of this House and discuss fundamental principles of government and their practical importance without anybody wanting to confuse their consideration by injecting the person element of some public official. I wish the newspapers would help to bring these matters to the deliberate consideration of the people, unconfused by party interest or attitude toward public officials. We have got to close up these lines of cleavage. Policies change. But great principles of free government are as eternal as the God of whose economy they are a part. I wish we could get rid of slogans for a little while, look at the compass, read the signs which the generations which have gone before us along the road of democratic progress have erected for our guidance and our warning.

I have supported much of what is called New Deal legislation, but fundamentally we can get ourselves a new deal when we get ourselves a new god, and not more quickly than that. These great principles of government are evolved out of God Almighty's great economy. He intends that people may be free. That is why they love liberty, that they may struggle to be free and develop by the struggle and develop by the thinking and the doing incident to governing themselves.

We seem to think that just because we are able to go somewhere faster than other generations went, even though we may know less what to do when we get there than any other generation, that nobody else had any sense but us. We are not so sure about that as we were a little while ago.

We have had everything to make us a happy, contented people. Here we are in this tremendous governmental mess, and everybody knows it. I take my part of the blame and the shame of it all. I would like to do something about it. We owe it to those who are to follow us in responsibility.

Talk to me about defense and preparation. What we have to have in this country is a great generation prepared not only to fight but to pay the price in civic service incident to the maintenance of free government on the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. My distinguished friend says that we are struggling up hill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We have to struggle up hill.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. For 20 years we slid down, and now we have been struggling back.

My distinguished friend, the gentleman from Texas, says this measure, the so-called Logan-Walter bill, is designed to check a trend. I assume he refers to the trend that the Congress set in motion when it placed on the statute books the various New Deal measures, measures designed to broaden the opportunities of the average man. All who have studied this measure must realize that if it becomes a law every agency of the Government that was set up to administer New Deal measures will be hog-tied and hamstrung. All activities designed to aid labor, to insure the people cheaper electric rates, to provide unemployment insurance, and old-age pension assistance will be throttled. In fact, this measure will do to the New Deal what Willkie's election was intended to accomplish. The passage of this measure is a complete repudiation of the popular vote given President Roosevelt on the 5th day of November, 1940. I shall vote "no."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Bringing about a condition under which a man cannot go before the courts of his country and have adjudicated a question of individual rights, I do not believe in that respect we are making much progress. I know our job is difficult, but I want to begin trying to do it. The longer we put it off the more difficult this job will become, and the less our capacity to do it will become. The capacity to do a thing begins to disappear immediately after you quit working at it. This bill may have a lot of imperfections. It points in the right direction. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the Logan-Walter bill is one of the most important measures that has been considered at this session of Congress. Briefly, the bill provides for uniformity of procedure and appeal in the administrative agencies of our government. It provides that if a citizen is substantially affected by an order or regulation of one of these agencies and wants to appeal to an unbiased court—he shall have the right to do so. It would make the decisions and regulations of the various boards, bureaus, and commissions and other agencies, subject to judicial review by the courts. Review would be allowed on the grounds and according to the procedure set out in this legislation. The purpose of the bill is to regulate the administrative bureaus and agencies that have grown up like mushrooms in this country, and to bring their activities under the Constitution and principles of due process of law—which are binding upon the courts of our land. This bill has been described as a measure to regulate the regulators.

This proposed legislation attempts to follow a fundamental principle of our Constitution—that every person is entitled to his day in court and to "equal protection under the law."

Only a few years ago we had approximately 20 or 25 bureaus and commissions as a part of the administrative agency of our Government. That number has increased so rapidly during the past few years that we now have about 130 of these bureaus, boards, and commissions, clothed with more power and more authority than anyone could imagine.

Mistake was made, of course, in not providing procedure of this kind when these agencies were created—but Congress, in its eagerness to carry on the objectives of the administration, created these agencies and granted them the power and authority that has just been described. As a matter of fact, under the present scheme of things, we have practically set up a fourth branch in our Government—by giving these independent offices a combination of legislative, executive, and judicial authority, whose orders are not subject to review by any court, but are absolutely final. No governmental agency should have the right to make its own rules and regulations and then be the final arbiter in such cases.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, a good many of the agencies of government have been omitted that could well have been included in this bill; but since the committee have seen fit to leave them out, I am not at this late day going to question their judgment.

A growing power of bureaucracy in a representative government is dangerous, and, if permitted to continue, will destroy democracy itself. These bureaucrats, who may be well-intentioned, are, after all, not responsible directly to the people but only to the administration that appointed them; and it is only human nature for those in charge of the various agencies of our Government to take unto themselves all the power and authority they can assume.

Our Government is one of checks and balances, and this law, when put into effect, will help protect the people against any autocratic control that may come about because of the authority and power which has been placed in the hands of these agencies. Contrary to the fundamental principles of democracy, there has been a trend among these commissions and bureaus by which the fancies and ambitions of men are directing the destiny of this great Nation. In other words, we are becoming a people governed by men and not by law.

Similar provisions to those contained in this measure were included when the Food and Drug Act was enacted; and, by the way, up to this time, I am informed, there have never been any appeals from the decisions of that agency. The very fact that such provision was included in the law, I think, has had a wholesome effect. So far as I can find out, the only serious objections made to the present bill during the hearings were made by the representatives of the bureaus. We do not find representatives of large groups of people of this country opposing this measure, but, on the other hand, we do find groups like the American Federation of Labor, the Grange, the American Bar Association, and others who are asking that it be enacted into law.

Democracy, with all its progress and its ever-increasing complexities, is on trial. Vitally important right now, when we have so many troubles from within as well as without, is the question as to how to further protect our representative form of government, which is rapidly becoming a government of boards, bureaus, and commissions, which, if continued unchecked and unregulated, may destroy the very form of our Government itself.

Mr. Speaker, the whole problem is whether we are to be governed by bureaucrats, rather than by law and the orderly processes of the courts. Or, by putting it another way, we must decide whether or not our Government is to be a democracy controlled by men or governed by law. Unless the situation is checked now, we are headed for a government of administrative absolutism.

Let me quote the great American statesman, the late Senator Borah:

> Of all forms of government which have ever been permitted to torture the human family, the most burdensome, the most expensive, the most demoralizing, the most devastating to human happiness, and the most destructive of human values is a bureaucracy. It has destroyed every civilization upon which it has fastened its lecherous grip.

The people of this country are looking to Congress to see that the sacred rights reserved to them under our Constitution and the law of the land are properly protected. The passage of the Logan-Walter bill will, in my judgment, protect those rights.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, any sound interpretation of liberalism means that the individual citizen must be protected alike against the evils of economic and political monopoly. The Walter-Logan bill, therefore, is definitely a piece of liberal legislation which will help protect our citizens against abuses of power and excesses of authority by political boards and bureaus of the Central Government. All true liberals will support this legislation. It is probably the most forward-looking piece of legislation to come before Congress in many years.

For many years, and more especially during the past 8 years, the drift toward the centralization of economic and political authority in Washington has gone forward at an alarming pace. No one interested in genuine self-government and the liberal concepts of the American system whereby the individual citizen is safeguarded from discrimination and dictatorial acts by powerful interests, political or economic, can fail to support the Walter-Logan bill on which we shall vote in a few minutes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] well said in his remarks today that the biggest problem confronting America today is the preservation of our system of self-government. I agree with him most emphatically. And to the end that the framework of self-government may be retained and protected in this country, I know of no more important step which this Congress can take than to enact this legislation today by accepting the Senate amendments and passing the bill along for the approval of the President.

Some commentators, both in and out of Congress, have sought to discourage passage of the Walter-Logan bill on the grounds that President Roosevelt would consider it a limitation upon the powers of his Executive appointees and would therefore veto the bill either upon those or upon some less forthright grounds. No man, I believe, is today in position to promise that the President will approve or disapprove this bill and no man can arise today and state for a certainty whether or not this bill is in harmony with the President's plans. I hope those who assume that President Roosevelt is so determined to expand the powers of the Executive to the point of vitiating the entire system of checks and balances upon which our governmental structure rests are totally and eternally wrong. I hope so for the sake of all America. I cannot make myself believe that the President's zest for personal power can be so great that he would veto a bill which has such universal acclaim and support. But, whether this legislation faces Presidential approval or disapproval is not the question at issue; the important thing is not whether or not this bill is in harmony with the Presidential pattern. The thing that really counts in this decision is that the provisions of the Walter-Logan bill are in harmony with the American system of self-government. In fact, in view of recent trends toward the totalitarian technique in this country, it can almost be said that the provisions of this legislation are indispensable to the preservation of the American system of self-government.

This House cannot prevent a Presidential veto, but we can and must keep faith with freedom-loving people everywhere by passing this legislation now that we have it within our power to do so. It is the country's best safeguard—perhaps its only one—against the development of a vast centralization of power in this country which can defeat the functioning of the democratic processes of life if it does not destroy the structure which gave these processes their origin.

Mr. Speaker, we have come a long way from the Jeffersonian concept that "That Government is best which governs least." Between 100 and 150 Federal commissions, boards, bureaus, and agencies now function out of Washington, and the sum total of their regulations—each with the force of law but coming into being without the due processes of law—would, if collected, fill some 20,000 pages. This is more, in volume, than all the laws passed by Congress since 1789. We are told these regulations include over 5,000 different prohibitions against ways of doing business in America; to violate any one of these is to commit a crime. Still the honest businessman, seeking to avoid conflict with the law, can find no one place where he can find these manifold regulations and consult their implications. New regulations and provisions have been multiplying so fast from these more than 100 sources of laws not made by Congress and never considered by any group of men elected by the people that the collectors and the codifiers have been unable to catch up with them. Surely this bill to give the innocent violator of these bureaucratic laws an opportunity to have his day in court is not an unreasonable degree of protection to give the citizen in this Nation dedicated to the principle of government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

I hope this legislation can receive the near-unanimous support of the Members of this House. If this bill becomes a law, December 2, 1940, may well come to be referred to as another great emancipation day in American history; it will mark the day when the first effective step was taken to return government to the hands of the people and to turn back from the ugly goal of administrative absolutism toward which America has been moving by a process rightfully termed by someone as "creeping collectivism." This bill will tend to restore the check-and-balance system which for a century and a half has served us well and will help protect America from falling into the errors of executive supremacy which are today accountable for so much human misery and unhappiness in Europe and Asia.

Permit me now, Mr. Speaker, to conclude these remarks by quoting briefly from a recent editorial on the subject of the Walter-Logan bill written by the ever thought-provoking Raymond Moley and published in Newsweek in its issue of December 2:

Having produced this monstrous aggregation of rule-making commissions and agencies, Congress, like Frankenstein, appears incapable of finding a way to control its creature. It has now spent over 2 years kicking around the only measure that has a chance to regulate the regulators—the Walter-Logan bill.

The purpose of this bill is "to prevent administrative absolutism." It makes possible a judicial review, not only of the rules laid down by administrative agencies but of the facts in individual cases. Essentially it gives the citizen recourse to the Federal courts as a protection against a process by which the combined functions of prosecutor, judge, jury, and executioner are lodged in the same bureaucrats.

Committees of the Senate and House began considering this bill more than 2 years ago. The House passed it on April 18, 1940. The Senate had passed a somewhat different version of it on July 18, 1939, but, shortly after, Senators BARKLEY and MINTON had maneuvered to get it returned to the calendar. There it rests, together with the House version and a favorable report from the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The bureaucrats and their spokesmen have made every effort to hinder its passage. To possibly legitimate criticisms of detail have been added the most sweeping objections that no "single formula or set of formulas" can properly regulate the bureaucratic agencies. To the initial maneuverings of Senators BARKLEY and MINTON has been added a series of flagrantly obstructionist moves. Twice the Senate has been asked to delay action until it gets a report on the bill from a committee appointed by the Attorney General. Twice the dates on which the report was supposed to have been presented have gone by without so much as a sight of the report. More than twice the administration has tried to get Congress to go home, knowing full well that the Walter-Logan bill will die if it is not acted upon by the Senate before adjournment.

But some Members of the Senate seem to have realized, at last, the danger—the immediate danger—of the Frankenstein's monster they have set in motion. The very strategy the bureaucrats have employed seems to have given these Members of Congress the jolt they needed. For, after they let themselves be twice put off by the request that they wait for the Attorney General's committee report, they awakened to the fact that they had simply been induced to surrender more of their legislative power to the executive branch of government.

The purpose of Congress is to consider legislation on its own account and through its own expert services. When Congress runs to an administrative agency for advice as to how to extricate itself from a mess it created in giving administrative agencies too much power, and when Congress permits itself to be hog-tied by such an administrative agency, it is destroying the primary reason for its existence.

It would do Congress, the bureaucrats, and the public no harm to ponder what Winston Churchill said last week when a new session of Parliament was inaugurated. "We proclaim," he said, "the faith and sincerity of our resolve to keep vital and active, even in the midst of our struggle for life, even under the fire of the enemy, those parliamentary institutions which have served us so well and which the wisdom and civic virtue of our forbears shaped and founded. * * *" If, in a supreme emergency, the Prime Minister can say that, we, in our relatively protected situation, do little credit to ourselves if we permit the surrender of the prerogatives of our supreme legislative body.

Grant that there are imperfections in the Walter-Logan bill. But remember that there was no such real or pretended strain for perfectionism when Congress was engaged in regulating business agencies. Bills were passed in fewer days than the Walter-Logan bill has taken in months. Business was told that some inequities were inevitable in general legislation. Now the shoe is on the other foot. The regulators are to be regulated, and apparently they can't take the medicine they so gaily dished up for others.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain quotations from the writings of Raymond Moley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Those of us who oppose this measure have had little or no opportunity to speak on it. I believe this is the most dangerous concentration of power in the hands of the judiciary that has been proposed in this House since I have been a Member. I shall oppose the adoption of these amendments and, if the bill is passed, and vetoed, I shall take pleasure in voting to sustain the President's veto. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, silence is impossible for me as I contemplate the far-reaching effect of this Logan-Walter bill. It is obviously intended to place all the power of government in the hands of the judiciary and to neutralize, if not to nullify, the progressive acts of this administration. In time to come we may well dispense with the inanimate executive and administrative branches of the Government and do likewise with the legislative. The creation of a judicial autarchy will eventually destroy our free Government and our institutions. It is unfair and unwise to satisfy this lust for power on the part of the courts which already have extended their powers beyond what the Constitution permits. It is wrong to adduce to the courts all the wisdom, honesty, and infallability and to label this branch of government the paragon of perfection. I would rather take my chances with a properly balanced administrative board or agency dealing with a special and highly technical problem than to have some judge who is bigoted, partisan, ignorant, or subject to influence pass upon a matter which affects my business or profession. The courts are not infallible, they are not perfect, and they must not become the one and only all-powerful branch of government, for if they do, and we are headed that way, then I fear the final outcome.

An administrative agency after long and tedious study of fact and the law decides a case and for trivial reasons the problem is then taken to the courts. An autocratic or labor-hating judge can, and often will, without much deliberation and without compunction destroy the work of a duly constituted agency or board of the Government. There are sufficient safeguards now in the laws; there ought not to be any further tampering at this time, and by a "lame duck" Congress bent on venting its spleen upon the administration which has received the historic and precedent-establishing imprimatur of a third term at the hands of a grateful people. As for me I shall have to vote "No," because I demand for myself additional time for study. Should the report be approved, I trust the President will veto the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD, giving my views on the pending measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. The Walter-Logan bill has been pending before the Congress for many months. Extended committee hearings were held in the House. All those interested in the enactment of this legislation on either side, and who so desired, were fully heard. The bill passed the House months ago by a vote of 282 to 97. Practically every leading newspaper in the country has commented editorially on the contents of this bill. It has been spectacularized in the news columns and on the radio. It is, therefore, far fetched indeed for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to even suggest that the Members of the House are not familiar with the terms of the bill. I am sure that he would not intentionally reflect on either their diligence or their intelligence.

Business organizations, commercial organizations, civic organizations, labor organizations, women's clubs, and all the rest have given study to the need for this legislation, and many of these organizations have sent memorials to the Congress urging enactment. They at least are familiar with the bill. The gentleman from Missouri deprecates these memorials, and in his speech last Thursday he charged the Congress with being influenced by letters and opinions of their constituents and from those engaged in business and industry in our respective districts. Well, for my part, I am always glad to have the views of my constituents on any proposed legislation. I do not always agree with all of these constituents, yet, if my constituents are enough interested in legislation to inquire about it, get copies of the proposals, study the terms, and then express opinions as to the merits or demerits of the bill, I for one do give consideration to their views. I do not condemn them for speaking their minds.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], coauthor of the bill, and who as chairman of the subcommittee conducted the hearings on the bill, has explained intelligently and accurately the only material amendments added to the bill in the Senate. That explanation has not been challenged and cannot be successfully challenged.

Those who are opposed to administrative absolutism in its most virulent form feel that the Walter-Logan bill should become a law. They are opposed to law by bureaucratic fiat and without appeal. Of course, this is not a perfect bill. Of course, there are theoretical possibilities that might question the efficacy of some of its provisions. Yet no legislation is perfect. As long as men are human it necessarily follows that the laws they enact are fallible. The general purpose of this bill will be most wholesome, and a fair administration of the law and a judicial consideration of the rights of those affected by the law will do much to better present conditions.

As I suggested on this floor last Thursday, this is not a political measure. It will pass this House by a substantial vote of both Republicans and Democrats. It will then go to the President, where, we are advised through the press, a veto awaits it. If this is true, then the bill will not become a law at this session of Congress. Regardless of that eventuality, the very fact that the Congress has so definitely indicated its opposition to a bureau or board acting as prosecutor, jury, and final judge is bound to serve notice on these bureaucrats as to what is going to happen if they continue some of their autocratic conduct. The Congress has the power to wield the big stick in the interests of the people if it has the courage. After all, what is wrong with having the court pass upon the legality of a decision by a commission, a board, or a bureau? Are these agencies above the courts? When the Congress makes a law, which is tantamount to a regulation or ruling of one of these creatures of Congress, then the courts are always open to the appeal of any citizen who feels himself discriminated against by the law. Are these boards, bureaus, and commissions of higher power and authority than the Congress? Certainly not. To hold otherwise is to abandon our form of government.

The explanation of this bill made by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], is pregnant with common sense and the philosophy of our form of democracy. It is difficult to understand how one can read this bill, consider these amendments, listen to the explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], and consider the remarks of the chairman of the committee and then vote against the amendment.

If these amendments should be rejected on the roll call that is soon to follow, that will mean that the bill, as amended, will still be on the Speaker's table. It will remain there unless sent to conference or referred back to the Judiciary Committee. Either course means the death of this legislation for this session of Congress without the bill ever reaching the President. It is apparent that there is a quorum present. Are you going to reverse the position you took when this bill passed the House, or are you going to again assert your independence? In the final analysis the safety of the Republic resides right here in the legislative branch of the Government. Why should not the courts be permitted to function as contemplated by the Constitution?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the pending measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the approval of this conference report is just what is needed at this time to put a rein on the unbridled bureaucracy that is overwhelming us with arbitrary agencies which assume and exercise all the functions of prosecutor, judge, and jury. Our democratic-republican form of government has no room for agencies which exercise such arbitrary power and the way to curb their unwarranted power is to subject their arbitrary decrees and decisions to an impartial court which is just what one of these Senate amendments provide. This will give both employee and employer an impartial tribunal where justice may be rendered to all. That is the supreme object of a free government.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not possible that the gentleman can yield to some members of the committee who understand these Senate amendments to let them explain to the House just what is in these amendments, so that the Members can vote on them intelligently? Nobody seems to be explaining the amendments. Everyone is extending his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. The only amendments the Senate made to the bill, as I stated before, were as to form, and all those that went to the substance of the bill were explained.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not understand the word "clarifying," after reading these amendments, in the same manner as the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Maybe the gentleman does not understand the amendments.

Mr. COCHRAN. Probably I do not; but I understand them about as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 134, noes 33.

Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. FITZPATRICK objected to the vote on the ground that a quorum was not present.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, a quorum is not present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 51, not voting 203, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

HJALMAR M. SEBY

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3729) for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] familiar with this bill?

Mr. HANCOCK. The bill has just been called to my attention. I find it is disapproved by the Comptroller General and by the officers of the W. P. A., and I object.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. HANCOCK. There is a report of about 72 pages, and I have not had time to read it. I have read the first 2 pages and I find it is objected to by the officials concerned, and therefore I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman will withhold his objection and give me an opportunity to explain the bill. It is certainly most meritorious and should be immediately passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make a statement. The Chair never agrees to recognize any Member with respect to any measure unless they tell him they have consulted with the so-called objectors.

Objection is heard to the consideration of this bill, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER BETWEEN ST. LOUIS AND EAST ST. LOUIS

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9683) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, this comes with the approval of the entire Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. This act originally passed in 1934. There has been some difficulty during these many years to secure the financial structure with which to build this bridge. This bill has been amended in such a way that in a period of years it is going to be a free bridge. That was not in the original bill.

Mr. MICHENER. The bill has the unanimous approval of the entire committee?

Mr. HOLMES. It has the unanimous approval of the entire committee, and, as far as I know, every Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., authorized to be built by the city of East St. Louis, Ill., by an act of Congress approved May 3, 1934, and heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved August 5, 1935, May 1, 1936, June 2, 1937, June 29, 1938, and July 25, 1939, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from May 3, 1939.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, after line 5, insert:

"SEC. 2. That portion of the second sentence in section 4 of the act approved May 3, 1934 (48 Stat. 661), which reads 'or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management,' is hereby repealed; the amended sentence will then read, 'After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls.'"

Page 2, line 16, change the figure "2" to the figure "3."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it adjourn to meet on the following Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The Speaker laid before the House the following resignation:

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KLEBERG, indefinitely, on account of attending the inauguration of the President-elect of Mexico.

To Mrs. BOLTON (at the request of Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. PEARSON (at the request of Mr. COOPER), for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. RABAUT, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. STEFAN (at the request of Mr. TAYLOR), on account of official business;

To Mr. SHEPPARD, for 20 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LECOMPTE (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Iowa), for 10 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. DITTER (at the request of Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT), on account of official business.

To Mr. SMITH of Connecticut, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. MAY, on account of sickness in family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and insert therein an article by Nicholas Cefalo, chairman of the legislative committee, World War Veterans of the United States Merchant Marine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINE INSPECTION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, we now know that the 31 miners entombed in the coal operation near Cadiz, Ohio, have perished. The reason I mention this today is that there is pending on the Speaker's desk petition No. 35, which would bring to this floor the so-called Federal mine-inspection bill, looking toward the health and safety of miners in this country.

This bill, sponsored by Senator NEELY, of West Virginia, has passed the Senate of the United States by unanimous vote. During the time it has been pending on Capitol Hill more than 1,600 miners have perished while engaged in the operation of mines in the United States. This House should have an opportunity during this session to discuss on this floor the merits of this measure. I trust that some of those who have been giving serious thought to placing their names on that petition, in order that the bill could come before us, will now give it further consideration, and do just that. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a copy of certain correspondence.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to add a little to what the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] has just said.

About 3 months ago I called the attention of this House to a similar accident in which 34 lives of miners were snuffed out in an explosion. It is very likely that if we had had in effect a Federal mine-inspection bill, for which there is a discharge petition on the Speaker's desk, those lives could have been saved and we would not now have the widows and children of those miners to take care of.

The bill should not have any objection from the industry and certainly it has the complete support of every workingman in the mines and those who are familiar with the problems which they have. I do hope that this House will seriously take into consideration this bill and pass it and in the future save the lives of these miners whose lives are lost because the mine owners do not have proper inspection. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parlimentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the Walter-Logan bill passed the Senate and the Senate amendments have been agreed to by the House this morning. The bill now goes directly to the White House.

The SPEAKER. As soon as it is enrolled.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; as soon as it is enrolled. Am I correct in assuming that the President is going on a vacation in the Caribbean, and that we shall not have the bill back here for vote on veto, before the 16th day of December when he returns, at the earliest?

The SPEAKER. If the present occupant of the Chair finds out what day the President will act on this bill he will certainly notify the gentleman from Michigan and all other Members.

Mr. MICHENER. On behalf of those on this side of the aisle, I thank the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT—AMERICA'S SOCIAL CEMENT

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, we are seeking as Americans to unify our Nation and make it strong. We are seeking a unity of spirit and a common economic bond for all of us. We are seeking to reach down into the wells of human desire and find there forces that can be channeled into a stream of common effort.

But we are hopeful that we can accomplish all these things without any increased reliance on Government. We want less, not more dependence of our people upon the public purse. Above all, we hope to see an increase of responsibility and initiative in the solution of problems and the development of constructive forces among the people of the thousands of American communities.

All these things I am convinced are possible. As I have studied and listened to the stories of the quiet, steady, substantial growth of cooperative associations among the consumers and the farmers of America, I have become more and more convinced that here is the thing that can, to a very great extent, answer the need we find in our country today. For the interest of the people as consumers is a universal interest—the one universal and therefore unifying economic interest in all modern life. As producers, each of us, each group of us, has a particular interest which frequently comes in conflict with the interests of other producer groups. But the interest of the consumer is the interest of the whole Nation; there is no difficulty whatsoever in including in a consumer group all sorts and conditions of citizens, whether they be rich or poor, employers or employees, farmers or factory workers.

Moreover, here is a method requiring no action by Government, no regulation, no law, no penalty, no subsidy, no bounty whereby the central economic problems of this machine age can be attacked and overcome. By means of the cooperatives, even great monopolies can be compelled to behave and serve the public interest for a fair, rather than an exorbitant, return.

This year, organized consumers in Ohio taught the fertilizer trust another lesson. The Farm Bureau Cooperative Association of Ohio invested about $250,000 in three fertilizer compounding plants. Immediately, the trust cut the price of fertilizer by $4 a ton. That price cut applied only to Ohio. It was made, obviously, to crush the consumer cooperative. But the consumers met the competition, unfair as it was. The net result was the farmers in Ohio saved this year $700,000 in fertilizer cost and on an investment by the cooperative of only $250,000 in permanent plants. And the benefits of this action went to every farmer in Ohio whether or not they were members of that cooperative. But it was the co-op members who did the job.

The central problem of achieving a balance between the power to produce and the power to consume can, at the very least, be advanced a long way toward solution by increasing the buying power, yes, and bargaining power, of the rank and file of the consumers of the Nation. The problem of parity for agriculture—a problem as central to our national health as any problem in the whole broad land—not only can but to a degree has been solved by means of cooperative action of consumers—in this instance, again farmers—in Ohio. Listen to this testimony from Mr. Murray D. Lincoln, manager of the Ohio Farm Bureau Cooperatives and vice president of the Cooperative League of the United States, given before the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, on April 16, 1940.

I hope all of us who are struggling and have been struggling to solve our farm problem will pay particular attention to this quotation from Mr. Lincoln, because he tells how the consumer cooperatives in Ohio have begun to solve the farm problem. We have been seeking parity prices for the farmer for years, spending billions of dollars to get parity, and we have not got parity. But in Ohio, in those commodities, where the cooperatives have developed, they have parity and better for the farmer consumers. And it has not cost the government a cent to do the job. And, more than that, it has been done through the consumers themselves, and thus certainly it has contributed greatly to the building of character among those people. I want you to listen to Mr. Lincoln, because, as he says, here may be the way out we have long been seeking.

Now—

He testifies—

I have been the secretary of the Ohio Farm Bureau since 1920, and we have gone through the McNary-Haugen bill, and all the other things that you folks in the Senate have tried to do for agriculture, and we now recognize—not criticizing what has been done all the way up to the present—but we recognize we have been trying to get parity, and we haven't got it. The figures of the Bureau of Agriculture Economics seem to indicate that we have spent better than eight billion and a half dollars since the passage of the Farm Board bill trying to get parity, and we have not gotten it.

Meanwhile, the farmers, thinking of this entirely incidentally, have gone to work to organize their purchasing around what we call the user approach. I interpolate that is the consumer approach. And I would like to show you * * * how the farmers, through their own user organizations, have gotten better than parity.

In other words, where we organized to buy our own fertilizer this year and produced it—as we are doing in cooperation with the G. L. F. of New York (another farm-cooperative organization), the Indiana Farm Bureau, and the Michigan Farm Bureau, and others—farmers today are going to buy their fertilizer in Ohio at an index figure of 80, or, if they buy double strength, at an index of 64.

I stop here in reading Mr. Lincoln's quotation to remind you that is from 20 percent to 36 percent better than parity. Now I continue with the quotation:

We are now buying automobile insurance at 54 percent of parity. Our gasoline, because we have gone into the gasoline business, we are buying at 62 percent.

There is the story of how they are getting parity in Ohio. In fertilizer they are from 20 to 36 percent better off than parity; in automobile insurance they are 46 percent better than parity; in gasoline they are 38 percent better than parity. And in Ohio, as well as elsewhere, they are developing other buying and producing fields, as I shall later show.

The workers in the factories of this country, the men and women who labor to produce our wealth, are entitled to the hope that in some good day and in some good way they will become the owners of their factories and the masters of their own destiny.

I hope these workers will read carefully the story told by Mr. Howard C. Cowden, president of the Consumers Cooperative Association of Kansas City, in a speech delivered at the silver anniversary celebration of the Cooperative League of the United States, the organization which is the voice of the consumers' cooperative movement in this country. It is an inspiring story that Mr. Cowden tells—the story of how factories may be free to the workers who desire to own them. I wish that every worker in this country would read this statement and then write to the Cooperative League of the United States for further information. The league has its headquarters at 608 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill. Incidentally, I wish they would get from the league and study a little pamphlet, Organized Labor and Consumer Cooperation, written by James Myers.

It is fortunate, indeed, for this great country of ours—fortunate for you and me—that our workers may still aspire to ownership; that they have not lost faith that in this country and under our democratic processes of government they may become the masters of their own destiny. If that hope should perish from the hearts of the men and women who toil at the lathe, the bench, or the spindle, we might well fear that our democracy was doomed. We must all recognize that a democracy is a spiritual entity. It must live and grow in that deep desire which is in the breast of every man—that desire for the greatest measure of freedom for himself and likewise for his fellow man; and in this world of material things, of necessary food and drink and shelter and clothing, we must admit that freedom for the man who toils must be intimately associated with ownership of the means of life.

This is no wild, no radical concept. We may recall that one of the greatest forces in the world for law and order, the Catholic Church, spoke out several years ago for methods which would encourage and help the workers to share in the ownership of the factories in which they worked.

Recently, while I was passing through Chicago, I stopped off for a few minutes at the hall where the Cooperative League of the United States was having its silver anniversary celebration. I wish that I had had more time to participate in that convention and I wish that all of you could have viewed the exhibits there. I doubt there are many of us who realize how rapidly the consumer cooperatives have grown—how they now own their oil refineries, their oil wells, their pipe lines, their fleets of trucks, their fertilizer factories, paint factories, grease-compounding plants, coffee-roasting plants, their casualty and life insurance companies, and, now, two small banks.

And in this connection I think you should know of the inspiring story of how the Consumers Cooperative Association of Kansas City financed in part its great modern refinery at Phillipsburg, Kans. The stock certificates stipulated that the maximum dividend that ever could be paid on the stock would be 4 percent. The association had no trouble in selling enough stock to make their refinery possible. Now, it might seem impossible to those who think in terms of high finance, stock-market gambling, to sell stock in a refinery when the stock could never pay more than 4 percent, but it was done. It was done by this consumer cooperative organization—and they could do it again.

The most recent encouraging development in this cooperative movement is that the cooperatives have found the consumer approach to our economic problems and they have turned their great energies in that direction. I think most of us think in terms of farm cooperatives when we refer to the cooperative movement because it was the farm cooperatives which made the first real strides in cooperative organization in the years after the farm crash of 1920. They were altogether properly encouraged as a method of helping the farmer. Unfortunately, we did not broaden the concept at that time and encourage them as an instrument of the entire public interest, not alone for the farmer but also as a means of help to the man in the city. Most of the cooperatives among farmers were and are today marketing or producer cooperatives. They have done a splendid service—those marketing cooperatives—and they form one of the principal bases for solution of our agricultural problem. But I think there is a warning sign for them in facts and in economic philosophy.

The marketing cooperatives, fine as they were and are, inspired as they have been to do a great service, cannot be wholly free or effective so long as they are dependent on a market which is controlled by the buyers of farm commodities. And if the market is controlled by any monopoly, the marketing cooperatives have to deal with that monopoly. I call your attention now to a recent proposal from a great distributing organization to set up a gigantic buying pool. This proposal has not developed sufficiently to give us a clear indication of what it might lead to, but I refer to it now to indicate how the marketing cooperatives may be forced to fit their pattern to the monopoly cloth.

But the marketing cooperatives have the road to freedom open to them. Their salvation is in the development of the consumer cooperatives. The consumer cooperatives, organized in accordance with the Rochdale principles, where men and not money control the business, are free economic agencies, and they must continue that way. And if they do, and if they grow, they can offer a fair market outlet for a great proportion of what the farmers' producer cooperatives have to sell.

I am glad to learn that the marketing cooperatives throughout the country are beginning to turn their energy into the development of the consumer base for the whole movement.

The cooperatives must grow, must expand. That is a sound principle in cooperative philosophy. They must not be bound to or associated with any class movement. They must not be imprisoned within any group. If we try to build fences around the cooperative movement, or cooperatives, if we try to fetter or bind or to confine them to farmers or to city workers, then we try to fetter and imprison the one great element in the cooperative movement which makes certain that cooperatives can be successful. We try to fetter and bind and imprison that spiritual impulse which is necessary to the cooperative movement. We try to fetter and imprison a soul. In effect, we try to make the cooperatives a class movement, a selfish thing; and, I repeat and emphasize, the cooperative movement cannot be selfish and live.

Therefore I am glad to have this opportunity to give Mr. Cowden's inspiring story to the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I hope that through this story, and other similar stories, the workers in the cities will be inspired to take the road to ownership and to freedom, inspired to be masters of their own destiny. Here is the opportunity for leadership. Likewise, I am hopeful that this story may be helpful in inspiring every leader in the cooperative movement to strike down and destroy utterly any proposal or condition which may fetter the growth of cooperatives, which may encourage them to become associated with selfish class interests. I am sure there are few, if any, such leaders, because the cooperative movement destroys the incentive to selfishness. But I want the cooperative leaders to justify their faith. They have been given a great gift, the opportunity to know and understand the inspiring truths of a great human movement. They have now a responsibility to spread the gospel and unite every phase of the cooperative movement in the one great cause, the common good, the consumers' welfare, and thus the welfare of all America.

Mr. Cowden's speech to the Congress of the Cooperative League of the United States was as follows:

Along in 1932, at the bottom of the depression, a farmer in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas, where they grow fruits and vegetables, wired his Congressman:

"If you don't do something to improve the exchange relationship between farm and industrial products, we're going to have a lot of fat and naked farmers running around down here."

This matter of exchange has been no joke to the farmer since the end of World War No. 1. When the price of wheat, for example, falls from $1 a bushel to 50 cents, debts of the farmer in the Wheat Belt are doubled. When the price falls to 25 cents a bushel, the obligations are quadrupled. We have seen these very changes in the prive level since the World War of 1914–18. But we have not seen corresponding swings in the prive level of finished goods.

Relatively low prices for farm products and relatively high prices for finished products brought finally a complete collapse in both country and city. The evidences of that collapse still are to be seen all about us. Even after thousands of foreclosures, the farm-mortgage debt still remains close to seven and one-half billion dollars—a staggering total. The drift toward tenancy and the concentration of our land resources into fewer and still fewer hands has been greatly accelerated by depression. Thousands of farmers were forced off the land altogether, into the towns and villages and cities, there to compete in a labor market already glutted. Or they joined the ranks of migratory workers, to become the "Okies" pictured in The Grapes of Wrath, to become wanderers on our highways. You can see them today along the roads in every State. Government estimates have set the present tragic total at 500,000 homeless wanderers. And the thing that should be sobering to every person in a position of leadership is the further Federal estimate that 40,000 persons, who have not been on the road before, are joining the procession each year.

Every time a farmer slips down the ladder from landowner to tenant; every time a tenant is squeezed off the land to become a migratory worker; every time land ownership is given into fewer and fewer hands, our political democracy is undermined by that much. When economic freedom is having convulsions, political freedom cannot long remain unaffected. Certainly we cannot maintain free political institutions in the face of a rising feudalism.

How the prostrate condition of agriculture has affected industry and the city workers is told graphically in Thurman Arnold's new volume, The Bottlenecks of Business. I quote:

"In 1920 the American farmer got 50 cents of each dollar spent by the American consumer. He was spending that 50 cents to buy manufactured products. Today he gets only 30 cents of each consumer's dollar. He cannot buy the same proportion of manufactured goods. He has lost 40 percent of his proportionate purchasing power. That loss expressed in dollars is $1,800,000,000 each year. The manufacturer did not get this money. It has simply disappeared. * * * How is the farmer making up that loss? He is getting $1,000,000,000 subsidy from the Government. But he is still $800,000,000 short if we keep to these rough figures * * *."

Under such conditions the factory must look in vain to the country for customers able to buy products in the quantity that would be good for them and good for industry. Hence the unemployment problem grows in the cities, and the farm problem grows at the same time, because urban unemployed are not good customers for farm products. Farm surpluses pile higher and city bread lines lengthen. It is a vicious circle in which both the farmer and the urban wage worker find themselves. And let me say here that every time a city worker is thrown out of his job, every time he returns home after tramping the streets vainly in an effort to find work, democracy is weakened to that extent.

The small-scale businessman is being slowly but surely crushed out along with the people he has served, and every time one of them is forced to the wall—not through inefficiency but through the ruthless tactics of some monopoly—democracy is weakened to that extent. On the other hand, corporations having assets of a billion dollars or more each have increased from 6 in 1919 to 26 at the end of 1938. Reports of the Temporary National Economic Committee and the National Resources Committee ought to be required reading for cooperators. They present a startling picture of wealth concentration, of the growing power of monopoly over the lives of the people and their local, State, and Federal Governments.

The great disparity between prices received by farmers and prices paid by farmers over a 20-year period has transferred much of rural wealth from many hands to the hands of a relatively few men at the head of great financial and nonfinancial institutions in our large cities. Under such a system the collapse of agriculture was inevitable, and with it the break-down of our total economy. The drain, being always one way, eventually transferred the ownership of land from the agricultural areas to the financial centers. There has been a veritable revolution in agriculture in the 20 years or more since the first World War.

All these suggestions of the appalling problems we face—and I have mentioned only a few of them—are so elementary, so well known to most of you, that I repeat them here with some misgivings. I do so only to contrast the distance we yet have to go with the distance the consumer cooperation movement has traveled thus far in the United States. There may be a tendency on the part of many of us to grow satisfied with the progress the movement is making when we gather once every 2 years to survey results. There may be a feeling that we're doing a whale of a job, that we're becoming an important factor in our national economic life, that we are the real consumer movement in this country.

May we be saved from such smooth content. While the economic juggernaut is creating derelicts faster than they can be rehabilitated through social agencies; while we have millions of young people for whom there is no place in the economic scheme of things; while we have millions of old men and women living at or below a subsistence level after a lifetime of hard toil; while all these things and more exist, may we recall the words of the poet: "Lord, keep me still unsatisfied."

Actually, of course, we have only scratched the surface of our possibilities. Actually we have barely made a start, as a movement, in supplying consumption goods used in the home. Primarily, the movement remains one for purchasing farm supplies, when farmers spend more money for consumption goods used in the home than for consumption goods used in production.

We are just now getting into manufacturing in a few fields. In the insurance field, which has piled up billions of wealth in the money centers, to be controlled by a few men, we are just now making a belated start. In the vital building-supply field, controlled by a few giants, we are not even an important factor. We still have a long, long way to go in the distribution of food for human beings, a field in which several regional wholesales have not yet made a start. We are not manufacturing a single product as a national movement, and we ought to be.

We are yet a long way from being the closely integrated movement regionally and nationally that we eventually must be if we are to give this economy the "institutional balance" suggested in the report of the cooperative committee of the National Education Association. We have not yet reached the point in most regions where we can reverse the banking process, which piles up our spare change in the money centers. We have not developed fully "loan capital" plans like the one now in effect among Scottish cooperators—a plan which has given the wholesale at Glasgow more capital than it needs. Our savings, all too often, are financing our competitors.

We have not yet built the number of credit unions we need, or rather we have not yet shown consumers in many areas the value of pooling their excess funds, and increasing them through savings, to meet their small-loan needs. We have not yet built a coordinated educational program nationally that links up and supplements our educational efforts regionally.

We have made progress, to be sure, but we still have a long, long way to go, and "it's later than you think." Our task is to check the drain of wealth into the hands of those who already have more of this world's goods and more of power than is good for any set of men. Those whom the machine age has disinherited must acquire the ownership of stores, wholesales, factories, and the machinery that makes and distributes goods. This means that our problems must be attacked from the consumer end. This means there must be organization of consumers along every major front if ownership of the machinery that ministers to life, and all that such ownership implies, is to be restored to those who work. To save our political freedom and give it meaning we must implement it with the economic freedom implicit in the consumer cooperative program.

Turning now to the subject of this address, Factories are Free for Cooperators, I want to tell briefly how far along the road we of Consumers Cooperative Association have traveled since 1929. Now and then, on looking back over the depression years we have operated, it seems we have come a long way. We realize fully, of course, that we are just getting started.

When Consumers Cooperative Association began business as a petroleum wholesale in North Kansas City, Mo., in 1929, it began to compound lubricating oils. It did so because it found it could not depend upon the quality of the oil supplied by an old-line oil company.

So C. C. A. put in its own oil compounding equipment. In only a few months the savings had paid for the plant. By merely charging themselves the same price they'd have paid anywhere else, Consumers soon had title to an oil-compounding plant of their own. What had been profit to the privately-owned oil company became savings for cooperators.

Savings made in the oil-compounding plant made it possible for Consumers Cooperative Association to buy its present home in North Kansas City—the office and warehouse built originally by an oil company that failed to survive the depression—an oil company which once declared the business of C. C. A. too small to bother with.

When C. C. A. moved into its new quarters in September 1935 there was equipment on hand for making one type of grease. Equipment for making other types was added and the first shipment made in December of that year. By the end of 1936 the savings had more than paid for the original and all the added equipment necessary to make all types of grease generally in use.

By charging themselves the same price for grease they would have paid anywhere else, cooperators made enormous savings. They not only had control of quality in their own hands, but they brought out new and improved greases for their own use. Consumers still are making important savings in the manufacture of grease, all because they own and control the process, and support it loyally with their patronage.

Early in 1936, C. C. A. began manufacturing paint in a small way. The savings paid for the paint plant in less than 6 months. A new paint mill was added in 1937. Other new equipment is being added now. It is producing two and a half times as much high-quality paint under the co-op label as it did 3 years ago—at a saving to member cooperatives.

Petroleum products, with their originally wide margins, allowed the wholesale to accumulate capital rather rapidly. Because of it, we literally lubricated our way into other commodities, such as groceries, building supplies, electrical appliances, and other products used on the farm and in the farm home. When our volume of refined fuels reached above 50,000,000 gallons a year, and when margins in the retail field began to dwindle, members and directors saw the need for a refinery of their own.

Even though retail distribution was the least profitable field of the petroleum industry, major oil companies still were making enormous profits out of crude oil production, refining, and pipeline transportation. Directors and members felt that C. C. A. should claim for consumers the savings to be made in those fields, so members of the board voted, in the summer of 1938, to build a refinery at Phillipsburg, in northwestern Kansas. Later they voted to build a 70-mile pipe-line connecting the refinery with oil wells in three nearby counties. It was the first cooperative pipe-line in the world and the first cooperative refinery in the United States. The 3,000-barrel plant, now turning out 11 different kinds of refined fuels, and the connecting pipe-line, represent an investment of some $850,000.

The plant not only gave a degree of balance to a purely agricultural economy, but it also furnished employment to a great number of men during construction and to 90 men regularly after it was placed in operation. Oddly enough, employment in the consumer cooperative movement has expanded rather steadily throughout the depression. Besides these things, the coming of the refinery resulted in the construction of new homes in Phillipsburg, the drilling of new oil wells nearby, the creation of a market for 90,000 barrels of crude oil a month, increased payments to farmers from whose wells the oil was taken, a greatly improved business condition throughout the whole region, a region which had been hard hit by drought.

Someday we hope to set out in book form the dramatic difficulties we had in getting a contractor to build the refinery. Someday we want to tell in full the story of our difficulties in getting sufficient crude oil after the new refinery was placed in operation, difficulties which, before they were solved, required us to spend $45,000 for 22 miles of additional pipe-line. It will, we believe, make an interesting sidelight on the tactics of major oil companies.

The quest of big business for profits, by the way, is at the base of nearly all the international complications that flare into the headlines. The recent revelation of the New York Herald Tribune of the connection between Capt. Torkild Rieber and Dr. Gerhard Alois Westrick, Hitler's ambassador-off-the-record to United States businessmen, is a case in point. Rieber, chairman of the board of the Texas Corporation, a major oil company, was forced out when the spotlight of pitiless publicity was turned on his alleged relationship with the Nazi envoy. Rieber is the man, by the way, who furnished Fascist Franco with petroleum products, during the civil war there, in return for a virtual monopoly of that country's oil business.

Contrast, if you will, the peace-loving cooperative movement with the peace-disturbing combines. The co-ops are interested in exchange of goods to serve human need, without profit. The combines are interested in profit primarily, even at the expense of exploiting other peoples to get it. A system which is based upon the high principle of service has the ability to coax out the good in people, according to Albin Johansson, of Sweden, while a system based upon a desire for profit, upon gain at the expense of others, must influence people in exactly the opposite direction. I agree.

Consumers will pay for the 92-mile pipe line in a few years merely by charging themselves the same rate for every barrel of crude oil flowing through it that a privately owned company would collect for a similar service. They will pay for the refinery in a few years by selling refined fuels to themselves at the going price—the price they'd have to pay other refiners. They've paid for other pipe lines and other refineries many, many times in the past 25 years, but they've never acquired title to them. This time they're on the high road to unencumbered ownership through their day-to-day purchases from their own cooperatives. Today they are in position to make savings in pipe-line transportation, in the transportation of refined products, in refining operations, and in retail distribution.

Late last month, members of C. C. A. took the fourth and final step into the petroleum industry—they purchased an interest in a 160-acre lease near their cooperative pipe line. This lease has one 400-barrel-a-day well producing crude oil now. There are 10 wells producing 42-gravity oil on three sides of this tract. Through its Cooperative Oil Producing Association, a subsidiary, C. C. A. will drill three wells immediately, and perhaps four more later. Crude oil is a farm product as much as wheat, corn, or cotton, and it is being produced in 90 of the 105 counties in Kansas. Heretofore it has been piped away to enrich a few men. Oil produced cooperatively will go toward making life and living a little better for thousands of consumers. If the field develops, as we feel sure it will, we will then have an integrated set-up extending into the principal phases of the petroleum industry—a complete, efficient, compact unit.

The wells yet to be drilled, if they prove to be producers, will pay for themselves out of the crude oil they furnish to the cooperative refinery. It may be the beginning of a production program which will eventually furnish the refinery with all its requirements. However, the State has an Oil Proration Act which at present allows a well to produce only about 2 percent of its potential. That is, if a well can produce 400 barrels a day, the allowable under present regulations would be around 8 barrels per day. The State makes no attempt to regulate drilling of oil wells, but does restrict their flow once they have been brought in. And it does it all in the name of conservation.

The first cost of launching factories must be met, of course, but the difference between the cost of a product and the selling price—the thing known in privately owned business as profit—is the margin that enables consumer cooperation to pay for factories of their own. Because profit is an overcharge that is taken in addition to the cost of a product after all other charges have been met. Cooperatives recognize it as an overcharge and use it to capitalize new industries, or enlarge present facilities and services, or return it to members in proportion to their purchases.

A new decade began January 1, 1940. In the past decade of depression, members of C. C. A. have built an oil-compounding plant, a grease plant, a paint factory, a refinery and pipe line, and an oil-producing association in addition to making substantial savings otherwise. What can they do in this decade? Their progress should be substantially greater because the effect of cooperative building is cumulative, like a snowball rolling downhill. Savings from the various factories make it easier to take the next step into production when the volume of consumer purchasing warrants it.

The keyman in the picture is the consumer and what he does with his buying power. When he spends his dollars he is casting his economic ballot. He can spend them to build assets for others, or he can spend them to build cooperative assets for himself and his fellows. If he elects to help the type of business in which he has no voice and no vote, he cannot logically complain about wealth concentration, the ups and downs of the business cycle, or of the other evils that exist in the competitive business world. He is voting every time he makes a purchase, and the way he votes determines what businesses shall grow and prosper and what businesses shall languish and die.

The people of Sweden have given their answer already. Some 635,000 families or 2,000,000 persons, in a country of slightly more than 6,000,000 persons, are buying through cooperatives. Without the aid of a single antitrust statute, they have learned to control monopoly prices and to break trusts once and for all by the simple expedient of using cooperative savings to build cooperative factories. In England, some 8,404,000 members are buying at a saving through cooperatives—and they own close to 200 factories. The annual dividend of British co-ops is roughly $125,000,000. Think of the factories that sum would build every year.

In Scotland, the Scottish Cooperative Wholesale Society numbers 900,000 families in the membership of its retail societies—three-fifths of all the Scots in Scotland. In any one of the three countries it is possible to buy nearly any material need from the cradle to the grave through cooperatives. Factory after factory, built out of the savings of members, are bringing them millions of dollars a year and are operating to keep prices in line with buying power. They were built out of the patronage of consumers. The simple act of making everyday purchases on the part of millions of people, and always at the co-op, have built these consumer-owned institutions.

Other regional cooperative wholesales in the United States are moving forward into manufacturing and processing at a rather steady pace. There are feed and flour mills in various areas, a coffee-roasting plant, three refineries, a number of fertilizer plants, a tractor and power-farming-equipment factory, and many other enterprises turning out products for the cooperative movement. Another encouraging sign is the way producer and consumer cooperatives are working together, with consumer groups furnishing valuable and dependable outlets for producer groups. There will be more and more of such economic collaboration as time goes on.

Factories are free to consumers who combine their spending power back of their own cooperatives. And there's no good stopping place. One step leads logically to another. One factory is often complementary to another. The Scots found, for example, when they began their cooperative burial service that it increased the volume of business of its draperies department, of its wood-working department, and that chips of stone from its monument department made excellent paving blocks. That sounds suspiciously like a Scottish joke, but I'm told on excellent authority that it's true.

Starting in 1929 with only $3,000 capital, and with consumer incomes at a low ebb during most of the intervening years, the North Kansas City Wholesale has made a modest start in the field of manufacture. Most of the goals in our first 5-year plan were realized. We are writing another 5-year plan now which will be submitted to members next month. Among other things, it calls for crude oil production, and we have made the start already; additional refineries when found advisable; a flour mill, feed mill, and bakery whenever volume justifies; the manufacture of salt from salt beds which underlie the cooperative refinery; a battery plant, a soap factory, and a cooperative printing plant.

These are to be regional undertakings for the most part. However, the day is not far distant when National Cooperatives, Inc., should make a start in the field of manufacture, in my opinion. It might be a tire factory, because the combined tire and tube volume of the various wholesales would perhaps warrant a start in the not-distant future. Or it might be some other commodity carried generally by the wholesales. Once such an enterprise was launched, it would pay for itself in only a few years. Factories are free for cooperators, whether on a regional or national basis, and they're the lifeblood of the movement. And I can think of no other one thing that would tend to give the national movement greater cohesion than to enter manufacturing in one or more fields.

The productive works already built by the consumer cooperative movement in the United States undoubtedly are but the forerunners of other and larger factories to be owned by consumers. These plants, fine as they are, must be only the beginning. The world is at war again. Peace is its great need, and this is a movement that makes for peace and plenty. We must continue to build. The nonsense of racial supremacy is sweeping the world again, and this is a movement that all men may join freely regardless of race, color, or creed. We must continue to build. Millions in our land are living close to the borderline of want, with many in dire need. They need this movement just as much as the 28 poverty-stricken weavers of Rochdale. We must continue to build. The rise of dictatorship in many lands is a warning to us that we must build an economic basis that will support our political democracy, and cooperatives are democratic instrumentalities. We must continue to build.

Each of us, no matter what his job may be, is helping build the world of tomorrow. Although I am no prophet, although forecasting is hazardous, I am confident in my own mind that the world of tomorrow will be one in which the cooperative way of life, the cooperative way of doing business, shall play a leading role.

Mr. Speaker, I do not, I cannot contend that through an expansion of the cooperative movement among the people, all the problems of this Nation will be solved. I believe that the establishment of a scientific and constitutional monetary system is likewise necessary if industry and agriculture are to go continuously forward, if unemployment is to be overcome, and if the burden of debt is to be gradually lightened instead of becoming a more and more insufferable yoke about the neck of our people.

But what I do contend is that this cooperative movement is 100 percent constructive, that it is the one movement I know of that develops out of its own experiences an unselfish rather than a self- or group-centered spirit and interest, and that upon it can be builded a new hope for all America, a hope that is akin to the hope of the pioneer who crossed trackless wastes to seek new and fertile lands, a hope of ownership, of clear possession of the means of a better life—but a hope which once realized shuts the door of equal hope in no neighbor's face, but rather opens the door for him.

I ask the passage of no law, the granting of no special privilege for cooperatives. I only bespeak your interest, your constructive encouragement, your thoughtful—yes, even perhaps your prayerful consideration of this great consumer-cooperative movement.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in connection with my speech I may have permission to include a speech by Mr. Howard A. Cowden, president of the Consumers' Cooperative Association of Kansas City, Mo., delivered at the convention of the Cooperative League of America in Chicago on October 17 of this year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman spoke about the benefits of cooperation. Does the gentleman believe that the farmer and the farmer's son should have the right to work on these defense projects without paying tribute?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think anybody has the right to work on defense projects, but that has nothing to do with the speech I made today.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is cooperation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The speech I made today is on a subject that I felt the gentleman from Michigan may be interested in, a constructive approach to these economic problems, upon whose constructive solution so very much depends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, where there has been one successful cooperative, there have been many failures, resulting from the men who control the lines, in which they are trying to cooperate to their mutual advantage, and they are prevented by the people who control. Is the gentleman not aware that the failures are many more than the successes?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman has reference to cooperative electric lines?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I know the struggle they are up against. I am familiar with that. What I have reference to in this speech is the whole cooperative idea, not only in connection with electricity, but also in connection with the buying, selling, and production of commodities and things of that sort.

Mr. PIERCE. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that it is almost impossible for the people to combine in many lines of activity? For instance, would there have been any rural electrification in America had not the Government stepped in and put over the R. E. A. projects in the United States? Could the people have done that themselves?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Certainly I am very earnestly in favor of the R. E. A. projects and of the Government's aid to them in the form of loans, but I believe the gentleman will concede the fact that the cooperative feature has been very important.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order, the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, last Monday I had the privilege of addressing the House for 1 minute, during which limited time I tried to bring before the House some of the conditions that exist on the Pacific coast with reference to strikes, sabotage, un-American activities, and subversive organized effort to destroy our national-defense program. In that limited time of 1 minute, of course, I could not very fully cover this subject, but just to speak of some of the high lights in that section and again draw attention to Harry Bridges, who should long ago have been deported.

I think if the whole matter is fully gone into you will find that Harry Bridges has been the moving spirit back of most of these strikes and un-American activities.

It does seem peculiarly singular that this man can remain in this country in spite of all that has been said about him, in spite of the things that he has done, and in spite of the efforts of this very Congress itself to have him deported.

As you already know, this House passed the bill to deport Harry Bridges by a vote of some 343 to 40. This certainly was a nonpartisan question and certainly was the result of thought after much time and study had been given to Mr. Bridges' record. Many have read the Landis whitewash report and all any open mind has to do is to again read this report and see the admissions that Harry Bridges makes, see where he has sought aid and has given aid to subversive interests, see what he says about disrupting industry in this country, see what his plans and moves are, and if one has any mind whatsoever the connection may be seen between his activities and all this unrest. We may ask the questions, Does Harry Bridges have to come into Washington and actually wreck the Capitol, the Government itself, the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, before our officials who are supposed to carry out their duty will actually admit that there is something wrong? Who is it who gives this protection to a man of this character, who is not a citizen of this country, who is an undesirable alien, who has indulged in perjury, lawbreaking, disturbing the peace, violating the rights of the public, the individual rights of our people themselves who are workers, the rights of all our industrial concerns, and who, according to the statement in the RECORD by the gentleman from Missouri, Congressman ARTHUR ANDERSON, may be guilty of conspiracy to murder, guilty of sabotaging the steamship Pennsylvania, and still can remain in this country? I ask why, and who, and would like these questions answered.

I think, in a great measure, the welfare and safety of this country not only depends on having these questions answered but it also depends upon our properly authorized officials carrying out their duty without political consideration or any other consideration. It appears to me that this ruthless element, among whom may be classified the Communists, the Nazis, and the Fascists, who would destroy this country, is being given an undue and illegal protection, that the laws are being stretched, and technicalities resorted to to protect them. While, on the other hand, it might appear that the Attorney General is going to great lengths to carry out a program that parallels, in some respects, the ideas of these Communists, Nazis, and Fascists. I refer distinctly to the things that the Attorney General is doing, particularly in my community, namely, the institution of a suit to overturn the titles to our California tidelands. I mention this because the Supreme Court decisions are against him. I ask the following question of the Attorney General and for the benefit of this entire Congress. Is it his idea to write a new kind of law, through new Supreme Court decisions, that will destroy the titles to the lands, first in California and then in all of the remaining States wherein they have tidelands? The Attorney General can find time to do this, but he cannot find time to deport a man like Harry Bridges, who should be deported, nor find time to first cancel the citizenship papers of Fritz Kuhn, in spite of the fact that we have some 54 precedents whereby this may be done. I ask again, Why is it that these men, who have as their motive the destruction of this country itself, receive this protection?

It appears also to me that this Attorney General can, when he so desires, actually deport people, and I call your attention to the recent deportation proceedings against Mrs. Browder, and while at the same time I am holding no brief for Mrs. Browder or anyone who may belong to the Communists, Nazis, or Fascists, the fact remains that where this Attorney General wants to take action against people, where there is far less evidence than against Harry Bridges or Fritz Kuhn, he can accomplish his purpose. I ask again, Why is it that he can find time to enter into this program of harassing and prosecuting on technicalities, oil companies, private interests who own tidelands, cities, counties, and States who own tidelands, and many other companies who are working on national-defense orders, and not find time to send out of this country such men as Harry Bridges, Fritz Kuhn, and many others, but slips out of taking action by making dubious explanations and giving technical answers.

We all know that there are some 800 undesirable and dangerous aliens that have received the protection of Mme. Perkins by her refusal to carry out deportation proceedings, nearly all of whom are engaging in subversive activities, preaching a doctrine of destruction of this Government, spreading a propaganda for slowing down, hampering, and injuring our national-defense program, with the ultimate object of finally destroying that defense program if they are able. Why is it this Department cannot go into this necessary thing and deport those who are hurting us more than anything else and slowing down more than anything else our defense program?

Who are these people, to have this protection from officials of the United States Government itself? When we stop to contemplate this question while this program is carried along so consistently, and these people are being protected so consistently, is there any reason why we should not think that these officials are working hand-in-hand with these subversive interests? I hesitate to make such a charge as that, but I am only using my reasoning powers to put two and two together, and to say to our Attorney General and to Mme. Perkins, that the people in this country are fast coming to the same thought that I have developed here. And in this same connection, I would like to draw attention to these officials, that in the long run they must know that the people of the United States and the personnel of this Congress are not going to stand for any such program.

Now, if these thoughts are different than the thoughts, or are different than the intentions, that our governmental officials have, the best way to dissolve these thoughts is to take action, and then, by their action, we will know what they mean. Up to now, in my opinion, their lack of action has been very suspicious, and in my own particular case has developed the thought that they, at least, were acting with those subversive interests against the interests of the United States as a whole.

Now, let us take a look at our picture. Out on the Pacific coast we have the steam schooner strike, now in its sixth week, retarding the expansion of aircraft construction plants requiring lumber, and otherwise interfering with our defense industry and program.

The Vultee aircraft strike, stopping production of training ships for the Army, for the alleged purpose of securing higher rates of pay, but with the evidence now in the hands, admitted by the Attorney General of the United States, that the communistic and subversive influences are at work here. Minimum wages put forth as a major reason is only a smoke screen, and their real purpose is to destroy and to stop our defense program.

Another incident is the strike in the Lacy Manufacturing Co. plant, which results in delay in the construction of the first large Navy auxiliary ship to be built at Los Angeles harbor and now under contract.

Another is in connection with the construction of mosquito-fleet boats, auxiliary to the Navy, and upon which delivery is requested at the earliest possible moment, now threatened by a strike which would tie up the small boat builders at Los Angeles harbor who have these contracts.

Why is it that so many explosions in our plants that are manufacturing the things that we need in our defense program occur, so many in one day? These explosions, these accidents, this retardation of our industrial defense program are spreading like a cancer, with the ultimate object to destroy not only the body of our national-defense program but the country itself, with all of the institutions therein, and as we look at the picture we see the officials of the country standing idly by, letting this cancer spread, and, apparently, so far as results are concerned, letting the program continue; and by the actions indicated above, in California, not only not trying to stop this spread but aiding it.

It does not make any difference whether you are Republican or Democrat, how any loyal American can stand by and see these things gradually proceed until such times as they destroy us is beyond my conception.

This propaganda used to be subtle, but as these groups, such as C. I. O., Bridges, Kuhn, Communists, Fascists, and Nazis, gain in power through the spread of their propaganda, the program is now becoming bolder and hard-boiled. Perhaps this is on account of the fact that when it has come to a show-down they have found our Federal officials without the necessary intestinal fortitude to meet conditions as they should and who either lack the desire or the intestinal fortitude to do their duty. There can only be one result from any such program, and that will be to destroy the American form of government as we have known it, to destroy our defense program, to render us helpless, and, finally, make us into one of the totalitarian forms of government, whichever one of the totalitarian forms of government happens to be the strongest when the final time arrives.

I do not believe there is any question that if this is the net result of N. L. R. B. as presently set up, N. L. R. B. must be revised according to the Smith amendments or it is going to destroy us through the control in its administration by racketeers, subversive and communistic interests. I do not want the Attorney General to misunderstand the spirit in which I speak these words, but I do want him to know that, along with myself, are many others who think enough of the United States of America to really get busy and take action on these things. The net result on Bridges' deportation so far is, as you all know, that the Bridges bill was stopped after it passed the House. In this connection, I think the question should be asked, Would this country be better off today with Harry Bridges out of it, or would it be better off with him in it spreading the propaganda of destruction of our national defense, which he is doing? Anybody who is familiar with the facts today knows that he has done more to destroy the shipping and our merchant marine, that he has done more to destroy delivery of lumber and many parts used in our national defense, than any other man; that he has gone so far as to stop the shipment of food; and this program cannot be considered anything less than destructive. What do our officials think is going to happen? Are they going to try to save this country after it has been destroyed?

It seems to me that the Attorney General has used many sugar-coated and high-sounding phrases in his explanation as to why he does not prosecute these people. It seems to me that the only answer we get from this Department is that everything is under investigation, but we never find any prosecutions that terminate in convictions.

It seems to me that the Attorney General can find time to fight the Dies committee, who are bringing forth and throwing the light of publicity upon his failures. If there is no other reason for the continuation of the Dies committee, I think that this committee should be continued because it throws the light of publicity upon either the failure of the Attorney General to act or upon his cooperation with the subversive interests.

In this same connection I want to say that I think the F. B. I. is one of the best organizations of its kind that there is, that it is capable of doing a good and full duty, but that it is limited in that which it can do by the support that the Attorney General either does or does not give it. I would like to say, too, that if there is any criticism to be directed, it should not be directed at the F. B. I., but should be directed at the Attorney General for his lack of cooperation and lack of leadership, or lack of doing his duty toward the F. B. I. itself and toward the country as a whole.

I notice in the Washington Post that Peter Fassbender, described by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] as a former Gestapo agent, would describe the full workings of the Gestapo in this country. The Attorney General says that Fassbender has long been known to the Federal Bureau of Investigation; that its files contain a detailed record of his life and of his activities down to the present time; that he has operated under 15 different aliases, in addition to the name of Fassbender; that he jumped his ship when he entered this country on August 2, 1938, the ship Westmoreland, of the Bernstein Line, docked at pier No. 3 in Hoboken. I submit to you that if the Attorney General knew that this man had jumped his ship and was in this country illegally, with the knowledge of him that he had, the Attorney General should then and there have deported him. What good does it avail to have the F. B. I., the Dies committee, or any other agency, develop these facts if the Attorney General does not act upon them and get these deportations? It again begins to look like the Attorney General either does not want to or is incapable of fulfilling the duties of his office. In either event, he should either resign, be discharged, or be impeached.

In my opinion, the Dies committee has done a good job. So has the F. B. I., but they have not had the support from the Justice Department to which they are entitled, and I may say to both Mme. Perkins and Attorney General Jackson, that the people of this country are fast approaching the position when they are not any longer going to tolerate their activities of not doing their sworn duty toward the people of this country. The election is now over, and if there was any political reason or subterfuge involved, that is now out of the picture and we would like to hear from the Attorney General, not in words, but by his action in at least deporting Bridges, whose deportation would have a salutary effect on this country, and the cancelation of the citizenship papers of Fritz Kuhn, and then his deportation.

I think, too, that special attention should be given to the destroyers of industrial plants, who may be termed saboteurs, and that they should be speedily brought to justice, sentenced, and that it should be seen to that these sentences are carried out to the maximum.

Mr. Attorney General, you have an explanation and an accounting to make to 130,000,000 people, and it is by your action, not by your word, that we are going to know you.

Mr. Attorney General, there is such a thing known as patriotic performance of duty, and the whole people of the United States have a prior claim to any political consideration, particularly when this country is in such a crisis as it now is in. Can you see it that way, and, if you do, what are you going to do? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

LABOR CONDITIONS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in the Department of Labor we have what I consider to be some very capable men, but I have here a letter from a worker in Pittsburgh who mentions some of their names.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert in the RECORD a copy of a letter issued by Hubbard & Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., also a statement issued by the same company covering 10 provisions they have agreed to place in the labor agreement the union is seeking.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The letter follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., November 8, 1940.

To the Employees of Hubbard & Co.:

We are entering the eighth week of this unfortunate strike. We are being swamped with calls from our employees who want to return to work. The union is still insisting that we grant a union-shop contract, thus forcing all of our employees to join the union and pay dues for the privilege of working at Hubbard & Co. We had made wage concessions before the strike started and with some granted since then, they represent a substantial advantage to the employee.

We invite you to consider carefully the wage and other concessions shown on the attached memorandum which we have offered the union representatives. The union, however, has indicated that wage increases mean nothing to them compared to the granting of the union-shop contract. The granting of a union-shop contract is a matter of principle which we cannot and will not concede. We will not agree to a union-shop contract or any form or variation of a union-shop contract. A man may work for Hubbard & Co. whether he belongs to a union or not, and no one will be required to pay dues to anyone for the privilege of working at our plant.

We have notified Mayor Scully that we intend to attempt to operate the plant if the union refuses to accept the offers we have already made them. We shall make demands upon the police for protection. If the mayor totally disregards his duty and fails to furnish police protection, we will shut the plant down indefinitely. This is our official and final decision given to the mayor of Pittsburgh.

We want to know how many of our employees are willing to return to work with the wage and other concessions listed on the enclosed memorandum. If a sufficient number of our employees indicate their desire to resume work, we will advise you when to report. Sign your name and check number on the enclosed card and mail it to us or write us your desires. Your reply will be kept confidential. Failure to reply will indicate your unwillingness to return to your job.

We are going to do everything in our power to protect our employees who want to go back to work. If the majority of them are not sufficiently interested in their jobs to be willing to return to work under these conditions, then you will have to consider your service with us terminated.

HUBBARD & CO.,
JOSEPH V. SMITH,
Vice President.

HUBBARD & CO.,
Pittsburgh, Pa., November 8, 1940.

To Our Employees:

In our various negotiations we offered the union the following concessions to be incorporated in a new contract:

1. The establishment of a minimum wage for men of 62½ cents per hour equal to $5 per day for an 8-hour day. Effective immediately.

2. The granting of a raise of 2 cents per hour to all men not affected by the raise in the minimum and will adjust the rates of any man who had not received a full 2-cent raise by the upping of the minimum. Effective immediately.

3. The granting of an increase for women to 50 cents per hour equal to $4 per day for an 8-hour day. Effective immediately.

4. Granting of a rate of 52 cents per hour for those women who are operating machines. Effective immediately.

5. We agree to incorporate in the new contract a clause under which the union or ourselves could open up the question of wages at any time upon 10 days' given notice.

6. We agreed to revise the vacation plan so that employees would be entitled to 1 day vacation with pay for each year of service up to a maximum of 5 years, provided however, that said employee worked at least 1,040 hours during the 12 months preceding July 1 of the year in which the vacation is to be received.

7. We agreed to carefully study and establish a workable plan involving seniority and job classifications. We cannot convey complete advices on these points at this time, as the working out of this program will require very careful study. However, we promised to perfect a workable plan even though it necessitated bringing in outside practical help to assist us.

8. We insisted that wherever feasible grievances must be made in writing at least 3 days prior to the regular date for grievance meetings and the company in turn would wherever possible reply in writing on such grievances.

9. We agreed to the naming of an impartial umpire and will suggest certain names for consideration in due time.

10. We agreed to incorporate into a new contract the military clause reading approximately as follows:

"If an employee is called to serve the armed forces of this country the time lost in its relationship to seniority rights shall be fully considered."

We agreed that other provisions not covered by the above suggested changes should remain as incorporated in the last signed contract.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman who writes this letter states that being an employee of Hubbard & Co., Pittsburgh, he encloses these letters for information as explanatory matter. He says:

PITTSBURGH, PA., November 29, 1940.

Hon. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. EBERHARTER: Being an employee of Hubbard & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., I am enclosing letters sent me by them, which are self-explanatory.

As this strike has kept us all out of work for the past 11 weeks, and the most of my fellow employees desire to work, we find it impossible to do so.

Being chairman of a group of employees, known as a group wishing to go back to work, I appeal to you for such help as you could render us. We have appealed our case to Mayor Scully and Sheriff Heinz, of Pittsburgh, but we have not accomplished anything.

The majority of our employees desire to return to work, but we find it impossible to do so, as our Mr. J. V. Smith will not allow any bloodshed on account of the present situation.

Mr. Dewey, the Government conciliator, forbid the C. I. O. to call a strike at Hubbard & Co., but the union defied him and acted on their own initiative and declared this strike.

Unfortunately we do not have any Government defense orders, to the best of my knowledge, and other strikes both in and around Pittsburgh have been settled peaceably, we are still taxpayers and are doing our best to get back to work so as our families can have an enjoyable Christmas.

None of us want to live on Government dole or relief, but our situation is a pitiful one.

Government Conciliators Dr. Steelman and Mr. Dewey have tried on numerous occasions to adjust this strike, but without avail, so any help which you may render us will be greatly appreciated.

I am also enclosing copies of these letters to the Honorable CLARE E. HOFFMAN, of Michigan.

Anxiously awaiting a reply, I remain

Very truly yours,

L. A. DAUER.

Then another letter has been received from Fort George Meade, Md., which reads as follows:

I know that Fort George G. Meade, Md., is strictly a union job, because I try to get on as a steamfitter you positively have to have a union card. Also, Fort Belvoir, Va., is also a closed shop because I was down to Fort Belvoir, I saw Mr. Lucas, superintendent of construction for the Thompson & Co., he told me you have to be a union man to work here as a steamfitter or a plumber their no openings for a steamfitter, but we can use some plumbers. Why can a union on a Government job call for a closed shop? I am a steamfitter, I drop my union card due to circumstances today it is impossible to get a job without a union card. I have to pay $220. I don't mind paying a fine of $10, $20 assessment, and $100 initiation fee, if I can go to work and pay out of income. I am walking the streets looking for work when there are Government jobs going beggin at $14. It seems a shame that a man cannot get a chance to earn an honest living for his family. What right has a body of men to keep a man from making a living on Government projects its a crime.

Mr. Speaker, these letters indicate some of the great difficulties labor and industry and the departments of Government are up against. We may have to deal with many touching problems before we work out of the difficulties of present day. Union men, and those who are not members of unions, all have their own views and feelings. Most all of us are greatly controlled by our emotions and desires. This is a representative Government; every man is entitled to his day in court; and every worker wonders why he is not privileged to work on jobs financed by Government funds which are in turn furnished by the worker and taxpayer and without having to pay tribute to any organization or person.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] made quite an oration on Mr. Bridges and the strike conditions in California. I believe, however, that the gentleman has failed to advise the House that the matter has been investigated by the Attorney General and the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice has rendered a report to the Attorney General, who, I am sure, is giving the matter careful study and consideration. I have every confidence that the Attorney General will make a proper survey of the conditions about which my colleague the gentleman from California spoke. I have every reason to believe that J. Edgar Hoover and his men have made their survey honestly and fearlessly. I am sure that all the charges made here will be very soon disposed of in the proper light.

It is pathetic to see any Member attack any department heads. I have heard so much said about Mme. Perkins, that she has failed to do this, that, and the other thing. Mme. Perkins did her job in the best way the law would give her the right to do. Unfortunately, a lot of us do not realize that you cannot deport even the worst kind of criminal unless there is a place to send him to. I need not tell you that after the last war some aliens that should have been deported could not be deported because there were no countries to send them to. The countries were wiped out under the Treaty of Versailles, and, unfortunately, we had these criminals on our hands. Mme. Perkins could not possibly enforce some of the deportations, and the criticism against her is unjustified.

Criticism of any head of a department is unfair at this particular time, when we are trying to and should work together in the defense of our country, irrespective of political beliefs or affiliations. I do not believe it is fair at this time to make these serious charges of failure to do certain things that the law requires her to do, knowing full well that the Department has done the very thing it was supposed to do; that is, to investigate the Bridges situation and other radical conditions in this country. I am sure a satisfactory solution will be had in a report to this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman just said it is pathetic for anyone to criticize a department of the Government at this time. I wonder just how sincere the gentleman is in that statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am just as sincere as any man in this House, including yourself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We will admit that. Then why not be consistent as well as sincere, and why get up every day we meet when opportunity offers and jump on the Dies committee and on a fellow Member from Texas, Mr. DIES? Why do you not get together with the Dies committee instead of every day——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am always willing to cooperate and have offered my cooperation several times right here on the floor. How about yourself?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Instead of on every occasion defending Bridges and Mme. Perkins, why do you not get together with other Members of the House and forego criticizing those who are trying to get those Communists deported? Why not let us get together on some platform except your own?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why do you not talk common sense? My criticism is constructive criticism.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Fine.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have no objection to being criticized by you or anybody else if the criticism is deserved.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Now, you have had your say.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And I will have my say whenever I want to have it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. By a vote of more than 3 to 1 the House turned down your judgment as to the value of the Dies committee on three occasions. Now, why do you not get together with the majority of the House instead of so often as you did last Thursday, November 28 (RECORD, pp. 13769–13770, inclusive) speaking against the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and the so-called Dies committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have never opposed the Dies committee; neither have I appeared on the floor opposing it. I was responsible for bringing it out of the Rules Committee. I presented all the evidence before the Rules Committee. The gentleman from Texas, Representative DIES, has not presented one single document before the Rules Committee, or made one single talk in behalf of that resolution. I am not criticizing the gentleman from Texas, Representative DIES. I want him to do his duty and bring in some laws to rid this country of all the subversive elements in this country instead of giving us this "ballyhoo" we have been receiving from the committee for 2 years. The gentleman is unjust when he asks why am I not consistent. I think it is unfair for him to make that statement. I am consistent, and you should be more consistent because you have been so contradictory that I was not able to keep up with your arguments in the last year.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If I have the time, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You say you have not opposed the Dies committee or criticized the gentleman from Texas, Representative DIES.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not until recently, when it became necessary. I have helped to bring that resolution out. I brought it out with my own efforts, with my own material, and with my own evidence, and I did not oppose it and I did not oppose the appropriation, but I serve notice on the House now that unless something is done I am going to oppose it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it adjourn to meet on the following Monday.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SENATE

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Who dost reveal the fuller life in us only in our welldoing, help us in dutiful loyalty, often so difficult to maintain, to persevere in the effort to attain unto that which seems unattainable, as, day by day, we are confronted with new and ever-changing tasks. Give to us persistence in hope when the outlook is forbidding, persistence in love when love meets with little or no response; and strengthen us that we may run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Him who is the Author and Finisher of our Faith.

O most merciful Father, who, through Thine own dear Son, hast entered into the suffering, pain, and woe of all Thy children, we beseech Thee to look with compassion upon all who must endure the miseries of this cruel war, those who, by night and by day, are constantly imperiled, and grant unto them a speedy deliverance out of all their troubles.

O God of Justice, abase the men of violence who have wrought such havoc and disaster upon the earth. Bring them and their followers to repentance, that the eternal message of Thy Son, "Peace on earth," may be heralded by "men of good will" to the ushering in of a new age of national and international righteousness. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE TO INVESTIGATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and appropriately referred a letter from J. E. Welch and nine other prominent citizens of Concordia, Kans., urging that the Dies Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities be continued. I am aware that the Dies committee is a committee of the House of Representatives, but I feel that the Members of the Senate are equally interested in the work it is doing.

I think the Dies committee, granting excessive zeal possibly in a few instances, has done an outstanding piece of public service. In this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point, as part of my remarks, an editorial from the Washington News of December 4, 1940, with which I find myself very much in agreement.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. DIES HAS MORE WORK TO DO

Representative DIES, we think, has made a very good case for the continuation of his committee investigating un-American activities.

With all respect due to the Justice Department and J. Edgar Hoover's efficient G-men, and admitting that the Dies committee has pulled some bonehead plays, we still think that the committee has shoveled up enough pay dirt to warrant continuing its good work.

The Dies committee was the first to expose William Dudley Pelley and the Silver Shirts racket; the first to tackle Fritz Kuhn's German-American Bund; the first to focus public attention on the fact that the Communist Party was functioning as a tool of the Moscow Foreign Office; the first to reveal how the National Youth Congress and other once-influential groups with high-sounding peace-and-democracy titles were just so many "front" organizations guided along the Communist Party line.

When Mr. DIES was just getting started, his efforts were opposed by some of the same administration spokesmen who are now declaring that his committee should disband and let them take over all investigation of subversive activities.

By the nature of their task, law-enforcement agencies must confine their work to apprehending criminals in overt acts of sabotage or other traitorous enterprises. But a congressional committee has broad and free-swinging powers of inquiry. Sometimes they seem too broad and free swinging. But in the fight against "fifth columnists" our Nation needs all the weapons it can muster—and not the least of these is the spotlight of publicity focused by a continuing congressional investigation.

Today's Gallup poll reports that 65 percent of the American people favor keeping Mr. DIES on the job.

Mr. CAPPER. I also believe the suggestion made in the letter I have received from representative businessmen of Concordia—that before Britain asks the United States for credits and loans it would be advisable for the United States to purchase from England some of her island possessions in the Western Hemisphere that are of strategic value to the United States—is worthy of serious consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference and inclusion in the RECORD of the letter submitted by the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCORDIA, KANS.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: The undersigned, residents of Concordia, Cloud County, Kans., think it is almost time the United States was trying to give the Dies un-American investigating committee all the help they can, as it seems to us they are doing a fine piece of work getting all of the evidence they can on people trying to sabotage the United States defense work, and they should be given the extra expense money they ask for.

There is no reason that we can see why they should not work in harmony with Mr. Hoover's F. B. I., if they have a thorough understanding with each other about different cases.

They are both good organizations and doing good work, and it seems to the undersigned, with all the money the Government has wasted on a lot of different things, they should back up these two organized branches and clean out some of our un-American organizations, and do it quickly.

We are enclosing you an article from the Topeka Capital of November 21 which we have read and think the United States and Congress should get busy and back up the Dies and F. B. I. workers at once and not delay the work, or the first thing we know they will do a lot of damage to factories working on United States defense material. We certainly want all of our plants making defense material to be kept busy and not hampered in any way. Please give this work your immediate attention and get busy on it.

We have also sent Congressman CARLSON a duplicate of this letter, so you can talk it over with him, and we certainly hope you will both get busy at once, and not delay. We would also suggest the Government pass laws that unions or any other labor cannot go on a strike in any company working on Government defense goods until the Government has investigated it thoroughly for 6 months or a year and tried to arbitrate the trouble by appointing two members of labor, two members of the company doing the Government work, and two members appointed by the Government, and fix a law so that they must abide by the arbitration board decisions, and the ones not agreeing to be given a heavy fine and also a penitentiary sentence of 5 to 10 years, and the arbitration board to have this power within 30 days, and so it cannot be carried to any other court.

The undersigned are all in favor of giving Great Britain all the airplanes and other war material or foods they wish, as long as they have money to pay for it at once, or any credits they have in the United States, and if they run out of that we might buy some of their territory that lies close to the United States at what it is worth and not more. But let's get busy and send them all the fighting material they can use and want at once.

Yours very truly,

J. E. Welch, secretary, B. P. O. E., No. 586; E. G. Crawford, president, First National Bank of Concordia; A. C. Wilson, furniture and undertaking; Vernon D. Martin, Martin Drug Co.; Harry Venning, Venning Drug Co.; E. H. Moore, 5- and 10-cent store; C. A. Lasuier & Sons, dry goods; Carl Conley, Conley Mortgage Co.; Carl P. Rogers, theaters; Geo. F. Mante, retired.

FINANCIAL RESOURCES OF GREAT BRITAIN—ARTICLE BY JOHN T. FLYNN

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I was very much startled on yesterday to read in the newspapers a statement by the Secretary of Commerce and Federal Loan Commissioner, Jesse Jones, to the effect that he regarded Great Britain as a good lending risk. I have known Mr. Jones for many years and have the very highest respect and affection for him. I regard him as one of the ablest businessmen in the United States. I happen to be familiar with the fact that Mr. Jones for many years has been engaged very successfully, indeed, eminently successfully, in the private banking business. I was startled, for that reason, in view of Mr. Jones' own very successful private banking career to read his statement that Great Britain was a good lending risk, because I do not believe it can be demonstrated that in the whole history of Mr. Jones' private banking business did he ever lend money in very large sums to borrowers who later not only failed to pay any part of the principal but the interest, but also thumbed their noses at him and denounced him as "Uncle Shylock" and a barbarian, as Neville Chamberlain did the United States for suggesting that any part be collected, only to have him 23 years later say that such borrowers are good lending risks. Such a thing never happened in Mr. Jones' private business history, and in my opinion never will. There is no excuse for anything to happen in regard to the public finances of the United States which a reasonably prudent individual would not permit to happen in regard to his own affairs.

In connection with the resources of Great Britain I ask that there be inserted as a part of my remarks, in the body of the RECORD, an article from yesterday's Washington News by Mr. John T. Flynn, one of the really great economists of the Nation, on the subject of Great Britain's resources in the United States. It shows conclusively that Great Britain is starting its demands for money early in a further effort to involve us in active participation in the war.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK, December 4.—When the war started, Americans were told that Great Britain had in this country all the money she needed to pay for what she bought here. That was true. She had over $5,000,000,000—perhaps over six billion. She had $1,235,000,000 of negotiable securities here and $940,000,000 of dollar balances.

The Treasury Department now reports that in the first year of the war Britain withdrew $320,000,000 of funds from banks here. This does not mean that this was taken out of the country. Probably most of it remained here but was paid out to others.

An interesting feature of this report is that $158,400,000 of these payments of British funds here represented liquidation of British-owned American securities. That is, Britain in that year sold $158,400,000 of American securities held here by her own nationals, banked the proceeds and drew against it for purchases here.

If this is true, we will see that Britain in the first year of the war has scarcely scratched the surface of her security holdings here.

Britain has made large contracts here, but of course it takes time to make planes, ships, etc., which she must pay for later. She has not actually yet made any serious reduction in her available assets in this country. Britain and Canada together have sold so far only $193,000,000 of their securities here.

If this is true, then why is it necessary now to lend money to England when she has these immense balances here with which to pay for her purchases? What is the reason for the propaganda which has been started for these loans?

The answer, of course, is plain. As every American knows, all the warring countries are making all sorts of propaganda to gain their ends here. Germany and Italy, as has been shown by the Dies committee, have been busy here to persuade Americans to their way of thinking. Equally the British Government, like the German and Italian, is spending millions to gain her objectives here.

Her objectives, as we all know, are not just to get our sympathy but to get us into the war. William H. Stoneman, London correspondent of the Chicago Daily News, writes: "The fond idea that the United States can help Britain more by staying out of the war than by coming in is, in the opinion of responsible British leaders, just so much bunk."

Propaganda to that end never stops here. And the present stage of it is to get us to advance billions to England and thus implicate us to that extent in a material way in the war.

An American loan to England would be a grave offense against America—although it is now getting to be a serious sin to indulge in any propaganda for America. England does not need the credit. It will be another step to war. It will plague us for the next generation after the war.

TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR REPORT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment Senate Joint Resolution 306. The joint resolution provides for the extension until the 3d of April of the life of the Temporary National Economic Committee, in order that it may make its report. I am anxious to secure action upon the joint resolution, because I have every reason to believe that it will be passed without objection, and the other House will remain in session to act upon it. No additional funds are authorized by the joint resolution. Therefore its passage merely means that the time will be extended so that the Committee may make its report on or before the 3d of April 1941, which is desirable in order that proper consideration may be given by the Committee to the material which has been gathered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My understanding is that the extension is exclusively for the purpose of making a report?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is entirely right.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 306) extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 4 (c) of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to create a temporary national economic committee", approved June 16, 1938, the time for submitting the final report of such committee is hereby extended to April 3, 1941, and the unexpended balances of the appropriations made for such committee shall be available to it until such date for the purpose of making such report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a letter which I have received this morning from the Superintendent of Documents, which points out that there has been a rather extraordinary demand by the public for the documents which have been published by the Temporary National Economic Committee to date, including the hearings.

I should like also to include two lists showing the distribution of these publications.

There being no objection, the letter and lists were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
DIVISION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1940.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to telephone request for statement regarding sales of Temporary National Economic Committee Hearings and Monographs, I am attaching a list showing the number received, on hand, and sold.

At the end of each list you will note entries designated by asterisks, which means that we have had to reorder, and the number of copies ordered should be added to those listed in the "Received" column to give the total figure of that particular issue.

The munitions and un-American activity hearings were very good sellers, but it would appear from the interest shown in the hearings of the Temporary National Economic Committee and also the monographs that these publications are destined to be the best sellers of the three.

Very truly yours,

ALTON P. TISDEL,
Superintendent of Documents.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The figures shown in the lists are rather interesting, in that they indicate a widespread and continuous interest upon the part of the public in the work of this committee. When it is remembered that the committee itself received 8,000 copies of each published volume of its hearings, all of which were distributed upon request to interested persons throughout the United States, it will be seen that the continued sale of these publications by the Superintendent of Documents is striking evidence that the people of the country are thinking seriously of fundamental economic problems.

There are 56 public libraries on the mailing list of the committee; but university and other libraries, law offices in all parts of the country, and other libraries, number 655. In addition to this 585 foundations and organizations of various kinds dealing with economic and political problems have applied for copies of all of the publications of the committee. There are on the list 734 Government officials, including Members of Congress, 327 college professors, and 85 newspapers, magazines, and similar publications.

The publication of each monograph brings forth scores of letters and inquiries. Even during the past several months we have been receiving every week approximately 300 requests for information of various kinds.

The following is a list of the monographs which have already been released by the committee, with the prices for which they may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents:

TECHNOLOGICAL DEFENSE

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few brief remarks about our technological defense.

The spirit of discovery and invention has been the supreme achievement of our New World. From the time of Columbus to the present day this hemisphere has made its economic and cultural advances following the commanding leadership of great inventive minds. This remarkable progress has been achieved through freedom. It could have come in no other way. The perpetuation of our liberties is necessary to the continued fruitfulness of the inventive mind.

As we face the problems of national defense it is now apparent that the protection of our economic, material, and technological resources is of very first importance. We cannot permit our inventive genius, our scientific findings, our patents, our patent-holders, our new industrial techniques, to be despoiled by hostile powers. It is as necessary for us to protect American inventors and American patent-holders as it is that we build a two-ocean navy, or recruit a new and powerful army. This may not, at first glance, seem to be obvious; it is, nevertheless, true.

I have introduced Senate Joint Resolution 304, which has been referred to the Banking and Currency Committee, as a national-defense measure. The distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], chairman of the committee, has assured me that hearings will be arranged, and every effort made to bring out the joint resolution. I know of no American citizen who is opposed to it. I do not believe the Government departments which are concerned with patents and international exchange are in any way essentially averse to it; and I am fully convinced that, after hearings have been held, the joint resolution can be amended in any way suitable to the needs of our national defense in patents, trade-marks, secret formulas, processes, copyrights, inventions, and the American citizens who have their economic security wrapped up in them.

Mr. President, I am constantly in receipt of letters such as I have just received from Mr. H. Albertman, of the Jacquard Knitting Machine Co., of Philadelphia, which encloses a copy of a letter directed to the Secretary of the Treasury. I ask unanimous consent to have these two letters included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are, as follows:

JACQUARD KNITTING MACHINE CO., INC.,
Philadelphia, Pa., December 4, 1940.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Enclosed you will find a copy of a letter which is self-explanatory.

We would appreciate it very much if you would interest yourself in this matter.

Respectfully,

JACQUARD KNITTING MACHINE CO., INC.,
Per H. ALBERTMAN.

DECEMBER 4, 1940.

To the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: It is our understanding that American manufacturers in this country, licensed under German patents by German concerns, have been and are now paying royalties without interruption to these German firms.

We have a similar license contract with a large German firm whereby we received royalties for a license to manufacture under our patents. These payments were made regularly and promptly until the present German regime came into power, when they were discontinued entirely. This in the face of the fact that manufacture under our patents is still going on. Machinery under our patents have during this period been offered for sale, especially to South American countries, and with more effort and vigor in recent years.

Money due us at this time amounts to many thousands of dollars under a clear and just contract. Some means should be taken so that we, as well as other American manufacturers in our position, can obtain redress. To this end we wish you to consider this letter a formal complaint.

We suggest that royalties paid by American manufacturers should be held by our Government against money due American concerns by German firms.

Your kind consideration of this letter will be greatly appreciated.

Respectfully,

JACQUARD KNITTING MACHINE CO., INC.,
Per H. ALBERTMAN.

[Letter similar to this one also sent to Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, Americans have gradually awakened to the fact that our own national defense is being jeopardized in major ways through the control of patents by foreign corporations; through financial control, sometimes hidden, by foreign corporations, many of which are owned, lock, stock, and barrel, by foreign governments; through interlocking patent royalty rights which have the effect of restricting American production of vital war materials. It is a fact that by means of such patent royalty agreements foreign governments not only profit from our vast expenditures on national defense but also have ready access to production plans and programs of our defense effort.

The joint resolution I have introduced proposes that a revolving fund be set up which will segregate American funds due firms of foreign countries which have restricted payments to the United States so that sums due our manufacturers can be paid from this fund. This joint resolution will not only help American interests through paying them the money rightfully due them but will advance our national defense, since royalty statements will not be sent to foreign powers, which would give information contrary to our best interests. The joint resolution will also limit funds sent to foreign powers which might be used in subversive activity against the United States.

The measure I have introduced forms part of a more general plan to protect the economic framework of our country in this time of need. More than 18 months ago I issued a statement, which was printed in the United States News, advocating the establishment of a National Defense Commission. I then urged that representatives of labor, industry, investment, and other important groups be called in to consider our defense needs. Particularly I was thinking in terms of defending our domestic economy as well as advancing military and naval measures. We have been and continue to be weak on the economic front within our own borders.

Mr. President, in line with this thought I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article by Frank C. Waldrop, foreign and political editor of the Washington Times-Herald, which appeared in the Times-Herald of December 4, 1940.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

PREPAREDNESS: UNITED STATES BUREAU OF ECONOMIC DEFENSE URGED IMMEDIATELY—GERMAN PENETRATION OF INDUSTRY IN AMERICA CITED AS PERIL

(By Frank C. Waldrop, foreign and political editor of the Times-Herald)

What is the United States doing to prepare itself against the real German invasion—the one that began in 1921?

Nothing. But the President is to receive shortly a proposal for an American Bureau of Economic Defense, compared to Britain's University of Economic Warfare, as the basic step toward repelling the invasion.

This invasion cannot be made to appear as spectacular as a flight of bombing planes or a fleet of ships at sea, but it is infinitely more effective and more deadly to our national interest.

And, what is more, if this invasion is properly met we have less and less to fear of the other kind.

Loosely, you might call it an economic invasion. It started as soon as the Germans revived their applications for patents in the United States after the first World War.

That is, German intelligence and design in the generation past have inserted German power within American industry and business at key points so that at the proper time that industry and business can be stopped dead and made ineffectual either for peaceful or military competition.

The worst part about this invasion is that it is mostly a legal one, operating under the full protection of the Constitution and the laws of Congress.

It is not difficult to remedy, however, and it is not too late for us to do something important about it, though it may be too late if the neglect runs any longer.

This real invasion was being discussed here in Washington a few weeks ago with one of the greatest industrialists in England. Some few Federal officials who really understand how it works were checking their judgment with the Briton's.

He said:

"We are paying a terrible price in our country today for neglecting to understand and cope with German-concealed control of British industries. It set us back 6 months or a year in our war effort.

"And we know now that it was the tie-up between the French and German industrial cartels that prevented France from preparing.

"When the French got ready to rearm they found they were literally strapped to the floor. They had allowed Germans to weaken their native industrial system and to conceal, in France, from the French, facts of modern science concerning important war elements of chemistry, nonferrous metals, and alloys.

"The French found, when they had to go on their own, they couldn't make things they had to have if they were going to survive."

In the production of serums and dyes, he said, Britain found itself without twenty-odd of critical importance to national health, and had to spend 6 months of precious time and $10,000,000 of research to develop technical knowledge of how to make these.

Even yet it has not reached a production capacity equal to need in these essentials to domestic safety.

And he declared the United States is worse off than England. The Federal officials agreed with him.

He wondered why nothing is being done here to develop the self-sufficiency of this country, in view of the state of the world.

The Federal officials couldn't give him an answer. They pointed out that our system of economic defense is so loose that Germany is actually placing orders with United States manufacturers to make goods shipped from here to Latin America to complete sales made by Germans to Latin-American firms.

This, in the face of the tremendous effort the Federal Government is making to capture the Latin American market for this country while Britain's Navy is preventing the Germans filling orders with goods from their own factories.

It was agreed at this meeting the United States needs something similar to the British Ministry of Economic Warfare.

Efforts by the Federal Government to do something about German economic penetration in the United States and the Western Hemisphere are varied but uncontrolled. The Dies committee runs off in one direction; the Treasury Department has its own plans; the Justice Department has others; Army and Navy Intelligence, and in the Senate the Wheeler committee, operate separate attacks.

Nobody has tried to integrate their efforts, and nobody really knows the state of the economic war between the United States and Germany, especially with respect to concealed German control of American industry.

A few revelations have been made concerning German use of the patent laws to control United States output of military optical goods, war chemicals, and metal alloys, and the consequences have been window shaking.

But for all the excitement nothing specific has been done to find out the real scope of this economic warfare and to break it while time remains.

Before long a paper will be laid before the President asking him to act in this matter. To do it he will have to cut across bureaucratic lines and injure the standing of some old-line governmental agencies. The officials who plan to ask him to act declare they will do so on the ground that this is an emergency superseding in importance even the manufacture of bombing planes.

"If we don't know how to make the materials that go into the best bombing planes," said one of them, "what good is it to build second raters? We already know, for instance, American pursuit ships can't stay in the air against the Messerschmidts.

"If we don't get busy on the reasons for that, we may as well fold up. And the reasons lie in our inability to use all the knowledge there is available for light metal alloys. We could make those alloys if we weren't hamstrung on the patents. And so it goes all through the war production system. We've got to have economic defense before military defense to get ahead."

Mr. DAVIS. The independent inventor who has done so much to advance the economic frontiers of the Nation has seldom been rewarded for his labors. History is replete with instances of men of genius who have sacrificed everything to the furtherance of their ideas, only to meet with ridicule, handicaps, cruel obstruction, poverty, and neglect.

To show how the United States Patent Office regards the role of the pioneer inventor in the useful arts, I wish to quote from Patent Commissioner Coe's testimony before the Temporary National Economic Committee. On page 866 of the record, Commissioner Coe testified:

My conviction is that the poor inventor [financially poor], and through him the public, suffers injustice precisely for the reason and to the extent that the monopoly, the exclusive right, purportedly bestowed on him is not now fully safeguarded. What we need is not to decrease but to enhance the monopoly called a patent. Genuine protection in that form would be the last surviving bulwark standing between the inventor and the onslaught of mighty corporations.

To show how Dr. Vannevar Bush, President of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, regards the status of the independent inventor, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a brief extract from the Temporary National Economic Committee hearings, at page 871.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. DIENNER. Under modern conditions in industry, how do new ideas come forward? I mean by that, consider the individual, consider the corporation, or other forms under which enterprise is conducted. How do these ideas come forward? What produces them?

Dr. BUSH. There are two ways that are important. First, they result oftentimes from the long program of research, careful and meticulous analysis of the situation by a group of men, through large industrial research laboratories or scientific institutions, and the like, which produces new knowledge out of which come new applications. In addition there is the independent inventor, whose day is not past by any means, and who has a much wider scope of ideas and who often does produce out of thin air a striking new device or combination which is useful and which might be lost were it not for his keenness.

Mr. DIENNER. Considering the past history of the introduction of new ideas into industry, do you consider that the lone individual has in the past been an important factor in introducing such an invention as might form a taproot of an industry?

Dr. BUSH. He has been and still is a very important factor.

Mr. DAVIS. I am indebted to my friend, Mr. Samuel Diescher, eminent consulting engineer of Pittsburgh, himself an independent inventor, for the following illustrations, taken from Patent Office records, showing the extent of employment made possible to wage earners through inventive genius:

Eli Whitney's cotton gin, McCormick's reaper, Morse's telegraph, Goodyear's vulcanizing of rubber, Westinghouse's air brake, the Hyatts' celluloid, Glidder's barbed wire, Bell's telephone, Thompson's electric welding, Tesla's motor, Hall's aluminum process, Mergenthaler's linotype, Ives' halftone printing, Acheson's electric furnace for producing carborundum, Owens' bottle-making machine, and the Wright brothers' airplane.

There is attributed to but part of these inventions the employment of about 2,250,000 wage earners. The inventive items just given and the employment arising from them constitute but a fragment of all that could be so listed. For instance, only one of Westinghouse's inventions is listed and none of Edison's. The amount of employment arising from this kind of pioneering inventiveness would run into the tens of millions. The unemployment of the present age may be accounted for in a striking degree by the fact that society has permitted conditions to develop which tend to discourage the independent inventor.

Many workers feel hostile to some inventions which they believe have brought them technological unemployment. This has come about chiefly because of the limitations which have been placed on inventions which would develop new enterprises. For example, many unemployed steel workers feel hostile toward the new steel strip mills. We can readily understand this, because insufficient provision is made to find employment for those displaced.

Millions could have had additional employment had the old type of inventor been permitted to exist unhampered by adverse, unjust, and confiscatory legislation. From these conditions there has arisen an additional sinister byproduct. Much of the pioneering in invention was done by artisans and workmen. Westinghouse started as a machinist and Edison as a telegrapher. In Pittsburgh alone there were many such pioneers as Capt. William Jones, who started as a rolling-mill hand and introduced revolutionary improvements in the steel industry, and Dr. John Brashear, who started in a glass works as a lehr boy and became a world-famous builder of spectroscopic astronomical instruments.

Commissioner Coe has recommended that Congress enact modifications of the income-tax laws pertaining solely to individuals, whereby no levy of taxes shall be assessed on gains accruing to an inventor or to coinventors from his or their assigning original patent rights, regardless of the country issuing them, to a corporation created within the United States for the purpose of exploiting the assigned patent rights, nor on any gains from such patent rights prior to their being thus assigned. This kind of provision would protect the independent inventor.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish briefly to suggest that national defense can be maintained only as we take a realistic attitude toward the men and women who toil. They are the producers of our national wealth. They are the ones who bear the burdens of the Nation. From their ranks comes the mental and moral, the physical and spiritual strength necessary to carry on the struggle for existence. From long years of personal association with these everyday Americans I know their needs, their aspirations, their loyalty, their good will, their great spirit of service. I wish to bespeak for them the protection of a just government, to the end that their labors shall not be in vain, and that from their enterprise they may reap a fair reward, to which they are justly entitled.

USE OF STABILIZATION FUND FOR MAKING LOANS

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I greatly regret that because of the death of a close friend I was unable to attend, last Monday, the meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee held that morning. I have had, however, a full report of the testimony before the committee. Secretary Morgenthau and Secretary Hull appeared before the committee to ask informal approval of the use of the stabilization fund for the purpose of loaning $50,000,000 to China.

I do not wish to discuss the question of policy of loaning money to China for the purchase of war materials, except to say that this vitally important question has never been submitted to Congress, and that no authority to make any such loan is contained in the statutes except through the Export-Import Bank, the total loaning capacity of which Congress has carefully limited. The question discussed with the Banking and Currency Committee was not the policy of loaning to China, but the question whether such loans could be made through the stabilization fund. If I had been present at the meeting I should have strenuously protested against the use of the stabilization fund for that purpose, and I desire now to enter my protest on the record of the Senate.

The stabilization fund was not created for the purpose of making loans to any nation; and I seriously question whether there is any legal authority, under the act creating the fund, to use it for that purpose. In my opinion, the use of that fund, regardless of any action of the Banking and Currency Committee, will be a usurpation by Secretary Morgenthau of the authority granted by Congress, and a breach of trust by him as trustee of the stabilization fund. If he wishes authority to loan money to China he should come to Congress and ask for such authority. The Banking and Currency Committee cannot speak for Congress.

In March 1939 Secretary Morgenthau came before the Banking and Currency Committee in support of a bill extending the operation of the stabilization fund. He described the functions of that fund, and obtained the approval of the committee on the basis of that description. The functions which he described did not include the making of loans directly or indirectly to any foreign nation.

I should like for a moment to read some of the testimony of Secretary Morgenthau at that time, because it shows what he said the purpose of the stabilization fund was. He stated:

The purpose of the fund is to stabilize the exchange value of the dollar.

So far as I can see, a loan to China will not stabilize the exchange value of the dollar. The Secretary continued:

In carrying out this purpose, the fund undertakes a variety of operations.

Sometimes it is called upon to prevent violent fluctuations in exchange rates induced by acute political developments which cause flights of capital from one country to another. Such, for example, was the situation created in the fall of last year when, as a consequence of the Czechoslovakian crisis, a large volume of funds sought to leave Europe for the United States. The outflow of funds was so large that the amount of gold which it was necessary to ship from Europe to provide dollar balances was far greater than could be taken care of through normal commercial channels. If there had been no stabilization fund to cooperate with the other funds, the dollar exchange would have fluctuated so violently as to disrupt our trade. International monetary chaos might have ensued.

The occasions which call for operations of the magnitude undertaken by our fund last fall are, however, sporadic. Normally the stabilization fund is concerned with hour-to-hour and day-to-day fluctuations in the dollar-exchange rate. When the exchange markets are quiet and there are no unusual disturbances, it is not necessary for the fund to take an active part in the market. At such times it operates in relatively small amounts and participates in a relatively small number of transactions each day, and may even not enter the market at all.

When, however, for one reason or another the operations in the various exchange markets become speculative or panicky in character, with abnormal fluctuations, then the stabilization fund steps into the market and becomes active in buying and selling gold and foreign exchange for the purpose of minimizing fluctuations.

That has been the purpose of the stabilization fund throughout its history.

Later I questioned the Secretary as to whether or not the fund might be used for the purpose of making loans to foreign nations, and I think the questioning at that time throws considerable light on the uses of the stabilization fund. I read from the testimony:

Senator TAFT. Mr. Secretary, you say that a billion eight hundred million has never been used but has been tied up in gold throughout the whole period of the life of the stabilization fund. Is there any reason why the stabilization fund should not be reduced to $200,000,000?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Well, the only reason why I do not think it should be is, first, that I think the very size of it is impressive.

I later asked:

What is the advantage of the other $1,800,000,000 that never has been used?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Well, the advantage is that it represents, as I say, the increment or profit. It has been there. The President has demonstrated that he does not have to use it. It serves notice on the world that we have a fund which is bigger than anybody else's, except England's, in case they should start.

I suppose with competitive devaluation of the currency.

Later I asked him:

Why can't that be done with $200,000,000 instead of $2,000,000,000? It always has been done, up to today?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Up until now it always has. There are two things: As I say, there is the psychological effect, which is there; and the other reason, which I feel very strongly on, is that the fund is there as reserve, so that when we do use it, it will be used to retire part of the outstanding debt.

That was the way the whole matter of the stabilization fund was presented to Congress. I asked the Secretary whether something of this nature might be done in the way of a loan to England. I suggested—

In effect, could you not create an English credit here of $2,000,000,000; and we would wake up, in the end, and find ourselves with $2,000,000,000 worth of pounds that were worth nothing? I am not asking whether you would do it. My question is whether that is not legally possible. Isn't that legally possible?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Well, if I lost all sense or reason in the performance of my duty, I might do a lot of things.

In other words, if he loses all sense or reason in the performance of his duty he might use this fund with which to make loans. That is what he has done; he has lost all sense or reason in the performance of his duty. I read further:

Senator TAFT. In other words, it is legally possible?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Well, a lot of things are legally possible, which you would not do under the rule of common sense.

Now he is proposing to proceed in violation of the rule of common sense.

During the debate a few days ago I believe reference was made to the fact that when I asked the Secretary a question, he said this:

If there is a war in any foreign country, before we would use the stabilization fund or any money in the Treasury to assist any country in prosecuting that war, I would come up before the committee and ask for guidance.

Senator TAFT. I have no doubt you would.

But I do not see how that could constitute any agreement on the part of the committee that if he comes up and asks for guidance the committee is going to confer upon him authority which is not contained in the act. I cannot see how this particular statement can be so construed. All I have to say is that the function of the Banking and Currency Committee is not to guide the Secretary of the Treasury, and it has not authority to authorize loans to China without action by the Congress itself.

I am more concerned about the action because after the hearing on Monday, the Secretary, according to the Washington Post, indicated "that under a new policy the Treasury's stabilization fund will become a diplomatic war chest to support the economies of friendly nations from China to Latin America." In other words, he seems to feel that his appearance before the Banking and Currency Committee and his explanation of the Chinese loan removes all further restrictions on the stabilization fund so that the whole $2,000,000,000 can be used to loan foreign countries. If he has legal authority to lend it to China, he has legal authority to lend it to England, or to France, or to any other belligerent in the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have heard much talk about two budgets, a defense budget and a nondefense budget. In which of those budgets does the Senator think such a loan as this would fall?

Mr. TAFT. I assume that it would go into a third budget, or a loan budget which does not count as a third or any other but which ultimately will produce the same result on the debt of the United States.

Mr. President, the question of loans to foreign countries is going to be before the Congress, and it may well be necessary to make such loans. Personally I approve the making of a loan to China, but it is a matter for Congress to decide and not something to be accomplished indirectly by the Secretary of the Treasury by abusing the powers which he claims to have over the stabilization fund.

RECONCENTRATION OR REWAREHOUSING OF COTTON

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there is on the clerk's desk a letter from Mr. Appleby, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, written to the Vice President of the United States, which I think should be in the RECORD, and as it is very short, I shall read it. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, December 4, 1940.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
United States Senate.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: In the absence of the Secretary of Agriculture I wish to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of Senate Resolution 337 requesting that the bids recently received by the Department for the storage of Government stocks of cotton not be immediately accepted.

You may be assured that in accordance with this request such bids will not be accepted until the Secretary of Agriculture has an opportunity to consider the request and to communicate with Members of the Senate.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL H. APPLEBY,
Acting Secretary.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, at a former session I submitted a resolution extending the time for filing the report of the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, and I asked to have the resolution lie on the table. I have been instructed by the committee to call up the resolution, if possible, at this time. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 336.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceed to consider the resolution.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, the resolution as offered calls for an extension of time for filing the report from the first day of the next session of Congress to the 20th of January. I ask permission to modify the resolution to extend the date to the 30th of January.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to make a modification, and the resolution will be modified as suggested.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I understand the extension is solely for the purpose of the making of the report.

Mr. GILLETTE. Solely for that purpose. There is no request for any additional money. As I explained a few days ago, many of the States require the filing of reports of election expenditures within 30 days after the date of holding the election, and the 30 days expire today, and we have not had the reports from all the States. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 212, agreed to February 9, 1940, authorizing a Special Committee to Investigate the Campaign Expenditures of Presidential, Vice-Presidential, and Senatorial Candidates in 1940, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the committee shall submit its final report, which shall not be later than January 30, 1941.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Boatswain William C. Hart to be a chief boatswain in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from December 1, 1940.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HERRING. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency I report favorably the nomination of Abner H. Ferguson, to be Federal Housing Administrator for the unexpired portion of a term of 4 years from June 30, 1938, vice Stewart McDonald, resigned, and as in executive session I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be now confirmed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let the nomination go to the calendar for one session.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senate is now meeting after 3-day recesses. Mr. Ferguson has been in the employ of the Federal Housing Administration for a long time. There is no opposition to his appointment to be Administrator that we have heard from any source. I hope the Senator from Michigan will allow his nomination to be confirmed at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I know of no opposition. The fact remains that I have had no opportunity to inquire into the matter, and I shall be prepared to deal with it conclusively when the Senate meets next Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The nomination will go to the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, with respect to the nomination of Mr. Ferguson to be Federal Housing Administrator, I wish to say that I was glad to hear that no opposition has developed to the nomination, and I hope that on Monday Mr. Ferguson's nomination may be confirmed. Mr. Ferguson has for a long time been employed by the Federal Housing Administration, and I believe he will make an excellent Administrator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may be permitted to do so, he will say that he shares the view expressed by the Senator from Tennessee.

POST-OFFICE NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report favorably several nominations of postmasters which have been approved by the Senators from the States involved. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations referred to may be confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and, as in executive session, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of the post-office nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

WORK PROJECTS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report favorably the nomination of Harry D. Williar, Jr., of Maryland, to be work-projects administrator for Maryland, effective December 1, 1940, and ask unanimous consent for immediate confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. MINTON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, December 9, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 5 (legislative day of November 19), 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thy word, O God, is with us: "Attend to know understanding; get wisdom and forget it not." We pray Thee, enable us to heed and clothe this divine injunction in the radiant vestments of gracious, consecrated activity, finding ourselves each step nearer the blessed ideal and nearer the deeper meaning of life's mission. Oh, let nothing come between us and the light; free all minds from prejudice, for only in the tolerance of others do we really live. Permit not that sad day to come when material achievement has outrun the unaging sanctities of the immortal soul; let it ever be the sanctuary of the spirit of the son of man. In these forbidding days, we beseech Thee; hold us to the realization that evil may be wrought by the lack of thought, thus marring the divinity within our own natures. We praise Thee for the Infinite One, whom we may ever approach, but never surpass—the dateless, timeless Christ who is the same yesterday, today, and forever. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, December 2, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 302. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pan American Cotton Congress;

S. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee; and

S. Con. Res. 56. Concurrent resolution authorizing the erection of an additional stand for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States, on January 20, 1941.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a short statement.

The membership will understand that I am in my eleventh month of this year in Washington. As we are not adjourning sine die and as it appears there will be little to do in the House until a message may be received from the President within a week or something like that, the Chair desires at this time to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] in order that he may offer a resolution to elect a Speaker pro tempore, in the absence of the Speaker, as I do desire just a few days of holiday between now and the beginning of what may be a long session in January.

I will probably be back before you will want to adjourn for the holidays, if you do.

I wish you all, as you go away, a pleasant trip home and that you will all be back in fine fettle in January. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 641

Resolved, That Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

Resolved, That the President and the Senate be notified by the Clerk of the election of Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK as Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table today I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the question of the reapportionment of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CROWE, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, since the effective date of Reorganization Plan No. IV, which provided for the abolition of the Air Safety Board and the transfer of the Civil Aeronautics Authority to the Department of Commerce, three major air-line disasters have occurred, air-line disasters in which the passenger fatalities have been something terrific. Prior to these important changes nearly a year and a half passed without a single passenger fatality on the air lines—a splendid record.

I am presenting a resolution to the House today which I wish I could offer for immediate consideration, calling for the appointment of a special investigating committee and its immediate investigation into the causes of these disasters and into any other questions that may relate thereto. As there are about 30 days before the convening of the next Congress, it seems to me that this committee could obtain in that time all the necessary information to present to the House in order to aid in stemming this tide of accidents.

The first of this series of accidents occurred at Lovettsville, Va., on August 31, 1940, when 25 lives were lost, the entire list of crew and passengers, including the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, our friend the Honorable Ernest Lundeen. This accident occurred in an electrical rain squall. The second disaster was that of an air liner which flew off course in a snowstorm in Utah on November 4, 1940, and piled up on a mountain top. Here 10 lives, the entire list of passengers and crew, were lost. The third occurred yesterday, December 4, 1940, as an air liner, which had been forced to circle the field at Chicago for 28 minutes because of traffic, and in conditions of ice and sleet, plummeted to the ground in landing. It fell perhaps 150 feet, but many lives have been lost and others hang in the balance of fate.

I beg your cooperation, Mr. Speaker, if it is within the province of the Speaker to do so, in order to aid in promoting this immediate investigation to help prevent such accidents and to determine the future course of civil aeronautics. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

AIRPORT FACILITIES AT CHICAGO

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been endeavoring to emphasize the need for improved aircraft facilities and additional landing fields in the Chicago area. Chicago is the hub of the Nation. It is the point where East meets West.

Nothing more graphically indicates the need for better aviation facilities in Chicago than the airplane crash reported in the press this morning. I find among the list of those killed and injured several of my personal acquaintances.

The major cause of this unfortunate accident was the fact that the United Airlines plane was unable to land when it reached the municipal airport. Mr. Harold Crary, vice president of the United Airlines, is quoted as saying:

> A light snow was falling when the plane arrived and it circled the airport for 28 minutes, waiting for the traffic-control department to give clearance into the airport.

Imagine a condition where a passenger plane must fly back and forth across an airport for approximately a half hour before it can land at its destination because of the heavy traffic at the landing field.

Congress has inaugurated a program for the development of airports in the United States. We have authorized an expenditure of $30,000,000 for this purpose. I have repeatedly emphasized the need for improved facilities in the Chicago area, and I sincerely hope that the Civil Aeronautics Authority will now recognize this need.

On a number of occasions during the last few years, both before my Committee on Naval Affairs and on the floor of the House, I have urged aircraft development. I have spoken not only of enlargement of our air-defense forces, but I have endeavored to emphasize the importance of creating underground hangars and the moving of airplane factories inland for defense purposes. I am one of those who has supported the program for enlarging existing airports and building new ones.

This airplane accident shows how great this need, is and it shows, beyond any doubt whatsoever, that new and improved airport facilities are needed in the Chicago area. I am quite unable to understand why new airports should be built in isolated spots, save perhaps for political purposes, when a great industrial and transportation center is without adequate facilities to meet present demands. It was the absence of adequate facilities which caused the crash last night and cost the lives of several of my personal acquaintances.

UNDER SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4370) authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

> Senate amendment: At the end of the matter inserted by the House amendment insert the following:
> "The compensation of the Assistant Secretary of War shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and it is not my purpose to object, the House about a year ago passed a bill covering the case of a doctor and his family who were injured by a drunken driver and a truck. A bill passed the House to give them some relief. It went to the Senate and was passed by the Senate. There was a conference report, which has been here a long time. We cannot get consideration of the conference report. There ought to be something done about matters like that. No one apparently is willing to call it up.

The SPEAKER. It has not been called to the attention of the Chair. Nobody has moved to take it up.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I understand that under the rules of the House nobody can bring it up except the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to call it up, it can be brought up.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I will do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman from Kentucky, if the chairman of the Claims Committee is not present, for a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the same matter that was brought up here the other day?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman know whether any other department or body of the Government has taken any action on the Smith amendments we sent over to the Senate a long time ago?

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not know what the other body is doing about the Smith amendments. This bill has nothing to do with that matter, however.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman think they ought to do something about them while we are waiting here?

Mr. COSTELLO. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman. It would be proper for them to take up and consider the Smith amendments.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman know of any way that we can get the Smith amendments considered over there?

Mr. COSTELLO. I am afraid that is rather difficult for us.

Mr. COOPER. Get yourself elected to the Senate.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is an impossible task, in view of the fact that the administration is spending so much money to elect people of its own political faith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, Col. Sumpter Smith, Air Corps, Alabama National Guard, and air officer of the Thirty-first National Guard Division, has just resigned his position as special airport adviser to the Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and as chairman of the Interdepartmental Engineering Commission for the Washington National Airport.

He has gone into the military service of the Nation to join the colors and take charge of the air service of his division.

The Washington National Airport is nearing completion. It will be open for landings within the next few days. It will go into full service next spring. It is said by competent authorities to be the finest air terminal in the United States. It has been built with remarkable expedition and economy. Colonel Smith was appointed, under the general supervision of the Administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, to coordinate the activities of the several governmental agencies engaged in the design and construction of the Washington National Airport and to exercise general supervision of design and construction. Therefore, to him must be paid a large part of the commendation due for this signal achievement.

Colonel Smith brought to bear upon this task, entrusted to him by the President of the United States, a skill and experience which belies his years. Although still a young man, with the enthusiasm of youth, he has participated as engineer in charge or consultant in design, construction, or improvement of more than 650 airports—probably the widest experience any man has ever had in such work.

His career as a builder of airports has reached its high-water mark in his work for the Washington National Airport. Its beauty and utility will soon be demonstrated. All honor to him, his superiors, and the cooperating agencies who have labored together in this achievement, in which there is glory enough for all.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement made by former President Hoover on the subject of America and the famine in the five little democracies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

Ther was no objection.

HJALMAR M. SEBY

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3729) for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby be taken from the Speaker's desk and given immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what the bill covers?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman this bill covers a claim by Mr. Hjalmar M. Seby, a contractor, of Abilene, Tex., against the Federal Government which was originally $31,000. It was in connection with the extension and remodeling of a United States post-office building at Vernon, Tex., for which Mr. Seby had been awarded a contract.

A difference between Mr. Seby and an agent of the United States Government. The agent claimed that Mr. Seby had violated the N. I. R. A. Code. As a result, an affidavit was made by the agent of the Federal Government, a warrant issued, and Mr. Seby was arrested. The Federal grand jury, however, upon hearing the evidence, refused to return an indictment against Mr. Seby. Finally, after being harrassed and annoyed by the agent of the Government, Mr. Seby's contract was canceled and his tools and equipment taken over by the Federal Government and never returned to him. The tools and equipment so taken being itemized and valued at $9,864 as shown by the committee's report accompanying this bill. Furthermore, Mr. Seby was entitled to $6,218.90 additional for work which he had completed under the contract and for which he had not been paid.

The bill, as I have heretofore stated, was originally for $31,000, and was reduced in the Senate to $14,369.61. There was a complete and exhaustive discussion and debate on the floor of the Senate concerning this measure and it was passed over there unanimously.

The bill was brought up last Monday, but was objected to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK], who has since studied the report and has authorized me over the telephone, just a few moments ago, to say to the Members of the House that it is a most meritorious bill and should pass. He further authorized me to say that he had no objection whatever and if it was agreeable to the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO], it was certainly agreeable with him that the bill be passed.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] is one of the official objectors on the Private Calendar, and he objected to the bill when it was called up last week. He stated at that time there was an adverse report from the Department, and that the bill was not meritorious. If he has investigated and finds he was in error, of course I would not want to object.

Mr. GARRETT. I give the gentleman my word that Mr. HANCOCK told me, not 5 minutes ago over the telephone, that whatever the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] agreed to was entirely agreeable with him.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, has this bill been on the Private Calendar for some time? Has it been before the House before?

Mr. GARRETT. Not a great while. It has been before the House before, on last Monday, as I indicated a moment ago. However, it has not been on the calendar very long for the reason that the Committee on Claims did not have many meetings after July, but they all favor this measure. In the absence of some five or six of the ranking members of the committee, I am bringing the bill up today. The members of the committee are heartily in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. REES of Kansas. It seems that there is quite an amount of money involved here. It does not seem to be proper procedure just to bring it up and pass it without having any particular discussion about it, and without knowing something about it.

Mr. GARRETT. I shall be glad to discuss and explain the bill in detail if the gentleman desires and if time will permit.

Mr. PITTENGER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that I have gone into this bill very carefully, although I have no personal interest in it whatever. I am a member of the committee. This was one of the last bills to come over from the Senate. Unfortunately, there was not a companion House bill. This accounts for the delay. I know of no more meritorious bill that has ever been before this body than this one. I am giving the gentleman my word for that, and I can stand here for 20 minutes demonstrating those facts.

Mr. GARRETT. May I say to the gentleman from Kansas that the beneficiary under this bill is an elderly gentleman, probably 61 years of age, and because of this injustice done him has been prevented from continuing his contracting business? He has not only been absolutely ruined financially but is broken both in spirit and in health. Furthermore, although this is not necessarily material to the bill under discussion, Mr. Seby is an ex-service man and was a commissioned officer in the first World War. He is highly recommended by dozens of the finest citizens and leading business concerns of Abilene, Tex., where he has been in the contracting business for many years.

Mr. REES of Kansas. How long has it been since this damage occurred?

Mr. GARRETT. It was about the year 1934, I believe.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Six years ago?

Mr. GARRETT. Something like that.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And this matter is just now brought before the Congress?

Mr. GARRETT. He has had the matter up with quite a few attorneys and there was some disagreement as to the procedure; they have disagreed on the procedure to follow.

For that reason it is barred by limitation from going into the Court of Claims. For that reason there is no other way for Mr. Seby to be reimbursed other than by a private bill. This is certainly a just claim, and I most sincerely hope that there will be no objection to the passage of this bill. I can vouch for that personally, because I have studied it for hours and hours. Incidentally, I am in possession of a letter from my predecessor to Mr. Seby in which he states that his claim for $31,000 is a just one and that he would introduce a bill in Congress to collect this amount for him as that was the only way in which it could be collected.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I do not want to be the only Member of the House to object to its consideration, but I just do not like this kind of procedure.

Mr. GARRETT. I may say to the gentleman that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] in objecting to the passage of the bill last Monday gave as his reason the fact that he had not had time to read the report. Since that time he has been furnished and has read the report and has also, I believe, read a brief on the case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $14,369.61 to Hjalmar M. Seby, general contractor, of Abilene, Tex., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages and losses sustained by him at the hands of representatives of the United States Government through (1) unjust cancelation of contract No. 4646, United States Government Form No. P. W. A. 51, for extension and remodeling United States post-office building, Vernon, Tex., known as Public Works Administration project No. 41; (2) failure of United States Government representatives to pay him for work done and materials furnished; (3) improper interference by United States Government representatives with him in the performance of his functions and duties as contractor under contract beforementioned; and (4) confiscation by United States Government representatives of materials and tools belonging to said Hjalmar M. Seby: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, after "him", strike out the remainder of line 8 and down through the word "for" in line 11, and insert "as the result of his entering into a Government contract, No. TLSA-4646, dated November 28, 1933, in connection with the."

Page 2, line 3, after "remodeling", insert "of."

Line 5, strike out the semicolon after "41" and down through the word "Seby" in line 12.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT-ELECT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 56

Resolved, by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in order to conform to the seating accommodations for the inaugural ceremonies in 1937, the Committee on Arrangements for the Inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the east plaza of the Capitol on January 20, 1941, be, and it is hereby, authorized to have erected, under the supervision of the Architect of the Capitol, an additional stand, the expenses of which shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I recall, when the matter of the expenses of the inaugural ceremonies was given consideration before the election, by the committees, first, by the Committee on Accounts, of which the gentleman from Missouri is a member, and later by the Committee on Appropriations, which appropriated the money, it was felt that in view of the conditions existing in the country, in view of the large Treasury deficit, and in view of the necessities of the Treasury, the amount involved should be reduced, and the committee did reduce slightly, the amount formerly appropriated for inaugural purposes. As I understand and recall, that action met with the hearty approbation of the press and the people of the country. In view of our financial condition, the people of the country do not expect a lavish and expensive inaugural ceremony in Washington this year.

As I recall, the amount of $35,000 was appropriated. This bill would increase the appropriation in order that additional seating capacity might be made available for the few who are successful in getting tickets from their Members of Congress and their Senators. I do not believe that it is good policy to authorize at this time the construction of 7,000 additional seats, the cost to be taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country, in order that a few more favored people in Washington may have grandstand seats during the inaugural ceremony. These seats will be used but a few minutes at most. Therefore why should the Government borrow the money to build them. There is no logical answer.

The gentleman from Missouri is always talking about economy. Here is a chance for a practical demonstration. When I know that he realizes the predicament the country is in, as far as national defense is concerned, it seems to me he should be the last man in the world to come here and ask for this money out of the Treasury in order that he, and I, possibly—if I am so fortunate—may get a few more reserved seat tickets to give to our constituents. The mass of the people will be standing. This should be a peoples' inauguration and no favorites should be played.

This is a small matter, of course, but we are only going to get anywhere with economy if we commence to whittle. Every dollar necessary for essentials, but not a dollar for luxuries. I should like to know the reasons the gentleman has for thinking that what I have said is not material and should not be observed.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Michigan is only in part correct. The Committee on Accounts did not consider this matter. The Committee on Appropriations did. It was later disclosed that due to the increased prices of materials, there will be approximately 4,500 seats less in front of the Capitol for the inauguration this year than there were previously, not only during the Roosevelt inaugurations but during the Hoover inauguration, the Coolidge inauguration, and the Harding inauguration.

As a result of this, it appears that the Members of Congress will receive under present arrangements four or possibly five tickets. I do not recall exactly the number of tickets they received in prior inaugurations, but I know the number I received was not in keeping with the demands, and now you have a situation where you are going to inaugurate a President for the first time in the history of the country for a third term, and there is more than the usual interest. I know there are going to be a large number of people from the gentleman's State who will want to see this inauguration. They will want to see the President sworn in. I do not know whether $7,000 is involved or $6,000, although I do not think it will cost more than $7,000, but $3,500 of that amount would come out of the contingent fund of the House, and $3,500 would come out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

I have discussed the matter with the ranking Republican member on the Committee on Accounts, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] who is present, and who is in favor of the concurrent resolution. At the gentleman from Michigan's suggestion I also discussed the matter with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

This, of course, is a matter for the House to decide. As far as I am concerned I will find a way to get along if I do not get any tickets, much as I would like a liberal supply, but you are inaugurating the President of the United States, and the question involved is whether you want your constituents and my constituents to have the same privilege from the standpoint of seating capacity at the inauguration in January that they had in 1937 and in 1933, and also at the time Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge were inaugurated.

Mr. MICHENER. Further reserving the right to object, conditions in the country are a little different right now. If the country is not actually in war it is perilously near war. The Congress has been scraping the bottom of the barrel to get funds for national defense. Times are different now. Every dollar the Congress spends it must borrow.

Mr. COCHRAN. They are not any worse now.

Mr. MICHENER. At the time Mr. Coolidge was inaugurated the country was prosperous, and we were reducing taxes, and had been reducing them throughout the Harding administration. There was a surplus in the Treasury and today there is a deficit. At the time Mr. Hoover was inaugurated the same condition existed. At the time Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated the first time there was a slight deficit. At the time Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated the second time there was an appalling deficit, and now we have the third term, which the gentleman suggests is unique, and should be given special attention. The deficit has climbed and climbed until now it is around $49,000,000,000, and nobody knows where the top of this deficit is going to be at the end of the third term. It seems to me that if we follow the program of the gentleman from Missouri, when the fourth term comes, where will it be? I do not agree with him that special rejoicing should be indulged in because of the breaking the third term principle. I am opposed to additional appropriations to spectacularize that occurrence.

Mr. COCHRAN. We might get all the way over to the Supreme Court and the Library for the fourth term [laughter], but right now I will tell the gentleman from Michigan that under the present arrangement you are not going to have sufficient space for the members of the House and Senate Press Galleries, who are entitled to enter the House and Senate Press Galleries, and they certainly should have seats at the inauguration.

Mr. MICHENER. Further reserving the right to object, of course the press should have ample seats. Those seats have already been provided for. For my part, instead of having 4 or 5 people from my district, I shall probably have 200 or 300, and I do not know that I am doing myself any good or anybody else any good in giving 4 of them seats while the other 296 who come down here for the inauguration are obliged to stand with the masses. I think it would be better if we did not have a single grandstand. The President should come up here in the spirit of humility and be sworn in without all this show and ostentation, without all this expense, without all this grandstand, without all this pomp and regal splendor, and without all this useless expenditure of money at a time when dollars are bigger than horse blankets to every man in America. Let us put the money in defense. The boys in the camps will not have such luxuries. This is still a democracy.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is no useless expenditure of money in arranging a proper setting for the inauguration of a President of the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has made a somewhat lengthy talk, one that is very sensible and very convincing. However, he seems not to have been able to convince himself to the point of being willing to object; but he has convinced me, and I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MICHENER. I wanted the gentleman to have an opportunity to make a speech.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

TEMPORARY NATIONAL ECONOMIC COMMITTEE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 306) extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 4 (c) of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to create a temporary national economic committee," approved June 16, 1938, the time for submitting the final report of such committee is hereby extended to April 3, 1941, and the unexpended balances of the appropriations made for such committee shall be available to it until such date for the purpose of making such report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is self-explanatory, I believe. It proposes an extension of the time allowed by the original resolution in which the Temporary National Economic Committee may make its report. The investigation authorized to be conducted by that committee has been completed, but due to the prolonged session and the general demand upon the time of Members, with which you are all familiar, the committee has not been able, and will not be able within the time allowed by the resolution, to make as helpful a report as it feels ought to be made.

This resolution calls for no additional expenditure. I am advised that the organization of the committee has been cut down to not more than 12 people. There is enough money that has already been allocated to this committee to carry forward the work of completing its report.

With the permission of the House, I would like to make this additional statement. This resolution has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, which had jurisdiction in the first instance with reference to the main resolution, and I believe was unanimously agreed to by the members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I just wanted to state that. There are some Members who have suggested to me that they were opposed to continuing this matter. I hope there will be no objection, because this committee at one time had on its pay roll 162 employees, as I recall, the largest-staffed investigating committee ever created and operating in the Congress. The number is now 12. It is just a question of ending the work of the committee and making the final report.

I think that should be done and I hope there will be no objection on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House resolution was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, assuming the House is in session, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the special orders entered for that day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HIGHWAY BRIDGE ACROSS WITHLACOOCHEE RIVER, GA. AND FLA.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4135) to legalize the construction by the State Highway Board of Georgia of a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this bill the approval of the minority members of the committee?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It has been reported unanimously by the committee of the House. This is a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Board of Georgia to complete construction, in accordance with plans accepted by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, of a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Withlacoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry, and to maintain and operate said bridge as a lawful structure subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER AT ASTORIA, OREG.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3765) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this bill the approval of the committee?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It has.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman state what the bill is?

Mr. CHAPMAN. This is a bill to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge which was authorized by the Congress in 1934, to be built by a joint board of the State of Washington and the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oregon, authorized to be built by the Oregon-Washington Bridge Board of Trustees by an act of Congress approved June 13, 1934, as amended, as heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved August 30, 1935, January 27, 1936, August 5, 1937, May 26, 1938, and August 5, 1939, are further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 13, 1940.

SEC. 2. That so much of section 4 of the act approved June 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 949, 950), which reads as follows: "or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. MARYS RIVER AT SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3934) authorizing the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River, from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is what is known as the Straits Bridge Commission?

Mr. CHAPMAN. That is right, I think.

Mr. MICHENER. I did not know it was coming up. The gentleman had not said anything about it. This bill would authorize the State of Michigan to build a 5-mile bridge across the straits. It would cost approximately twenty-six or twenty-seven million dollars. Practically every newspaper in Michigan south of Grand Rapids is bitterly opposed to it, as are the people of those communities. In the northern part of the State one or two districts are for it. Two or three of the Members from Michigan, however, have made a strenuous fight against this bill. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], one of those opponents.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not really fully understand the purpose of the bill, because it has not been explained. I supposed that this matter had passed the House, and I do not understand why it is back here.

Mr. CHAPMAN. This is a Senate bill, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, accompanied by the report of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The gentleman of course is thoroughly familiar with the bill, has discussed it many times. It would authorize the State of Michigan to construct a bridge or series of bridges or causeways across the St. Marys River.

Mr. MICHENER. Further reserving the right to object, if the gentleman has stated the title of the bill correctly I do not believe it is the bill we had in mind. Is this the Straits bill or some other bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It would authorize the construction of a toll bridge or series or bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto across the St. Marys River from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada.

Mr. MICHENER. This is another proposition entirely. I am not familiar with it. Do I understand it comes to the House with a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. CHAPMAN. It does.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman know of any Member of Congress from Michigan who opposes the bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I know the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] has opposed one bill, but I do not believe this is the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky that this is an entirely different proposition, located 75 miles from the Mackinac Straits bridge. This bill therefore has nothing to do with the so-called Straits bill.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I know the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] was opposed to the other bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that if he has any more of these bills he follow the custom, the practice, and the understanding in the House of consulting this side before he attempts to call them up by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, every custom and practice of this House has been followed in this instance. This is brought to the floor with the unanimous approval of the Members of both sides on the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. I might remind the gentleman that he has not conferred with anybody on this side of the House with reference to calling this bill up by unanimous consent, and that is the custom. To pass legislation by unanimous consent is a harsh method.

Mr. CHAPMAN. This is the last bill. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MICHENER. It places one in a rather peculiar position. Not knowing anything about the bill I do not want to be put in the position of objecting to a meritorious bill. If the gentleman will follow the usual custom in these matters then situations like this would not arise.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, regardless of the orders of the committee I should always consult the gentleman from Michigan in the future.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, or the successors to said authority, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River, so far as the United States has jurisdiction over the waters of such river, from a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan, to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada.

(b) There is hereby conferred upon the State of Michigan and the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, or the successors to said authority, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property in the State of Michigan needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations, or bridge authorities, or the State of Michigan, for bridge purposes in the State of Michigan, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

(c) The State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, or the successors to said authority, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, and the rates of toll shall be so fixed and adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 40 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls. An accurate record of the cost of such bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEATING AT THE INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request of a short while ago and now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 56.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 56

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in order to conform to the seating accommodations for the inaugural ceremonies in 1937 the Committee on Arrangements for the Inauguration of the President-Elect of the United States on the east plaza of the Capitol on January 20, 1941, be, and it is hereby, authorized to have erected, under the supervision of the Architect of the Capitol, an additional stand, the expenses of which shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas, who is a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations which considered the original item.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. And I happen to be the ranking minority member of the committee present, or I would not ask these questions. I think it is a little strange that this resolution was not brought up Monday when we had a majority of the members present. That was only 3 days ago.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that it was the intention of Senator NEELY, of West Virginia, to take care of this matter prior to the election. The Senator happened, however, to be a candidate for Governor of his State and was called home, and the matter was overlooked. There has just been a meeting of the committee with the committee that was appointed to handle the inaugural ceremonies by the President. After a thorough discussion of the matter the committee concluded that it was absolutely essential to increase the number of seats to make it conform to the number at the previous inaugurations.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That is not the point. The point is why it was not brought up last Monday or why it could not wait until next Monday.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know. The resolution just came over to the House a few moments ago. It was passed by the Senate this morning.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. In response to that I should like to ask some questions about this appropriation. Does the gentleman know what the expenditure is going to be for seating?

Mr. COCHRAN. No; I do not know what the expenditure will be for the entire seating, but I do know that more money will have to be provided in order to furnish the same number of seats that was furnished at previous inaugurations. As I said a moment ago, the committee has been required to reduce the number of seats even for the members of the press, and when I say the press, I mean only those entitled to entrance to the House Press Gallery and the Senate Press Gallery.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I understand that about $68,000 represents the estimated expenditure for seating. Am I correct in my understanding? Does the gentleman know what it will cost?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know exactly what it will cost but the appropriation so far has been $35,000, and with the additional $7,000 will be $42,000.

Remember a large amount is contributed by the people of the District of Columbia for general expenses, including seats along the line of march. There is always a deficit and it is the people of the District who absorb the deficit. There is a difference between the two. Congress controls the inauguration at the Capital and always has while the private inaugural committee take care of the rest.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Can the gentleman tell us what the total expenses of the inaugural are going to be?

Mr. COCHRAN. As far as the Congress is concerned, it is limited to the amount appropriated by the gentleman's committee, plus this amount. All other expenses are paid by the citizens of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. There are a lot of new activities that are new and different from what we have had before. For instance, Mr. Davies has designated a Miss Dorothy Thompson to sell the inaugural to the whole country, which is something new. Can the gentleman tell us what has been set aside as an expenditure to sell the inaugural to the whole country?

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman that I have never had the pleasure of meeting this distinguished columnist Miss Dorothy Thompson. I do not know what her idea is, or Mr. Davies' idea, but the Congress is not providing any money for this purpose nor does it always follow the ideas of columnists.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The chairman of the committee has designated her for a distinct function and I was wondering if they had set aside a certain amount of money for her.

Mr. COCHRAN. If they set any money aside for Miss Thompson it would come out of the money that the business people of the District of Columbia provide and not the money appropriated by the Congress.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I am sure it is the attitude of the Appropriations Committee that an adequate sum shall be allowed to do the job, but this inaugural should not be a gaudy affair.

Mr. COCHRAN. Of course, that is correct. I am sure the gentleman correctly states the attitude of his great committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] objected a minute ago.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is not now objecting.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the gentleman talked with him?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have talked with him.

Mr. MICHENER. He objected very vociferously a minute ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAN AMERICAN COTTON CONGRESS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Joint Resolution 302 for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 302

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested by proclamation or in such manner as he may deem proper to invite all foreign countries and nations to the Pan American Cotton Congress to be held at Memphis, Tenn., during the year 1941, with a request that they participate therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I stated to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], a minute ago that this was a minor matter and that I would not object, but it seems to me when the resolution is read it is a very important matter. In the first place, there has never been a resolution of this kind pass the Congress since I have been here that has not been followed by a request for an appropriation somewhere along the line. If we are going to invite the Pan American countries here to a celebration, we must properly receive them, we must make arrangements for them, and this cannot be done without expense.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that I have the assurance of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Senator MCKELLAR], who lives in Memphis, and others interested, that there is no expense involved to this Government. The local people are making all the arrangements. This is simply an invitation to the countries to participate with no expense involved to the Government.

Mr. MICHENER. I respect what the gentleman says, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has been here about as long as I have. We can remember that every world's fair and every celebration of any kind, name, or nature, where this country by proclamation has asked foreign countries to participate, has caused at a later date an appropriation to be made out of the Treasury of the United States. If the gentleman from Tennessee can name a single instance where that has not occurred, then I will hesitate to object to this matter.

Mr. KEFAUVER. May I say that I have the assurance of the senior Senator from Tennessee that no request for an appropriation will be made, so far as he is concerned.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but in the case of the New York World's Fair, New York Members gave their personal assurance; in the case of the World's Fair at Chicago the Members from Chicago gave us their personal assurance; and in the case of the World's Fair at Philadelphia the Members from Philadelphia gave us their assurance there would be no request for appropriations. But somebody else later on comes along and says, "We have invited all of these foreign countries. We have to treat them courteously, we have to remember that we are Americans, and we must in this case extend the hospitality for which the Old South is noted," and there will be an appropriation. In view of that I shall object for the present.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATRICK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made previously in the House and include certain brief quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

REAPPORTIONMENT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein the bill which I have introduced, and also a table showing the number of Representatives each State now has and the number that will be allotted to each State if the bill becomes law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if we are to retain democracy in this world it means that we are to perpetuate representative government. Democracy, as the English-speaking world knows it, is representative government.

It was built up first by the Whigs in England, and then perpetuated by all political parties in the United States that have yet come into power. It is very essential that the House of Representatives pass its own reapportionment laws and that those Representatives be apportioned as equitably as possible among the people of the various States, if our democracy is to endure.

As ranking Democrat on the Committee on the Census, I have today introduced a bill for the reapportionment of Congress, with a slight increase in the membership of the House.

It would increase the number of seats in the House of Representatives from 435 to 450, beginning with the Seventy-eight Congress which is to be elected in November 1942.

By an increase of but 15 seats in the House, and the use of the method of equal proportions, only two States, Oklahoma and Kansas, would lose a Representative. California would get 3 new Members in the House, and one new Member would be given to Alabama, Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin. The present number of seats would be retained by all the other States. Arkansas, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, and Ohio would not lose a Representative, as they would under an apportionment of only 435 Members by the method of major fractions.

My bill provides that the method of equal proportions shall be used, because this method, which has been developed since the method of major fractions in 1910, is recognized by scientific bodies as superior to other methods of apportionment, including the method of major fractions. In 1921 the Census Advisory Committee reported as follows:

The method of equal proportions, consistent as it is with the literal meaning of the words of the Constitution, is logically superior to the method of major fractions.

A report by the National Academy of Sciences prepared at the request of Speaker Longworth in 1929 concludes as follows:

The method of equal proportions is preferred by the committee because it satisfies the test (of proportionality) when applied either to the sizes of congressional districts or to numbers of Representatives per person, and because it occupies mathematically a neutral position with respect to emphasis on larger and smaller States.

The method of equal proportions equalizes as far as possible the congressional districts belonging to the several States, and also the individual shares belonging to the several States—that is, the number of Representatives per million people—inequalities being measured on the basis of relative differences. In fact, the method of equal proportions may be defined as the only method which will apportion a given number of Representatives among the several States, so that the ratios of population to Representatives, and also the ratios of Representatives to population, shall be as equal as may be among the several States. See Senate Document No. 304, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, especially chapter 1.

Sections 2 and 3 of the bill are intended to restore the statutory provisions for the election by States of Representatives at Large in the absence of adequate State legislation for this purpose. The passage of the automatic reapportionment provision in the Fifteenth Census Act, approved June 18, 1929, was held to repeal the Reapportionment Act of August 8, 1911, which, like previous apportionment acts, had made provision for the election of Representatives at Large (Wood v Broun, 287 U. S. 1). Some provisions for the election of Representatives at Large in the absence of State legislation on this subject is desirable, if not necessary.

These sections do not contain the questionable features of prior reapportionment acts requiring that Members of the House be elected from districts, and setting up unenforceable requirements as to compactness, contiguity, and equality in population in the districts.

The following table is self-explanatory; it shows the present number of Representatives from each State and the number each State will have if this bill becomes a law:

	Present number of Representatives	Proposed number of Representatives	Changes

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. As I recall, I had the pleasure of serving with the gentleman on the last Census Committee that put out the 1929 Census bill.

Mr. RANKIN. A great share of that pleasure was mine, I assure the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It was mutual, I am sure.

Is the gentleman contending that the present law does not provide for the election of Representatives at Large or is he reading the statement as an opinion?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I contend the present law does not provide for the election of Representatives at Large.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Did not many of the States after the 1929 Census Act elect Representatives at Large where the legislature had failed to act? Kentucky, Missouri, and several other States did so, as I recall.

Mr. RANKIN. I think the States had such legislation on their statute books.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The States individually?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; or else had legislation passed to provide for that very contingency.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, the bill which was passed and became law during the present Congress was enacted solely for the purpose of taking care of a situation where the Congress itself failed to perform its constitutional duty as it did after the 1920 census. Is not that true?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why not?

Mr. RANKIN. It was simply what some people said was our constitutional duty, but even that duty will be thoroughly performed if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. As I understand it, the matter of Representatives at Large is determined by whether a State wins or loses in representation and upon the further fact whether the State legislature in a given State acts or not.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. GEARHART. If a State gains and the legislature does not act, the additional members are elected at large automatically.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what this law provides.

Mr. GEARHART. And if a State loses and the State legislature refuses to enact a law, then all the Representatives of that State are elected at large and that is an automatic procedure.

Mr. RANKIN. There is some question about that, and for that reason I inserted this provision in this bill. I will say to the gentleman from California that under this bill his State would gain three additional Representatives.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I wonder if the gentleman intends to ask to suspend the rules and pass a bill at this session.

Mr. RANKIN. I hope to do so, and I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this bill makes the following changes: If we were to fail to reapportion Congress and the automatic reapportionment went into effect the States of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas would each lose a Member. The States of North Carolina, Tennessee, Florida, Michigan, New Mexico, Arizona, and Oregon would gain a Member, and the State of California would gain three. The other States would retain their present representations.

Under this bill Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, and Arkansas would all retain their present representations. Therefore it would not be necessary to tear up the Representatives from those States.

The States of Alabama, Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin, would gain one Member each, and the State of California would gain three. The only two States left that would lose would be Oklahoma and Kansas—States that have lost population as a result of being in the Dust Bowl. The House would have to be raised to 477 before that could be prevented; 476 for Kansas and 477 to take care of Oklahoma.

Mr. GEARHART. If you increase the membership to 450 in order to prevent all States except 2 from losing, why not raise it to a figure which would prevent any State from losing?

Mr. RANKIN. That question is as old as the Government and has been asked every time a measure has come before the Congress to reapportion the membership of the House. This is the smallest number—450—that will take care of all the States except these 2 that have lost population as a result of the Dust Bowl. I wish it were different. I should like to see every State retain its present membership and take care of the increase, and my opinion is that this figure of 450 will probably be the stabilizing point of the membership of this House and that in future years the population will become more stable and there will be very little change in the representation from the various States.

Let me say to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] that this proposition does not affect me personally. My State is not involved. Mississippi will not lose or gain if the membership remains at 435 or if we reapportion under this bill providing for 450.

Mr. GEARHART. If we reapportioned at 477, no States would lose.

Mr. RANKIN. That is true; several additional States would gain and I think probably my State would be one of them.

Mr. GEARHART. California would gain also.

Mr. RANKIN. Probably so, but I think California should be satisfied with a gain of three additional Members.

Mr. GEARHART. I think so, but we are thinking about our brothers in other States.

Mr. RANKIN. I wish it were possible to work out such a proposition. Of course, the membership of the House has the right to pass whatever legislation it pleases.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Of course, the speech the gentleman has made is one that was made in 1920 when he was here—not by him, but by all of us—and the one that was made in 1930. The fundamental thing is, Shall we increase the number of Members of Congress for the purpose of protecting the seats of certain Members now serving here? I said in 1920 and I said in 1930 and I repeat it now, and I think there are many others here who will vote to reduce the membership of the House to 300, because the work of the House is largely done by that number of men, and the weight of the vote of each State under the constitutional apportionment is exactly the same to the State, whether you have 300 or whether you have 3,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Now I will answer the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. In the first place, the gentleman is entirely wrong. The more you contract the membership of the House, the further you get away from representative government, the further you get from the people. When the Congress was first provided for by the wisest group of men whoever sat under one roof—the framers of the Constitution—they provided that no Member should represent less than 30,000 people. Today, under the last census, we represented 280,000 on the average. Under this bill the average would be 294,000, almost 10 times the number the fathers of the Constitution had in mind when they were bringing about on this continent representative government, which means democracy for America.

Another thing, when I came to the House of Representatives it is true the Republicans were in power. You had just had that glamorous inauguration of President Harding that I was going to speak about a moment ago. I believe it was about the most spectacular performance of its kind I ever saw. The Republicans were in power. I got very little mail from my district, but since that time the business of Congress has grown, the political intelligence of the Nation seems to have increased, and the business of the average Member has doubled many times. The people he represents have more matters, more propositions to take up with him, matters that he must give his individual attention if he is going to properly represent them. I do not see how a Member of Congress can properly represent more than 294,000, which would be the average for each district under this bill.

Now, we have the smallest legislative body in the world for any great country that has a legislature at all. The House is not crowded. We have ample room for the seating of 15 additional Members. We have ample office space. One floor of the New House Office Building has not been completed, I understand. There are a large number of offices in the old House Office Building. A new Member would not mind going to the fifth floor, I suppose. I stayed there for years and enjoyed it. But what I am trying to do now is to bring about a reapportionment of Congress that will come as near doing justice to all States as possible and at the same time hold the House down to a reasonable number of Representatives. I believe this bill will do that very thing.

I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. I believe the gentleman has already answered the question I intended to ask, which was concerning the space in the office buildings.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; we have ample space.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I have been very much interested in what the gentleman has said on this reapportionment proposition. In conversation with my colleagues I find that under the gentleman's proposition there is only one State that will actually be disturbed, and that is the State of Kansas. In Oklahoma they have a Congressman at Large. So they will just do away with him, and there is really only one State involved in this matter, and that is the State of Kansas.

Mr. RANKIN. There is only one State that would have to be redistricted.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I heartily agree with what the gentleman said about not making congressional districts include more people. I believe at present it is possible for a Member who tries his best to do it, to maintain very close relationship with a considerable number of people in his district. That means that he can be independent to a large extent in his relationship with those people. If the district were much larger it could not be done. I think, with the gentleman, that that is a very important element in democratic government.

Mr. RANKIN. Now let me say to the membership of the House, in conclusion, that you are the only ones on the Federal pay roll who cannot get there except by a vote of the people in your districts. A man may go from the Vice-Presidency to the Presidency. He may go from the Cabinet to the Presidency. A Senator may be appointed by the Governor of his State; all other Federal employees are appointed; but there is only one way a person can get in this House, and that is by a vote of a majority of the people of his district who go to the polls and express their suffrage in his favor.

That is representative government; that is democracy as the English-speaking nations of the world know it. It is the only kind of democracy that can survive.

If we would maintain democracy in America we must maintain a representative government, and the closer that representation stays to the people back at home the more representative it is going to be and the longer our institutions will live.

You can pile up bureaucracy all you want to; you can increase expenditures; you can delegate your authority; but if you are going to keep alive that democracy for which the world is pleading, and to which civilization is now looking, it is going to be done only by maintaining representative government, keeping it close to the people, and having those representatives exercise the prerogatives vested in them by the Constitution of the United States and by the people who send them here. For these reasons I prefer to see the House pass a measure of this kind and reapportion its own membership.

So far as increasing the House membership from 435 to 450, a slight difference of 15 Members, I say it is amply justified under the circumstances. I trust the committee will report the measure out and that we can get it passed at an early date.

There are some legislatures that meet within the next few days, around the 1st of January. Some of them have a 60-day limit, so I am told. I do not know when they will meet again. It seems to me, therefore, that if we are going to pass any legislation to take care of this situation we ought to do it as quickly as possible. [Applause.]

For the benefit of the Members I am inserting a copy of the bill at this point. It reads as follows:

A bill to provide for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Sixteenth Census

Be it enacted, etc., That in the Seventy-eighth and subsequent Congresses the House of Representatives shall be composed of 450 Members, which shall be apportioned by the method of equal proportions among the several States according to the population thereof as determined by the sixteenth decennial census.

SEC. 2. In case of an increase in the number of Representatives in any State under any apportionment, such additional Representative or Representatives shall be elected by the State at large and the other Representatives by the districts then prescribed by law until such State shall be redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof; if there be no change in the number of Representatives from a State, the Representatives thereof shall be elected from the districts then prescribed by law until such State shall be redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof; and if there be a decrease in the number of Representatives from a State, the Representatives thereof shall be elected by the State at large until such State shall be redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof.

SEC. 3. The candidates for Representative or Representatives to be elected at large in any State shall be nominated in the same manner as candidates for Governor, unless otherwise provided by the laws of such State.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] may have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by Mr. Stanley A. Bevin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from a Washington newspaper entitled "Alter Ego to the F. B. I."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] at Fairfax Courthouse, Va., on July 1, 1940, at the unveiling of a tablet containing the names of the Confederate soldiers from Fairfax County, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] is recognized.

CRIMINAL ALIENS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, last Monday, December 2, I spoke before the House on subversive activities. In this speech I had some things to say about Mme. Perkins, the Secretary of Labor, and the Attorney General, particularly with reference to the lack of action on deporting undesirable aliens, such as Harry Bridges and some 800 others, and particularly about the cancelation of the citizenship papers of one Fritz Kuhn.

I note in the RECORD, on page 13825, my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has some comments on my speech. I will take these in the order of their sequence. He said that I had failed to advise the House that these matters had been investigated by the Attorney General and Department of Justice and that the Department of Justice had rendered a report to the Attorney General, who, he was sure, was giving the matter "careful study and consideration." If the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] had paid attention to my speech he would have found therein where I said that we have been given the same answers as he gives here, namely, that "careful study and consideration" was being given the matter. That was the substance of my criticism of both the Attorney General and Mme. Perkins. That was as far as any of these things have ever got—that we were always advised that "careful study and consideration" was being given these matters, but we never have been advised of any prosecutions nor convictions of these criminals. That is the reason that I demanded action from the Attorney General other than verbal action, the only thing we have ever had.

With further reference to this same comment—and I think it was a matter of common knowledge; certainly every Congressman should be cognizant of the things going on in Government—that the F. B. I. has made this report and the Attorney General says it will have to be "studied carefully" for 2 months. This is good conversation, but I submit to you, What can these subversive interests do to our national-defense program in 2 months? We have the heads of our defense program now drawing our attention to lost time, and an editorial, which was a very good one, in the Washington Post says that our "yesterdays" can never be recovered. I think this is a true statement, and I think also that the destruction these subversive interests are now carrying on can never be repaired.

With further reference to the fact that this is under investigation, I will call my distinguished colleague's attention to the fact that I have talked on this for practically 2 years, as every Member of the House knows, and during those 2 years there has been nothing but investigation. I ask my distinguished colleague if he knows that Harry Bridges was never tried before any duly appointed and qualified Federal judge, or any other elected judge, but that he did have a hearing before Dean Landis, who is not a judge and does not bear the title of judge, and that, in my opinion, the department that handled this matter was actually afraid to have it come before the Federal judge in San Francisco on account of this judge's record of having deported aliens under similar conditions, and that they did not want Bridges deported. It is my further opinion that the Department went to great lengths to place this case in a jurisdiction where they knew that Harry Bridges would be defended and not prosecuted; that this hearing before Landis was nothing more than a farce and a whitewash; and I call his attention to the Landis report and the practical confession that Harry Bridges made therein.

I also draw my distinguished colleague's attention to the fact that there is always a certain group who are coming to the aid and assistance of these subversive interests, who are always giving us these words, "Careful study and consideration is being given to the matter." They defend them on technicalities. They say there are other means of handling the situation and make technical objections; but after they have stopped the deportations of the criminals and subversive interests, they never come forward and follow through to see that they are deported. I ask my distinguished colleague from New York if he is now coming to the defense of Fritz Kuhn. If he heard my speech, he certainly knows that I stated that the Department had 54 precedents for canceling Kuhn's citizenship, after which they could then proceed with his deportation. Is this gentleman against any such procedure? For this gentleman's information, I have been after this Department for several months and cannot get any action. If the gentleman will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he will see wherein I filed my letter asking the cancelation of citizenship papers of Fritz Kuhn. I ask this same gentleman why we should not criticize any official who we think is not doing his duty. I ask him if this country has become so nazified that he thinks that Congressmen are nothing but pawns and should not criticize these bureaucrats.

He says, "it is pathetic to see any Member attack any department head." My answer is that it is pathetic to think that a Congressman has any such concept of his duty as to make that statement. My idea is that Congressmen are sent to the Congress of the United States to represent their people, and when any department head, in any party, fails to do his duty it should be brought to the attention of the Congressmen, and if that failure continues I again make the statement that the official should have to resign, be discharged, or be impeached. I certainly cannot yield to any such concept as this, as it does not coincide with my idea of what constitutes American representation and the duties of a Representative.

Would this gentleman from New York have us sit silently and idly by while this subversive program of destruction is going on?

Does this gentleman from New York defend Harry Bridges, Fritz Kuhn, C. I. O., these Communists, these Nazis and Fascisti, whom I am fighting? If his answer is "No," I again say that it appears to me that criticism of officials who fail to do their duty is entirely proper, and I say to him that it is pathetic to me to see any Member defend these people, directly or indirectly, or defend the officials who in turn are defending them.

With reference to Mme. Perkins, wherein he states that she has failed to do this, that, or the other, but that she did the job in the best way the law would give her the right to do, he also states that you cannot deport a criminal unless there is a place to send him to. This is nothing more than drawing a herring across the trail. My opinion is that Mme. Perkins has been the worst failure in history of any Cabinet officer. Meeting the criticism of the gentleman from New York fairly, I will say that his answer does not hold water, because Harry Bridges could and should be deported to Australia. Secondly, Fritz Kuhn's citizenship paper can be canceled and he can be sent to Germany. My colleague must certainly know that there is still a Germany and there is still an Australia, and that he, or none of our officials, can hide behind that general statement in the face of the facts, namely, that there still is an Australia and there still is a Germany. Neither can he hide behind the fact that where these criminals—and I use the word as used by my colleague—are found to be criminals, they certainly should be confined either in prisons, immigration stations, or concentration camps. These institutions have not been wiped out by the Treaty of Versailles, and to have him make the statement that Mme. Perkins could not do anything under these conditions and the criticisms against her were unjustified, appears to me to be juvenile and worse than no statement at all.

In the last paragraph my colleague says:

> The criticism of any head of a department is unfair at this time, when we are trying to work together for national defense, irrespective of political beliefs or affiliations.

This is rather an astute statement, but, reduced to plain English, I say that I agree with him that we should stand together for the protection of this country; but the thing that I am criticizing is the protection that these saboteurs and criminals are getting, whose object is to destroy our defense program, and that is exactly what these people whom the Department of Justice and Mme. Perkins have protected are trying to do. My colleague is not consistent, because it is not consistent to protect these criminals and—I use his own words—allow them to run at large, carry on their program, and then say we are defending the country.

I notice he says that "the Department has done the very thing it was supposed to do." My answer to that is this: Supposed to do by whom? By the Communists, the Nazis, the Fascisti, saboteurs, and criminals? Or is their duty to the people who have the welfare of this country at heart? By my colleague's own statement, on page 13825, he says you cannot "deport even the worst criminal unless there is a place to send him to." Are the heads of our departments, namely, Mme. Perkins and Attorney General Jackson, unaware that there are prisons and places to put criminals? Or specifically, in Bridges' and Kuhn's cases, Australia and Germany?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point for a question?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Cannot a criminal be sent to jail if he happens to be an alien?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. If he has committed a crime, yes; by a court of competent jurisdiction, and if our Attorney General wants to carry out the law.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the Attorney General have the right to refuse to try a case because the man accused does not have a country to go to?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. His thought was that the country had been wiped out; but Australia and Germany had not been wiped out. Either one of these men could be sent back to the country from which he came.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not our courts have jurisdiction over alien criminals to send them to State prisons or to the Federal penitentiary?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. In ordinary cases they do, but in this case this man was not tried by a court, was not tried by a judge; he was tried by a university professor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If, as the gentleman from New York said, these men are criminals, I would like to know the reason why they cannot be sent where they belong, either to State prisons or the Federal penitentiary.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. They should be sent to prison. Bridges can be held for a felony right now, perjury.

Why should a Member of Congress have to tell the Attorney General that there is a prison to which to send these people, a concentration camp, back to Australia, or back to Germany? I again criticize this official, if that is my colleague's defense of him, and say that this official should at least know that.

This whole procedure, as has been indulged in in the past, appears to me to parallel that type of procedure in some of the larger cities where the gangsters are said to have received their protection.

I again criticize Mme. Perkins and Attorney General Jackson in that they have given explanations that are as full of as many holes as my colleague's criticism is.

When I offered a general bill before the Immigration and Naturalization Committee my colleague from New York said it would be impossible of interpretation, that is, that part of the bill that said when these subversive interests gave aid to Communists, Nazis, and Fascisti, helped, aided, abetted, and so forth, that that language was impossible of interpretation. My answer to him was that the language was parallel to the language used in our criminal codes, which has successfully been used by all the courts for 150 years, namely, that the judges and juries in this country have always been able to determine what an accessory or an accomplice to murder was.

I can only say that my colleague certainly has courage to defend either Mme. Perkins or Attorney General Jackson for lack of action and nonperformance of duty in connection with the deportation of Harry Bridges and the cancelation of Fritz Kuhn's citizenship.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. On Monday of this week, the last time the House was in session, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] stated in answer to a question which I asked that he had not criticized the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] or his committee. Does the gentleman know anything about the accuracy of that statement?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Yes; I know the answer he gave.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What was the answer he gave to my question? The answer that appears in the RECORD was not the answer recorded by the stenographer. As it appeared in the RECORD it did not seem to me to be the one that was made on the floor.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. His original answer was, "No; I have not."

The corrected answer has been changed entirely, in substance to read: "Not until recently."

Mr. HOFFMAN. What was the question?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. The question was: "You say you have not opposed the Dies committee or criticized the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES?"

Mr. HOFFMAN. And what was his answer then?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. His original answer was: "No; I have not."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Has the gentleman looked at the RECORD to see whether that appears on the RECORD?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Yes; the RECORD is in accordance with the corrected statement, not the original statement.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday at the conclusion of other special orders heretofore made I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure, a privilege to speak before the House when so many of the Representatives from the great State of Pennsylvania are present as they usually are. [Applause.] They have been extremely faithful in attending the sessions of the House while so many on the majority side are absent day after day.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. Is the gentleman going through all the States?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I think not. I might call attention to the fact, however, that before we recessed there was more or less hysteria about a war somewhere, about the necessity for appropriating billions of dollars for national defense and about the dangers that we were incurring by our failure to at once adopt the conscription law.

Let us consider the statements of the President and some of his supporters. Many people got the idea from their statements that we were going to be invaded at once. It was on the 20th of May last that the President, by his statements indicating that there was danger of an immediate invasion from Germany, that many of the cities of the interior might be blown to dust by German bombers, threw the whole country into hysterics.

I notice, however, that now that the election is over, and although the President for the purposes of the campaign frequently made the statement that he could not be absent from Washington, that he must remain near enough to the Nation's Capital so that he could get back within 12 hours, the danger now appears to have been dissipated by the lapse of time or, perhaps more correctly, by the success of the drive for a third term, and he now finds time, notwithstanding the war is still going on, to take about a 10-day fishing trip.

As on another occasion when he had satisfied his penchant for theatrics by shouting "fire, fire," and calling Congress in special session, at a cost of half a million dollars, he, figuratively speaking, now tucks his tongue in his cheek and goes off on a vacation. It is to be hoped on this one he will not, as he did on a prior occasion, see a mythical submarine. If his ego demands publicity, however, we shall undoubtedly get news reports over the radio that a mysterious submarine, perhaps a sister ship to that one which did not appear off Newfoundland but about which he told us, has been seen in the vicinity of the Presidential fishing cruiser.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. The gentleman mentioned about certain Members being present from Pennsylvania. There are more present besides Members from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, yes; the gentleman is always present, and the seats on the minority, the Republican, side are apparently well filled.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I may say that the Republican Members from Pennsylvania are present.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I noticed that the Republican Members from Pennsylvania were present and referred to the fact.

DEMOCRACY, LIKE CHARITY, SHOULD BEGIN AT HOME
